Mrs. Albert Cotsworth, Jr., President of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary, represents that organization among the incorporators. Mrs. H. L. Kretschmer, President of the Church Home; Mrs. Langdon Pearse, President of the House of Happiness, and Mrs. John King, President of the G. F. S., are other women among the incorporators. The Fund has engaged the firm of Gates and Stone of New York, to prosecute the million dollar campaign.

Shrine for Dr. G. H. Thomas.

The late Dr. George H. Thomas, rector of St. Paul's Church for twenty years, will remain always with his parish. Announcement that the vestry had voted in favor of final burial of Dr. Thomas beneath the altar at St. Paul's and Mrs. Thomas' subsequent approval, was made following the funeral service on March 2.

St. Paul's was filled to capacity for the service. Taking part were: Bishop Page of Detroit, former rector of St. Paul's; Bishop Stewart; the Rev. Dr. Frederick C. Grant of Seabury-Western Seminary, and the Rev. Donald W. Crawford, assistant. All three choirs of St. Paul's participated in the service and six former assistants to Dr. Thomas acted as pallbearers. They were: the Rev. Messrs. R. B. Grobb, Otis Jackson, Frank R. Myers, Thomas Bellringer, Charles Williams and Charles L. Street.

Bishop Stewart gave a short eulogy of Dr. Thomas, paying high tribute to his place in the life of the Diocese of Chicago, and the communities of Hyde Park and Kenwood.

Tell of Virginia Mountain Work.

The story of how the Church has played an important part in the advancement of Virginia Mountain folk was told by the Ven. W. Roy Mason of Charlottesville, Archdeacon of Mountain Work, before the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary in session Thursday.

To these mountaineers the Church has taken not alone the Gospel, but modern medicine, hygiene, schools and training in useful trades. He told of the preventorium for the treatment of children; of the industrial school, and of the work of some thirty-seven lay members of his staff and twelve priests. Back into the deepest recesses of the mountain section, the Church has gone through this work, said Archdeacon Mason, and the effect has been in many instances to change the complete mode of life of a once primitive people.

Archdeacon Mason spoke in La-Grange, Oak Park, the Church of the Redeemer and Church of Our Saviour, while in the city.

Dr. Wei Visitor to Sewanee.

An interesting and distinguished visitor at Sewanee recently was Dr. Francis Cho Min Wei, president of Central China College, Wuchang, who addressed the students of the University in All Saints' Chapel in the morning and the students of the theological school in the evening.

Dr. Wei, one of the most accomplished of Chinese men of letters, holds an honorary degree or doctor of civil law from the University of the South, conferred in 1927. He is an intimate friend of Dr. Charles L. Wells, dean of the theological school; this is his first visit to the university.

He has been away from Central China College for more than six months, visiting in England and the United States. During his talks here he told of the development of the college from the neucleus of Boone College, together with the schools of the Yale Mission, the Methodist Church, the Reformed Lutheran Church, and the London China Mission, and of the high standards of scholarship maintained there by the faculty. He was dean of Boone College at the time Dr. Wells taught there in 1925-26.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Who Can Match This Record?

Mrs. Georgia Caroline Cole was born in Savannah, Ga., in 1833. At the age of eleven, she moved to Marietta, Ga., and for seventy-six years played the organ at St. James' Church. In that time she played at hundreds of weddings and many of her grandchildren have kept step with the march from Lohengrin or the strains of Mendellsohn's Recessional.

Her long service of love and devotion manifested to a younger generation, that faithful service is the outgrowth of deep and abiding faith.

Only American Nurse in Hospital.

Miss Louise Anne Goldthorpe, a member of St. Luke's Church, Atlanta, and for the past several years a nurse on the staff of St. Luke's Hospital, Manila, Philippine Islands, has been transferred to Brent Hospital at Zamboanga, on Mindanao of the Philippine Islands. Miss Goldthorpe will be the only American nurse in the hospital, the others being Filipino or Moro nurses. Her work will be chiefly among the Moros, who, for the most part, are Mohammedans.

Before going to the Philippines, Miss Goldthorpe was the nurse in charge of the Good Samaritan Clinic in Atlanta.

Mr. Miller Visitor to Atlanta.

Spencer Miller, Jr., consultant on industrial relations for the Department of Social Service of the National Council, was in Atlanta over the week-end of March 15. Mr. Miller was one of the speakers on the program of the Labor Institute held in Atlanta.

On Sunday, March 17, Mr. Miller spoke at All Saints Church, of which Dr. W. W. Memminger, D. D., is rector, on the subject, "The Church and Industry".

Seven Bishops of the Province Lenten Preachers.

Lenten Noonday services in Jacksonville, this year provide for daily services in St. John's Parish, from noon to 12:30, with a succession of prominent Bishops of the Province of Sewanee as the preachers.

The Rev. Newton Middleton and the Rev. Ambler M. Blackford, the clergy of the parish, together with the Bishop of the diocese and the Jacksonville clericus, are in charge of these services, and it is understood that each congregation in the city has been urged to attend these united services. To this end, there will be fewer Lenten services in the local churches.

On Tuesday nights, all of the congregations of the city will worship together, as heretofore, the services rotating between the six parishes. The visiting Bishop of the week will also be the speaker at this evening service.

The following Bishops have already accepted Bishop Juhan's invitation and will visit and preach in Jacksonville in the order named: Bishop Juhan will himself close the series in Holy Week—Bishop Mikell of Atlanta, Bishop James M. Maxon, Bishop Coadjutor of Tennessee; Bishop Morris of Louisiana; Bishop Wing of South Florida; Bishop Finlay of Upper South Carolina; Bishop Gribbin of Western North Carolina; Bishop Abbott of Lexington.

Florida Chain of Missionary Assemblies.

Dr. T. Z. Koo, eminent Chinese Christian scholar, addressed a large congregation of Jacksonville Churchmen, in the First Presbyterian Church recently. He was the advance speaker of the Florida Chain of Missionary Asemblies, a movement of dynamic spiritual appeal, which the Christian forces of Florida present each winter to the residents of the state and to the thousands of tourists which throng her borders.

"China in the Remaking" was the theme of Dr. Koo's address: "To show the actual processes at work in China which are changing the life and thought of the Chinese people," said the speaker, "we must consider the political life, the educational, economic, social and religious changes that are taking place."

"In the political life, the two main processes are seen in the changing thought of the Chinese people regarding politics and government. The second process is the one that affects the political structures of the country."

"In education, we can see a rapid increase in the number of children now in schools, an equalization of educational opportunities for both boys and girls, and the development of physical training."

"The development of modern systems of communication, and the introduction of innovations in banking are two of the processes at work in the economic life of China, according to the Oriental Scholar. The changing economic aspects are visible also in the rapid rise of modern industries, he said.

Family structures are being affected by the new conditions in China viewed from a social viewpoint. Another evidence of changing social foundations may be found in the present-day life of the women.

Concluding, the celebrated Chinese declared that "China in the religious sphere is an interesting process of synthesis and challenge." Dr. Koo attributes such changes to be due to the introduction of Christianity into the religious background of his native land.

Mr. T. Z. Koo, Ph. D., is known to thousands of Americans as one of the ablest and most interesting Orientals who have come to this country. It is said that the Archbishop of Canterbury acknowledges him as "probably the most outstanding Oriental in the world today." He is a graduate of St. John's University, Shanghai, and he has held many positions of leadership as the representative of the Chinese people in world affairs.

The Florida Chain of Missionary Assemblies makes a unique contribution each year to the cause of "The Christian Will to Fellowship." For five weeks during January and February, it brings to some sixteen cities of the state World Ambassadors from China, Japan, India, Europe, Africa, Latin America, the Islands of the Sea and the United States. These men and women present a united front for the claims of Christ. They speak daily to local church, school, college and civic groups and their coming is heralded as a magnificent venture in faith, a dynamic force filled with spiritual power.

Retreat for Clergy.

The Rev. Malcolm S. Taylor, Director of the National Commission on Evangelism, spent three days in the diocese, holding a conference and Retreat for the clergy, under the auspices of the Diocesan Commission on Evangelism, the Rev. Basil M. Walton, of St. Andrew's Parish, Jacksonville, chairman.

The Rev. Mr. Walton and Bishop Juhan invited all of the diocesan clergy to meet with them and the Rev. Mr. Taylor, in Federal Point, some sixty miles from Jacksonville. An informal conference was the order of the first day; the following were devoted to a Retreat. Some twenty clergy availed themselves of this invitation and gathered in rural Federal Point. Daily celebrations of the Holy Communion took place in St. Paul's Chapel, while the meetings were held in the Commodore Hotel, which also housed the Bishop and his clergy.

Altered Form of Diocesan Record.

The Diocesan Record, for many years the official organ of the Diocese of Rhode Island, has been altered in form and content to conform to the modern method of putting out religious news in condensed form. More items in a smaller space and more readable interest are the aims. To increase circulation, Bishop Bennett and the Department of Publicity, of which the Rev. John B. Lyte, rector of All Saints' Memorial Church, Providence, is chairman, have asked every rector to appoint a representative in his parish to call the attention of all parishioners to this need. The Department aims to place the Record eventually in every household in the Diocese. The project has the full approval of Bishop Perry.

Taking a Poll.

Grace Church, Providence, is always conducting a questionnaire or taking a poll on something or other. And it is astonishing what interesting and instructive results are often obtained. A poll on the relative merits of Lenten preachers gave Bishop Bennett the election by a vote of nearly two to one over Dr. MacColl, of Philadelphia, his nearest competitor.

The Most Valuable Lenten Lecture Yet Given.

The Rev. Floyd Van Keuren, executive secretary of the Social Service Department of the Diocese of New York, talked on how to train candidates for marriage, at the first Lenten lecture of the Diocesan Department of the series of Monday afternoon Lenten lectures held at St Stephen's Guild Hall, Providence. Of special import to clergy, the lecture was helpful also to social workers.

Mr. Van Keuren always sees the prospective bride and groom together, and whenever possible gives them anywhere from two to three hours of his time. Through tactful questions he starts the couple talking about their plans, also about their physical health, their temperaments and the problems of mutual adjustments, not forgetting their attitude toward their parents and their parents' attitude toward them.

"The true joy of marriage," he said, "consists in the glory of self-sacrifice. And yet in spite of all that can be done there will be times when husband and wife will be very provoked with each other. The purpose of marriage is to grow together. Galsworthy's idea was, 'the twain shall be one spirit' . . . There is need of working, praying and worshipping together. There should be one body, one home, one church.

"Before the couple leave all three of us kneel and pray before the altar. Then I leave them to pray together, with the thought that the builder and maker of this new home should be God."

At the close of the meeting the clergy conferred again with the speaker. After it was all over one parson appraised it as the most valuable Lenten lecture yet given by the department.

Boys Give Radio to "Mendicant Friar."

In token of their interest in his work, the boys of the Western Reserve Academy. Hudson, Ohio, have given the Rev. Welles M. Partridge, the "mendicant friar," a fine Philco radio for his car. Fr. Partridge expects this to be a great joy and satisfaction to him when traveling through the great desert places as well as to give a lot of pleasure to other people on his journeys.

Fr. Partridge talked about his experiences to the boys at this school last fall on his way South, and, after he left, they wrote him that they were giving him the radio.

Fr. Partridge is now on his way to Southern Florida, where he is planning to stay a short time among the Seminole Indians. Deaconess Bedell is the only regular representative of the Church working with them and he hopes to be able to help her and them. He has asked that the notice of the radio be put in the Church papers, so that the boys who gave it may see it and be pleased.

1935 Round Table Fellowship Theme "A New Day.

Following a custom established fourteen years ago, the diocese will again sponsor a Round Table Fellowship to meet each week during Lent. The 1935 Fellowship opened on Monday evening, March 11, at the Detroit Central Y. W. C. A. building, and will continue each Monday evening until April 8. Originally undertaken by the Diocesan Church Club as a study group for men, the Round Table was later taken over by the Department of Religious Education and expanded to include women; while planned especially for Episcopalians, those of other denominations are welcome, and last year 325 persons enrolled.

The general theme of the 1935 Round Table Fellowship is "A New Day." Each session will begin with "Quiet Moments in the Chapel," at 5:30, a devotional period to be led by the following clergymen on successive evenings: Rev. W. L. Forsyth, rector of St. James, Birmingham; Rev. Benedict Williams, rector of Trinity Church; Rev. Clark L. Attridge, rector of St. Matthias' Church; Rev. Otey R. Berkeley, rector of St. Columba's Church, and Rev. R. E. Charles, rector of Epiphany Church.

Dinner is served at 6:10, following which, from 6:40 to 7:15, there will be an after-dinner address. On the opening evening, musical selections were provided by the Cathedral Singers, and the address was made by the Rev. Irwin C. Johnson, rector of St. John's Church, Detroit, and Chairman of the Round Table Felowship. Future speakers include the Rev. Justin Wroe Nixon, D. D., of the Brick Presbyterian Church, Rochester, N. Y.; the Rev. Albert W. Beaven, D. D., of the Colegate-Rochester Theological Seminary, Rochester, N. Y.; the Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop of Chicago, and the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of Michigan, in the order named.

Two class periods are held, from 7:30 to 8:20 and from 8:30 to 9:20, respectively, in each of which two courses are offered. The first period, a course on "Current Trends," led by the Rev. Hedley G. Stacey, and taking the form of a symposium, with the following topics being discussed on the successive Monday evenings: The American Trend, W. J. Cameron of the Ford Motor Company; The Continental Trend, speaker to be announced; The English Trend, Rev. Gordon Matthews, of St. Andrew's Church; The Oriental Trend, Rev. Frederick B. Fisher, D. D., of Central Methodist Church; the Summary, by the Chairman. The second course will be "Psychology Attempts to Analyze Religious Experience," led by Dr. Mary C. Van Tuyl of the University of Michigan.

In the second period, a course on "Worship" will be led by Bishop Page. "What is Life All About?" is the title of the second course in this period, and the speakers include Prof. Howard Y. McClusky, of the University of Michigan; Prof. W. D. Henderson, also of the University of Michigan, and the Rev. Wm. R. Kinder, of St. Joseph's Church.

The Round Table Fellowship is under the direction of Miss Elizabeth S. Thomas, Diocesan Director of Religious Education; the Rev. Wm. R. Kinder, Chairman of the Department; the Rev. I. C. Johnson, and Bishop Page.

English Boy Choristers.

By popular demand, the English Boy Choristers of the London Choir School, under the direction of Carleton Borrow, returned to Michigan to fill two weeks' engagements in March. Besides a number of engagements in Detroit, including a repeat at St. Paul's Cathedral, they sang in Bay City, Jackson, Flint, Grosse Pointe, Bloomfield Hills, Trenton, Ypsilanti and Birmingham. Nearly 1,000 people were turned away on the occasion of their first visit to St. Paul's.

The Institute.

The Institute at the Church of the Epiphany, Detroit, of which the Rev. R. E. Charles is rector, opened on the evening of February 16, with a preparation service for the Holy Communion, with Meditation by the rector on "The Devotional Life." Planned to include sessions for every age group in the parish, the institute continued on Sunday morning with a Corporate Communion for the Church School. At the eleven o'clock service, the rector's sermon provided the second session, the topic being "The Educational Task of the Church," and that afternoon a conference for teachers and officers of the Church School was conducted by Miss Elizabeth S. Thomas, Diocesan Director of the Department of Religious Education, in which she presented her observations on the School.

Further sessions of the Institute provided a general conference, followed by group conferences, for parents and teachers. The address at the general conference was made by Mrs. Helen G. Hogge, Mental Hygiene Counselor of the Highland Park Public Schools, on "Growing Up With Your Children." The group conference for parents was led by Mrs. Hogge, and that for teachers, by Miss Thomas.

On Tuesday evening a dinner and meeting were held in the community house, with addresses by Miss Katherine Ogden, Headmistress of the Liggett School, Detroit, on "Various Parental Attitudes Toward Religious Education," and the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of Michigan, on "Religious Education in Everyday Life."

Thursday morning a Corporate Communion was held for the Parish League of Women, followed by luncheon in the community house and a program, with an address by Mrs. Wm. L. Torrance, newly-elected Educational Secretary of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary, on "Religious Education in Women's Organizations."

NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. E. V. Shayler, D. D., Bishop.

Lenten Services and New Ventures.

Noonday services will be held five days a week during Lent at Trinity Cathedral, Omaha, with the following preachers each taking one week: Bishop E. V. Shayler, the Rev. Fr. Crawford, the Rev. D. J. Gallagher, Dr. F. W. Clayton, the Rev. E. J. Secker, the Rev. G. St. G. Tyner and during Holy Week Dean McGinley.

Bishop Shayler conducted a meditation at the First Christian Church in Omaha, on the World Day of Prayer for Women, as part of an entire day of devotional services and meditations with a community-wide congregation. His subject was, "The Example of the Master."

The system of rotation in office has been introduced in the Cathedral Vestry. Beginning this year four vestrymen will be retired each year to be ineligible for re-election until a year has passed.

The Cathedral Guild will have a tearoom at the National Flower Show at the Omaha Coliseum, from March 30 to April 7.

The Rev. Alfred Cave, of Nebraska City, has organized an Episcopal Church Guild at Normal College, Peru. The Rev. Luther Gramley is ministering to Wayne College students at Wayne, Neb. These are both new ventures in student work.

A Diocesan Director in the person of the Rev. J. T. Walker, of Fremont, has been appointed for Young People's Work under the Department of Education.

The Rev. Garth Sibbald, accompanied the Bishop to the Regional Conference of the National Field Department, at Denver, February 21 and 22.

A group of girls who form a Guild founded in memory of the late Mrs. E. V. Shayler at University Church, Lincoln, have made and given ten layettes to needy mothers during the winter in the Capital City.

In an effort to stimulate missionary interest, the Rev. G. St. G. Tyner of St. Paul's, Omaha, is lecturing with lantern views on Africa, India, Japan, China and Persia each Friday during Lent.

Churches of Plattsmouth are uniting again this year in the observance of Community Holy Week. The groups joining in this plan are the Presbyterian, Methodist, Evangelical and Episcopal.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D., Bishop.

Sixty-first Annual Convention.

The sixty-first annual Convention of the Diocese of Southern Ohio was held at Christ Church, Dayton. The delegates were well rewarded for their travel in zera weather. Bishop Hobson broke all precedents by delivering his charge extemporaneously. The Bishop side-tracked all other diocesan affairs, as he launched into a fervid appeal to his people to show leadership in the Forward Movement. He held up to view the first copy of the Lenten manual, "Discipleship," prepared by the Commision on Forward Movement for use in the whole Church. On the altar was placed as an offering the vivid symbol to be used as the Forward Movement's sign-manual—a ship under full sail beating against a head sea. This drawing is a gift to the Church from Charles T. Connick, the well-known stained-glass artist of Boston, who also donated the panels for the tryptich altars at General Convention.

The high note of "Forward" was sustained by Bishop Bartlett of North Dakota in his sermon to a crowded night congregation, and next day, when he spoke again as national head of domestic mission work. The same pitch of urgency was reached by the Rev. Dr. Robert W. Patton in his address on Forward Movement and the American Church Institute for Negroes.

Charles P. Taft, II., reporting for the Field Department, stated that in 1934 Southern Ohio made the largest contribution in its history to the General Church. Exclusive of U. T. O., Birthday Offerings, mission boxes and special gifts, this amounted to $70,663.05, of which $17,663.05 was Everyman's Offering.

The Finance Committee reported the Diocese free of debt with assessments upon parishes paid 100 per cent.

The death of Bishop Vincent only a few days previously was celebrated as the triumph of a Christian hero. At an early hour on the second day, the great church was thronged at the Memorial communion, at which Bishop Hobson recounted the last hours of our Communion's beloved patriarch.

The diocese voted to increase its pledge to the General Church to the amount of $54,600. The bequest of $6,000 annually for diocesan missions from the estate of Mrs. A. N. Whiting was announced.

In choosing delegates to the Synod, the diocese decided to send members of working departments as follows:

Clerical delegates: Canon Symons, Rev. Messrs. F. C. F. Randolph, Herman R. Page, Henry N. Hyde.

Lay delegates: Messrs. C. S. Faxon, C. P. Taft, II., E. W. Gibberd, Dr. W. S. Keller.

Clerical alternates: Rev. Messrs. B. W. Hummel, Dr. Phil Porter, Brent Woodruff, Maxfield Dowell.

Lay Alternates: Messrs. Stanley Matthews, Dr. Wm. T. Magruder, Murray Shoemaker and Dr. M. H. Urner.

The next convention will meet at the Church of the Advent, Cincinnati.

MISSISSIPPI

Rt. Rev. T. DuB. Bratton, D D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. W. M. Green, D. D., Coadjutor

A Clergy Conference of the Diocese was held the week before Lent. A system of personal, devotional and intellectual growth for each minister was arranged for Lent, setting a day aside to pray for each one, and a calendar thus arranged is being used.

The construction of a substantial new unit, a class room building at the Okolona Industrial School, one of the Church Institute schools, is going forward rapidly. A retreat was recently held at the school. The national Y. M. C. A. secretary for colored work and the chaplain were the leaders.

Tupelo, a growing town in the TVA part of northeast Mississippi is planning to build a rectory. A generous gift from the Diocese of San Joaquin is the beginning.

Three Brothers Ministering in Same Diocese.

Rev. Pipes Jones, of last year's Virginia Seminary class, is beginning a promising ministry in the Winona field. An older brother is the rector at Pass Christian and a younger at Rosedale; three young men, all brothers, in the same Diocese is rather unusual.

Memorials.

St. John's Church, Aberdeen, was recently given a pair of candlesticks as a memorial to A. L. Alexander, who was killed in an aeroplane crash a few years ago. The parish house and church building have been repaired by the ladies' organizations.

A large number of memorials have been given to the church of the Nativity, Greenwood. One of the finest sacristry cabinets in the country is among them; also a fine pulpit, lectern, prieudieu, litany desk and sanctuary chair. By these and other changes the church is greatly improved. Rev. Warren L. Botkin is serving his first year there.

Lenten Trio.

The rector at Meridian, Rev. W. G. Christian, is having as special Lenten speakers, a Bishop, a layman and a laywoman of outstanding ability.

Rev. Charles Hamilton, of Aberdeen, is a Lenten preacher at Nativity, Greenwood, and St. John's, Laurel. In general there is very little interchange of pulpits this Lent.

The Discipleship pamphlets are being used as the basis of Lenten meditations in several parishes.

Rev. W. L. Botkin, of Nativity, Greenwood, is contributing a daily Lenten article to the Greenwood Commonwealth, which has received much favorable attention.

Mid-Day Lent Services.

Preachers at the mid-day Lent services at St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, D. D., rector, are the following: Rt. Rev. Edward T. Helfenstein, D. D., Rev. Robert S. Chalmers, D. D., Rev. Noble C. Powell, D. D., Rev. Don Frank Fenn, D. D., Rev. Arthur Lee Kinsolving, D. D., Boston, Mass.; Rev. Walter O. Kinsolving, Summit, N. J.; Rev. S. Thorne Sparkman, Rt. Rev. Robert E. L. Strider, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of West Virginia; Rev. Shirley C. Hughson, O. H. C., West Park, N. Y.; Rev. John Crocker, Princeton University, Princeton, N. J.; Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Central New York; Rev. Bernard I. Bell, D. D., LL. D., Providence, R. I., and on Good Friday, April 19, 12 to 3, the rector. Three hours' commemoration of our Lord's Passion.

The Diocesan Convention.

Midst a raging snowstorm the clerical and lay delegates to the one hundred and fifty-first annual convention of the diocese fought their way to the Pro-Cathedral, Baltimore, on January 23. The night before, the pre-convention dinner was held at the Southern Hotel, at which over four hundred guests were present, and it was sleeting and snowing for hours before the time set for the dinner. Bishop Cook was the speaker and he gave a very inspirational address. Last year was the first effort made to hold a banquet preceding the diocesan convention, but Maryland is convinced it should hold one every year—it creates such a fine spirit.

The convention opened on Wednesday morning at 8 A. M., with the celebration of the Holy Communion by Bishop Helfenstein. Immediately following, breakfast was served to the clerical and lay deputies. At 10 A. M., after a short service, the convention convened and the Bishop made his address. He spoke of the "grave situation" which has arisen because of an age deadline set on the clergy. "I am speaking, the Bishop said, "of the growing tendency to consider only very young men for vacant parishes. Gradually this deadline has been coming down. I recall the days when a man of sixty years was considered still in his prime and available for any vacancy. Now the line has come down to forty and a man of forty-five years of age is at once pronounced "too old".

He also called attention to the Marriage and Divorce Canon and urged "stricter observance of all its requirements and conditions."

"A League of Decency in the interest of clean, wholesome, recreational and educational films" was recommended and the matter was presented by the Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, D. D., Chairman of the Committee.

The following elections were held:

The Standing Committee: Rev. Noble C. Powell, D. D., Rev. Benjamin B. Lovett, D. D., Rev. Roger A. Walke,

WHAT WAS HIS MAGIC?

Alice Maude Spokes.

What was the magic and the lure unnamed
That Jesus gave to fascinate His age?
No clashing cymbals, shield, or lance, or maimed,
No courier's bugle blown, or hired page;
He came as humble folk with tales to tell
To fishermen that dwelt along the quay,
Or peasant maids who chattered near the well;
He talked of God! They followed to the sea.

These common folk who gave a willing ear,
The poor and lowly—not the rich or great—
Each child and man alike with glistening tear
Paid tribute as a sage or man of state.
What was His magic, as His life we scan?
O nought, but Love and brotherhood of man!

ARMAGEDDONS.

III.

The Battle in the Wilderness.

Upton H. Gibbs.

The battle in the wilderness was a most comprehensive one. It ranged throughout the whole nature in body, soul and spirit of humanity's Champion. The supposed location is described as a repellant spot, with bare rocks, brown sands over which hover vulturous birds. Here we are shown One who had spent forty days and nights in spiritual communion and maintaining a rigid fast. It was probable that so intense was this spiritual communion, that the body was completely quiescent. But such a condition cannot continue indefinitely Sooner or later the body will make itself felt. So it was. "When he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he afterwards hungered."

It was at this critical moment, that the first assault was made, being directed at what apparently was the weakest point of resistance. "If thou art the Son of God, command that these stones become bread." The ingenuity of the tempter was thus manifested. It did not seem to be a temptation, but a perfectly natural suggestion. Why, then was it a snare? Because if heeded and followed, it would have involved an act of disobedience.

The tempted One was to learn obedience by the things which He should suffer. His life was not for His own ordering, but He was under authority, and that authority decreed He should endure the fast until relieved by that authority. His reply to the suggestion indicated this: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Foiled in this attempt, a second one was made. The mind after a fast, is particularly keen and active. A wonderful panorama of world empires, was presented to His mental vision, with the proffer of them as a gift, for an act of fealty to and acknowledgment of the tempter. It was a startling appeal to the ambition, but it would have constituted an act of treason to God. So it was decisively rejected with the words, "It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve."

The third assault was the most specious of all, and the most subtle. Here was one who was adamant against bodily temptations, and could not be seduced by intellectual prizes of the most brilliant order. His resistance was due to His unwavering faith, that made His obedience absolute. So this faith was to be used a means to undo Him.

From the high pinnacle of the temple, He is invited to make a grandstand display of His faith. "If thou art the Son of God, cast thyself down; for it is written, He shall give His angels charge concerning thee: and on their hands they shall bear thee up lest haply thou dash thy foot against a stone." But the reply came quickly, "Thou shalt not make trial of the Lord thy God."

Faith is shown by obedience, not presumption. Faith does not endorse rashness. The victory was complete and the tempter departs for a season. Faith and obedience were rewarded and vindicated, "for angels came and ministered unto him."

The special interest that this experience has for us, is that it was a truly human one, pertaining to human life, and also a human victory, from which we may benefit. But it was the prelude to another and severer conflict, and served as the earnest of the outcome of this subsequent one.

A Traveling Missionary.

Rev. D. Lee Williamson of Presbyterian Brazilian Mission, has one of the largest and most destitute fields in that great country. He described in a recent letter a visit to the Piricahyba section of his field. He says:

"Come with me to the little house where I am to spend the night and I'll show you how a traveling missionary lives sometimes. The tiny house is only about ten feet by twelve, and is divided into three rooms, a bed-room for the family, a kitchen and a front room. The floors are the dirt the Creator made when He made the world. The walls are split poles set upright in niches cut in the base log. The roof is of grass. In the better constructed houses the walls are chinked with mud. This one is not, except the room where the family will sleep. The bed is a thing of beauty, but not a joy forever. It is made of four-forked sticks set in the ground with a cross pole between and other poles laid lengthwise and all tied together with vines. The mattress is a tick filled with corn shucks and the cover is of wool, mixed with cotton, all spun and woven in the home. As a rule, it is not so bad, but this bed is only five feet and a half long, and I am a little over six feet, so that we don't fit any too well. The one cover or blanket is quite insufficient for the cold, but it is all there is, so we must do the best we can. So, one simply pulls off his boots, buttons his coat up tighter, and crawls under the cover. Comfortable? Well, we weren't talking about comfort, that's found in kings' houses. Good will is plentiful, though."—Presbyterian of the South.

BLESSINGS.

Who is so poor he caniot find a reason
For grateful psalm?
Though lying hurt and ill,
From pain we may distill
A sympathy to balm
Another's wound in his unhappy season.

If we have been too busy for thanksgiving
In our success,
Let us in failure lift
Our praises for the gift
That strikes out from distress
A firmer fortitude for nobler living.

Even we who grope the ways of grief in blindness
May feel the gleam
Of sunshine on the face
And know the heavenly grace
Of light is yet supreme,
Enfolding all the world with loving-kindness.

For buoyant energy, for hard achievement,
For all life's feast
Of love, joy, beauty, we Give thanks with jubilee;
But not the least
Of blessing bides in ache, defeat, bereavement.

The Prayer of Cooperation.

"Thy will be done, in earth as it is in heaven"—such is the sublime climax of the prayer. We pray that at length, after the long storm-tossed history of the world, the purpose of God may find its grand accomplishment; that at length all the power of the enemy may go down in defeat; "that in the dispensation of the fulness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth." Such is the Divine purpose for whose fulfilment we pray—a fulfilment which ultimately can only be brought to pass by God Himself. "Fiat voluntas tua."

And yet, as in the case of the former petitions, it is impossible for us sincerely to pray this prayer without desiring in our measure, to do our part. We ask that God's will may be done by ourselves. The petition is a prayer of cooperation.

Note that primarily the prayer is a prayer of action, rather than of endurance and of suffering. The beautiful and well-known hymn, "My God, my Father, while I stray," has tended to give to the multitudes who have sung it a one-sided and imperfect conception of the meaning of the prayer. It is, of course, true that suffering has its place in the fulfilment of the Divine purpose. At times it takes a supreme position. The greatest victory of all for the cause of God was achieved by the Cross of Christ. Yet even for the Master the agony of the Passion was exceptional. Throughout the years of service His meat had been to do the Father's will, and in doing that will He had discovered not only spiritual sustenance but a profound joy. The petition "Thy will be done" is primarily, as we have said, a prayer of action, of co-operation. We seek for ourselves the sublime privilege of becoming collaborators with God.

What is the character of this collaboration? In what specially does the doing of the will of God consist? Not mainly in any specifically "religious" activty. The belief that it did consist in such was the mistake made by Israel of old. They imagined that God was pleased with the pomp and circumstances of gorgeous ceremonial. The prophets insisted that, on the contrary, He was pleased with one thing, and one thing only—inward righteousness of heart and outward righteousness in man's dealing with man. Christ Himself was in the great succession of the Hebrew prophets. Again and again He emphasized the fact that what the Lord required was to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with our God. In the Parables of the Good Samaritan, of Dives and Lazarus, of the Unjust Steward, He insisted that the way of salvation was the way of service. It would most probably be true to say that if the Church had remembered and had acted upon this counsel of her Divine Master the victory over the world would have been won centuries ago. The most effective weapon in the Church's armoury, as well as her own supreme duty, is simple kindness.

The service of men's bodies often come first, but this is intended in the purpose of God to lead on to the service of their souls. His will is done when in one form or another the Gospel is proclaimed and men are brought to surrender their lives to Christ and to receive at His hands liberation from the bondage of sin. The highest service that a servant of God can render is to become a "life-changer"—to be the means of leading some fellow-being from the service of evil to the service of God. We cooperate supremely with God as we cooperate with Christ in His work for the redemption of mankind.

We have ourselves in the Prayer of Surrender taken upon us the yoke of the Kingdom. We become collaborators with God as we lead others to take upon themselves the same liberating yoke.

We need, however, in our cooperation with God to understand not merely what the will of God is in general, but also what the will of God is for us in particular. So we come to the thought that this petition "Thy will be done" implies, a listening attitude on our own part. As we utter the words we should endeavour in the silence that follows to listen to the voice of God making clear to us His will. "Thy will be done" should be followed by the unspoken petition, "Lord, what wouldst Thou have me to do?" This will not mean waiting for casual suggestions of our own minds and the acceptance of any thought that arises into consciousness as of Divine origin. It will mean an attempt to explore the mind of Christ—to find some answer to the question. "Under my circumstances, and with the opportunities as they will come to me today, how can I best fulfil the purposes of the Master for myself and for others." The petition, "Thy will be done," implies implicitly a petition for guidance.

And this prayer of cooperation is a prayer that brings with it liberation and joy. We no longer suffer the agonies of the divided self. We are not seeking to bend God's will to ours; we are seeking to understand that will that it may be fulfilled in us and through us. "Our wills are ours, we know not how, our wills are ours to make them Thine." And as we yield our wills to the Divine will we find our reward. In the beautiful words of old Bishop Jeremy Taylor: "As no man will complain that his head is a prisoner when it is enriched with a crown; so, when the Son of God hath made us free, and hath only subjected us to the service of the Spirit, we are free as princes within the circle of this diadem."

We reach our destiny when our will is, to use Dante's majestical words—

"Roll'd onward, like a wheel
In even motion, by the Love impell'd,
That moves the sun in heaven and all the stars."

—Canon Pilcher, in Canadian Churchman.

ANNUNCIATION.

Martha Young.

A gentle girl at daily tasks,
To do each well is all she asks;
Just one day at a time she lives
To that day's duty all thought gives:

Then suddenly an Angel came,
Mary's clean room was white as flame—
"God's Son, He shall be born of Thee."
"Let God do what He will with me."

The Judge Has a Word to Parents.

To drive home realization of the responsibility of parents in shaping the lives of boys and girls, a juvenile court judge in Pueblo, Col., recently filled a jury box with mothers and fathers who sat as jurors to hear their own sons tried for grand larceny, buglary, and similar crimes. In the presence of their parents the boys related their misdeeds and the parents found them guilty—but guilty with themselves. The judge sentenced the boys, but his condemnation fell on the parents. He said:

"You have just had presented to you the deplorable situation which is in the heart and soul of civilization. Our homes, churches, and officials are not comprehending the situation; they do not seem to think anything unusual is going on.

"You carry the razz, jazz, and carnival life into your homes, churches, and everywhere you go. Your citizenship and moral standing are no better than conditions in your homes.

"These matters can only be traced back to the home. There is no use to try to lay it on the boys or their associates. You are responsible for them and should create an objective in their lives. You should make it possible for them to have something to live for and not just let them grow up. God laid down ways of rearing children, and if you think you can improve on them you are only destroying something that has been good for civilization for 2,000 years.

"This case is the result of your shirking the responsibility that belongs to you. Conditions are due to the literature you have placed in your homes, the manner of rearing your children, and the ideas you have. Modern conveniences, automobiles, electrical appliances, and better working conditions have placed hours on your hands. Your leisure hours have been capitalized and we have the pool halls, shows, and dances which attract and cause you to neglect your homes. Your children are casting aside modesty and refinement in the home. You should make the home four-square for things that are wholesome.

"You cannot improve the defects of these boys by starting any place but at the foundation of their lives—their homes."—The "World Call."

A Paraphrase of 1 Corinthians 13.

If I create wealth beyond the dream of past ages and increase not love, my heat is the flush of fever and my success will deal death.

Though I have foresight to locate the fountains of riches, and power to preempt them, and skill to tap them, and have no loving vision for humanity, I am blind.

Though I give of my profits to the poor and make princely endowments for those who toil for me, if I have no human fellowships of love with them, my life is barren and doomed.

Love is just and kind. Love is not greedy and covetous. Love exploits no one; it takes no unearned gain; it gives more than it gets. Love does not break down the lives of others to make wealth for itself; it makes wealth to build the life of all. Love seeks solidarity; it tolerates no divisions; it prefers equal work-mates; it shares its efficiency. Love enriches all men, educates all men, gladdens all men.

The values created by love never fail; but whether there are class privileges, they shall fail; whether there are millions gathered, they shall be scattered: and whether there are vested rights, they shall be abolished. For in the past strong men lorded it in ruthlessness and strove for their own power and pride, but when the perfect social order comes, the strong shall serve the common good. Before the sun of Christ brought in the dawn, men competed, and forced tribute from weakness, but when the full day shall come, they will work as mates in love, each for all and all for each. For now we see in the fog of selfishness, darkly, but then with social vision; now we see our fragmentary ends, but then we shall see the destinies of the race as God sees them. But now abideth honor, justice, and love; these three; and the greatest of these is love.—Walter Rauschenbusch.

A TRUE SOLDIER.

Monica Williams.

I am a little soldier boy
I'm fighting for the King;
Oh, not with sword and pistol,
But with words of love, I bring.

For Jesus came on earth to be
A boy like you and me;
He came to show us how to act,
I'm following Him you see.

It's hard to do the right thing,
But a soldier's brave and true;
He tries not to mind the danger
And obeys all orders, too.

And so when Jesus wants me
To be always good and kind
I may not like it very much,
But just the same, I mind.

FOR THE CHILDREN

THE GREAT OAK'S MESSAGE.

"Mother, dear, what is the Great Oak saying?
I think he is speaking,
Or is he just creaking?
See how he beckons! Is he just playing?"

"No, little Boy, he isn't just playing;
A sermon he's preaching,
A lesson he's teaching.
See how the storm lashes, but how he stands.
And this is what he is saying:

"'Stand straight, little Boy, and strong
In your purpose in life,
In your fight against wrong,
In your hold upon truth,
Be strong, little Boy, be strong'."

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter XII.

A Long Day.

M. L. G.

The next few days were full of anxiety for the Rectory Children. On the morning after the letter from Mother which David had read aloud came a telegram. The operation was over, it was not itself unsuccessful, but Claire did not rally. Letters followed daily, David and Uncle Danger waiting at the little Post Office for every distribution. David and Winnie sat in dazed distress through the service on Sunday; the only part that seemed to have any connection with reality was the prayer "for a sick child." It was quite impossible to listen to the young man from the Seminary. The children could see only a little hospital room and Claire lying pinched and white, moaning or unconscious. And the thought of Mother's suspense, of Father not knowing what to do—these things made the time of waiting almost unbearable to the brother and sister.

"Father told me to speak to him after service," said David; "I don't know what to tell him. I don't remember one word he said."

"Well, I'll go with you; we can thank him for coming, anyway, and for the prayer. Maybe others liked the sermon. I don't seem to remember it, either."

So, when the young man stepped from the Vestry door, a Warden on each side of him, he faced the two children whose thanks for the prayer, and message from their father made amends for anything they could not say. They were surrounded by friends in the church-yard. When the kindly people noticed that inquiries for Claire brought only a few stumbling words—"we don't know for certain—she isn't better yet"—they did not press them.

"Can you spare us a day at Ivanhoe?" asked Miss Sarah Trent, "and we can do something more in the way of painting."

"I reckon we'd better not leave while Mrs. Innis is at the Rectory," Winnie said, hesitating.

"Huh! Cynthia Innis! She's pretty good at taking care of herself!" Miss Sarah almost snorted.

"If we hear that Claire's better, and if Aunt Mollie comes and Mrs. Innis goes—I mean—she's been so kind, but if we don't need her any more—"

"I understand—you're a dear child, Winnie!" Miss Sarah gave Winnie a quick little hug, "Well, we will wait, and Miss Mollie shall bring you all over, when she comes."

"Don't worry, little girl, about Claire," said Miss Alice coming up; "There are so many prayers going up for her—" Miss Alice's own voice failed. She was especially fond of Claire, whose godmother she was.

"Mother said we could not really—lose her," Winnie said bravely, then hid her face for a minute in the Christmas muff. Miss Alice's hearty, "That's true! That's true!" stayed with her, though, and was a strange comfort.

Father did not come on the Tuesday. Instead, Uncle Danger, bringing the early mail at breakfast-time, had only a hurried note: "Claire has developed pneumonia. Cannot tell about my coming home. Keep up the prayers, and your good courage. Father."

That day passed like a dream that threatened to become a nightmare to Winnie and David. School was a confused blur. David, looking at his text-book, could not tell whether it was Latin or French he was trying to translate, and Winnie at recess sat helplessly holding a sandwich, quite unable to eat a mouthful. Dorothy Lane, her particular chum, stayed close at her side, distressed by the change in the merry companion she had known.

"Winnie, wouldn't you like to come to Anne's taffy-pulling?" asked Dorothy. "We could stop by, so you won't need get out your carriage. Maybe you'll have a real good time." Dorothy's plain little face was full of sympathy and eagerness.

"No, Dorothy—you see, Mrs. Innis always has her drive when we get back from school, and Uncle Danger drives her, so I mustn't be away then. And besides—" Winnie stopped, breaking her sandwich into little bits, which she gathered hastily into her lunch-box.

"I know—don't bother to say it. Only I do so hate to have a good time when you are there at home, not having fun at all." Dorothy squeezed her hand. "How about my staying with you? I don't care about the old taffy."

"Oh, no, I'd rather you would have a good time!" Winnie could not add that even Dorothy's presence might be no help that day.

She and David went home across the fields, with heavy hearts. There had been several days of warmer weather since last week's cold, and David, as they went over the stile into their own garden, cried suddenly:

"There's a robin, Winnie! The very first sign of spring—maybe it's a good sign for us, too."

"Oh, David—the cunning little fellow! It seemed as if winter never would be over, last week. I'm glad we saw him." But deep in her heart there was a question—"Spring without Claire?"

Philip came running around the house. His face was pale under the various smears of an afternoon's play. "Winnie!" he cried, breathlessly, "Kent fell off just a little bwidge, an' he don't get up a bit. Come on!" He caught her hand. But David was around the house like a flash, and when Winnie reached the back porch she saw Kent, limp in David's arms. Aunt Cindy stood by wringing her hands and Uncle Danger was running from the stable.

"What done happen in dis worl'!" cried Cindy distractedly, "I ain't lef' um, not five minutes ago. He ain't had time to kilt hssef—"

"No, he's not killed, Aunt Cindy," David said. He sat on the step, holding Kent awkwardly but gently, "I think it's his arm that's hurt." He lifted Kent's left arm, that dangled queerly, laying it across his breast. Winnie knelt on the ground, chafing Kent's other hand and calling to him in a low, shaking voice.

"Hit's my fault." This was Uncle Danger. "I'd oughter tuk um to de stable whilst I hitch up, I done surmise dat Philip brewin' up sumpin' in his min'.

" 'Twas a bwidge," sobbed Philip. "I thinked about it. It just weached 'cwoss de cellar steps. It weached for me, but it unweached itself when Kent was on it." He pointed to the cellar entrance, while the protecting doors had been opened and the step-ladder lay at the foot of the steps.

"Look, he's opening his eyes!" Winnie said, "Kent, Kent, honey, are you all right?"

"Hurts," said Kent, and shut his eyes again.

"Let's take him up to Mother's room, to Claire's bed," said Winnie, trying to think clearly, "and Uncle Danger, can you go right, right to Dr. Carrington's?"

"Yas'm, little miss, I kin so," answered Uncle Danger, "I done hitch up. Dat lady, she kin do wit'out no ride dis time." He turned toward the stable as David went carefully up the steps. Aunt Cindy running ahead to make ready.

"An Winnie, I can do what?" Philip tugged at her, his fright giving way to new interest.

"I'll wash your face in the kitchen, quick, and you can go with Uncle Danger."

"Oh, goody!" cried Philip, his face a mingling of smiles, tears and dirt.

Mrs. Innis and Winnie reached her mother's room together.

"What is all this, this noise and confusion, Winifred? I was putting on my bonnet for my drive—"

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Innis," Winnie hardly knew what the old lady had said, "Uncle Danger had to go for the Doctor. Kent's hurt himself."

"Oh, now, this is too bad, too bad, indeed," Mrs. Innis looked really distressed as she saw Kent lying white and piteous on Claire's bed. "Don't let the thought of my drive disturb you for a moment, my child. I'll sit beside the little patient myself, until the Doctor arrives."

The Fable of the Poor Man.

Once upon a time, a child was born in a tumble-down hut on a neglected piece of land near a tidy and prosperous town. As the lad grew up he listened to many harsh criticisms of their neighbors and of the townsfolks, so that by the time he was a youth, he was firmly convinced that every one who had a comfortable home and neat clothing and something of an education was enemy to be feared, if not hated.

The youth liked to throw stones and to break windows. He felt a fierce joy in trampling down fields of grain and beds of flowers. His mental attitude toward those who were better off than he, and who would have been kind to him—was one of defiance. So little by little as he approached maturity he built a wall about himself which shut the world out and shut him in.

He did not realize, poor fellow, that the wall was of his own construction, and that the stone of which it was reared were the ugly, jagged ones of envy, malice, ignorance and stupidity. He did not know that many of the people whom he looked upon as proud and contemptuous of him, were sorry for him and would have helped him, had he let them. He did not know that many of these people would have been as poor and wretched as he had they not opened their hearts to the joy of life and had they not worked cheerfully.

One day the Poor Man, for he had grown to manhood years, was walking by the roadside, in the spring time. The sky was overcast and a strong wind was blowing.

"Blow," he muttered bitterly. "My cupboard is bare, my woodpile is burned and I have not seed to plant if the sun should come out. Luck is against me. It always has been!"

There was a groaning noise above, followed by a creaking and a sharp crash and a great branch came tumbling down from the tree top above. It felled the Poor Man to the earth, where he lay like one dead. When he woke up he was in a clean, white bed, soft as down. The room was more beautifully furnished than any he had ever seen, and in the window chirruped a beautiful bird in a golden cage. The man frowned darkly at the little feathered songster.

"Oh, little bird," he muttered, "it is all very well for you to sing, for you are fed and given a golden cage to live in. But I am only a poor man, and life isn't worth living."

The little bird hopped excitedly from perch to perch, then shook his yellow head, and as plainly as if a Magic Princess spoke from within, he warbled forth these words:

"O Poor Man, the kind of life you have lived is not worthwhile unless its very wretchedness makes you long for something better. A man who is really poor is poor all the way through, for wealth is not gold or silver, but treasures rather of the heart and head. Happiness and success lie within. Joy is the warming fire which keeps our hearts aglow. Determine to be happy and to help others to be happy, and you will be rich as a king!"

The man in the soft white bed sat up on one elbow, his eyes were aglow, his heart warmed to the sound of soft music somewhere near.

"O little bird," he muttered, "say that again."

The little bird was trilling merrily in a burst of golden song. Besides the man in the soft white bed had need to think, for he had set his face in a new direction. He had turned his back on poverty of Life and Spirit which had been his. He was no longer filled with bitterness and envy. He was no longer shut in by a cold stone wall, for the Sun was shining, and Happiness and Treasure lay ahead.—Emma Gary Wallace, in Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

What Howard Learned.

Howard suddenly opened his eyes to see the sun shining across his room. He jumped up and raced downstairs to answer the phone.

"Say, are you still sleeping? Don't you know what day this is?" Alfred Kennedy demanded.

"Sure I know. I'll be ready before you fellows get here," Howard returned, clamping the receiver on to the hook. Not for worlds would he admit he had been asleep when the phone rang at eight o'clock.

Howard sauntered into the kitchen. Not a thing stirring. The house seemed very still. "Where's mother?" he demanded of the cat, who was sitting on her cushion in the corner. Not waiting for her answering, "Miaus," he hurried to his mother's room.

"Mother!" he called softly, "does your head ache again?"

"It surely does," she answered as she tried to raise up and dropped back on to the pillow. "I am sorry about the dinner for the boys. Perhaps if I lie still I can get up later and have something ready before you start on your hike, though it won't be a real dinner."

That was a problem. No dinner, with all the trimmings, after he had bragged about what a wonderful cook his mother was!

Howard came to attention in his best Scout manner.

"Now, mother, don't you worry about that dinner for us boys. What is the sense of being a Scout if I can't do things? You just lie still and forget about it," he told her cheerfully, as he lowered the shades. Then he hurried into the kitchen.

"I think some hot milk and toast will taste good. Let's see," he said to himself as he quickly prepared them, "I'll call Aunt Minnie. She will be glad to visit mother this afternoon, I know, and Kent can bring her in the car just as well as not."

He carried the tray he had fixed to his mother. "Here is your breakfast, mother, and here is a glass of fresh water. When you are through, I shall draw the shades again and you may sleep all morning."

"But your dinner!"

"You forget that dinner, mother. I'll find something in the pantry so we won't starve. You will see!" Howard grinned at her as he went back to the kitchen, closing the door so that she could not hear him telephoning to Kent.

"And you be sure to bring Aunt Minnie. Get Alfred and come early, because you're going to help." He grinned again, thinking of the dinner and what the boys would say. Then he hustled to the garden for peas and potatoes.

"It's lucky for me that I learned how to cook potatoes," he told the puppy squirming at his feet and getting in the way. "There are those chickens in the refrigerator, and cream and butter. Let's see. Mother planned to have shortcake. Picking the strawberries will be a good job for Alfred and Kent when they get here. There!" he exclaimed as he shelled the last pod of pease, "everything ready to cook. But whew! How do you make the cake for shortcake?"

Howard hunted until he found a cook-book. "Here is it! Shortcake biscuit. 'Make standard biscuit, using shortening to taste, and biscuits rather larger than ordinary'—you bet they will be larger," he added, and then read on.

For the next hour Howard, with one of his mother's aprons over his Scout uniform, hurried about the kitchen, watching the potatoes and peas, frying the chickens, baking the biscuits for the shortcake, and in between hunting up the paper plates and cups. Oh, yes, and getting out the cream and butter knives and forks and other things he needed.

"Whew!" he exclaimed as he went out on the porch to cool off, "I never realized getting one little dinner was so much work. You surely have to keep an eye on a lot of things. And mother gets three meals each day, every week, every month, every year!"

A car came up the house road, stopping in a swirl of dust. "Here we are, Aunt Minnie and all!" Kent greeted him. "Say, what's the idea of the apron?"

"Not so loud. I told you that you and Alf would have to help get dinner if you wanted any before we started. Mother has a bad headache."

"I thought you were joking, but we're game. What do we do first?" Kent wanted to know.

"You may pick the strawberries and get them ready for shortcake. You had better hustle, too. Dinner is about ready."

Howard caught Aunt Minnie by the arm, hurrying her into the kitchen. "Be a good sport and show me how to make the gravy," he whispered as Kent and Alfred ran to the strawberry patch. "Is this chicken all right?" And what about these biscuits?"

Aunt Minnie looked at the chicken, fried a golden brown. She tasted the seasoning on the pease and looked at the biscuits. "You have done well," she told him.

"That's good news!"

"What are you doing with these and these?" she asked, pointing to the paper plates and cups.

"I thought we boys would eat on the porch table, and if we used the paper plates and cups there wouldn't be so many dishes to wash," Howard answered.

Aunt Minnie smiled. "A good idea. Now I shall get the trays ready for your mother and myself. I shall eat with her and you had better tell Alfred and Kent—oh, here they are!"

The boys came with the big, red berries ready to use. "We cleaned them and washed them at the well," they announced. "Now when do we eat?"

"Take a paper plate from the table and help yourselves. We shall eat on the porch, and don't make too much noise, either," Howard told them.

The dinner disappeared with astonishing speed, with generous pieces of shortcake to top off the potatoes and peas and fried chicken.

"I vote you are a fine cook. Where did you learn?" Kent asked, when he could eat no more.

"I learned watching mother, and say, I learned a whole lot more than that today. If you think getting a dinner isn't anything, you just try it. Believe me, mother's going to have a lot more help from me than she ever did before. Maybe she won't have headaches so often."

"I'm with you," Kent added, soberly, thinking of the many ways in which he could help his mother and had never done so.

"Same here," Alfred spoke up, as they gathered the dishes into the pan for washing. "I guess we all could do much more than we do and still have our good times just the same."—Junior World.

MY COMPANY.

I think while I'm little I'll make up my mind
To be just the kind of boy that I like.
For if I am playing with Tom and with Dick,
And don't like what they do, I can leave pretty quick;
But when I am cross and ugly and mad,
I must stay with myself all the time, and that's bad.

I'm a pretty good judge of the fellows I know,
I can see when they play fair and never tell lies;
Sometimes when I shirk or sneak off and hide,
I'm such a boy as I can not abide.
So the kind of a boy that I like I will be,
For I always must live with myself, don't you see?

DEATHS

ESTHER TROGLER HEISHLEY.

The following resolution was passed by Section B of St. Paul's Church, Alexandria, Virginia, at its meeting held November 20, 1934:

"Resolved, That Section B expresses the deep sense of loss suffered by this organization in the sudden death of its beloved Treasurer, ESTHER TROGLER HEISHLEY. She was a conscientious and efficient officer and gave untiringly of herself in the performance of her duties. Her never failing loyalty to the work of the Auxiliary will always be an inspiration to her devoted friends and fellow members.

"Resolved further, That this resolution be spread upon the minutes of Section B and that a copy thereof be forwarded to her family and to the Southern Churchman."

DOROTHEA MONCURE REES.

Suddenly, on March 4, 1935, at her home in Washington, DOROTHEA MONCURE REES entered into the presence of her Lord. Her passing was almost a translation from earth's activities to the quietude of God.

To all with whom she came in contact, her's was a life of service, but most particularly to the homeless, the desolate, the weak and pitiful of this world.

Unsparing of her strength, she freely gave of it even as she outpoured love from a great and tender heart upon the many needing spiritual support.

For many years she was an active member of the Chancel Guild of Epiphany Church in Washington; also, she was a staunch supporter of her home Church "Aquia", in Stafford County, Virginia.

To one sorrowing there, ere the quiet form was sealed forever from this earth, it seemed strangely beautiful that her sweet face looked upward to the blue skies of Virginia, to the stately cedars of "Somerset", guarding her dead, across the lengthening shadows to the open doors of the home that cradled her. Somehow the goodness and the strength, the courage and the faith of those early years, encompassed us with a peace beyond words, with a sure belief that "One Blessed and Beautiful" walked with us through the dark. This was her last kindly gift; a benediction worthy of her generous soul.

Dorothea Rees, youngest daughter of the late William Edwin and Georgiana Bankhead Moncure, was born in 1870 at "Somerset", in Stafford County, Virginia.

She is survived by her husband, Mr. Edward N. Rees, a sister, Miss Georgiana Bankhead Moncure, and two brothers, Mr. Robert Minor Moncure and M. Richard Travers Moncure.

"She is not dead, she is just away," and may the light shed by her brave, sweet life lead us who loved her, until it breaks into the Perfect day in our Father's House.

"I bore you on eagle's wings and brought you unto myself."

MISS POLLY CARY RANDOLPH, of Millwood, Va.

Born at "New Market" July 19, 1852, died at "Brexton" January 31, 1935.

The Woman's Auxiliary of Christ Church, Millwood, Clarke County, Va., of which Miss Randolph acted as Secretary for nineteen years, wishes to emphasize its appreciation of one whose life has spanned the changes of the past eighty-three years, retaining all the enthusiasm of a great and unselfish soul. Her activities in this church were sustained to the end and her last minutes read since her death are like an admonition to go forward Miss Randolph's life was one of love and helpfulness to the world, with a keen interest ranging from the simple things to the great Eternity.

"A Lady of Yesterday."

Personal charm and graciousness were outstanding characteristics of POLLY CARY RANDOLPH. Living, as she did, in her recollections of by-gone times, as present with her as the events of today in which she took the most lively interest, she was a unique personage.

Old associations, old friends, were her dearest memories: she loved the Old Flowers with which these associations were linked and while the progress of today found her apace, the charms of yesterday lingered always near her.

She had dignity, poise and breeding, never expressed regret for pleasures she may have missed and never criticized or found fault. With her wonderful capacity for enjoyment she lived happily.

She was beloved, admired and respected, this "Lady of Yesterday", by all who knew her and her memory remains dear to all who were so privileged.

English Boy Choristers Enthusiastically Received.

The English Boy Choristers of the London Choir School, under the direction of Carleton Borrow, A. R. C. O., founder of the school, were so enthusiastically received on their first visit to Michigan, in January and February, that they returned for a two weeks' stay in March. So many requests for them were received that it was necessary to give them three engagements on Sundays and also a Saturday evening engagement, contrary to their usual custom. There are twelve boys in the group, carefully selected from the 130 members of the school. The people of Michigan have exhausted all their superlatives in trying to describe their singing.

A Birthday Party.

On the afternoon of February 22 many friends of Mr. J. Churchill Cooke gathered at "Airwell", the historic home of his daughter, Mrs. Fenton Noland, to wish him happiness on his ninety-sixth birthday. It was a very notable occasion, everybody was invited and nearly everybody came, for Mr. Cooke is not only the oldest man in the community, but the most popular among young and old. He is strong and vigorous, and his memory is unimpaired. He can tell you the minutest details of the many battles in which he took part during the "war" (there was never but one war), and his memory of events in later years is equally accurate. Mr. Cooke was born at 'Dewberry", in Hanover County, in 1839, and was among the first to join the Hanover troop at the beginning of the war. Being severely wounded in 1864, he returned to "Dewberry", and in '65 he was married on crutches to Miss Mary Isabelle Blackford, of Lynchburg. In 1867 Mr. Cooke was sent as a delegate from St. Martin's parish to represent Fork and Trinity Churches at the Council, which met that year in Lynchburg. A year later he moved to King William County, and from that time until now he has represented St. David's Church in Aylett, without missing a single session of the Council, and he hopes, God willing, to attend the one in Fredericksburg in May. Trinity Church in St. Martin's Parish was built by his father, the Rev. John Cooke, and it was there that he was christened and later confirmed by Bishop Whittle. It is of interest that at Mr. Cooke's birthday party the ice cream was served in the large cut glass bowl used on the occasion of his christening nearly ninety-six years ago.

Report of the Committee of Three Appointed by the Bishop Relative Motion Pictures.

Whereas, motion pictures are an invaluable source of education for righteousness, if properly presented; and

Whereas, the motion picture industry could and has produced many tremendously helpful and very popular, wholesome moving pictures;

Be it resolved, That the eighty-third annual Convention of the Diocese of Iowa heartily endorse the Legion of Decency, especially in its condemnation of the production of salacious motion pictures and the condemnation of pictures with suggestive and salacious titles; and be it

Resolved, That the Bishop of the Diocese authorize the chairman of the Department of Publicity of the Bishop and Council to receive memberships in the Legion of Decency through a pledge to be printed in the "Iowa Churchman" at an early date, and that the status of such membership be carried from time to time in the Iowa Churchman.

Changes in Lenten Program This Year.

The season of Lent for this year will witness some rather radical and wide-sweeping changes in the program of service and work at Christ Church, Savannah, the Rev. David Cady Wright, D. D., rector. For seven years the noon-day preaching has been the outstanding point in this parish's program. Congregations were large; the sermons were printed in the newspapers; one year broadcast by radio. For certain very definite reasons these noon-day preaching services will not be held this year, but a daily sermon by Dr. Wright will be published in the Evening Press as heretofore. The week-day services will be at 5 o'clock, a short vesper service in the church daily, except Saturday. Chief emphasis is being laid upon teaching this Lent, and for this end the whole congregation is being divided into groups, to study under certain leaders, as follows:

Monday: College age girls, under Mrs. J. W. Griffeth, executive secretary of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education, studying the book of Acts. Women's group, under Mrs. F. B. Screven, studying "Suzuki Looks at Japan".

Tuesday: Employed women's study group. Supper 6:30 in the parish house.

Wednesday: Week day session of the church school. Young People's Social Service Group, under Mrs. O. T. McIntosh, Jr.; Religious Drama Group, under Miss Lorena Smith.

Thursday: Holy Communion. Rector's class for members of the Woman's Guild. Subject: "Personal Religion in the Prayer Book."

Friday: Women's group, under Mrs. T. P. Waring, studying "What it Means to Be a Christian".

Sunday: In addition to the regular Sunday schedule, there is held in the basement of the parish house "The Rector's Fireside Talk to Men".

The following are the out of town guest preachers at Christ Church through Passion Sunday:

First Sunday in Lent—The Rev. C. H. Goodwin, rector, St. Michael's Church, Charleston, S. C.

Second Sunday in Lent—The Rev. Newton Middleton, rector St. John's Church, Jacksonville, Fla.

Third Sunday in Lent—The Rev. Mortimer W. Glover, Jr., rector Christ Church, Macon, Ga.

Fourth Sunday in Lent—The Rev. Armand T. Eyer, rector Christ Church, aldosta, Ga.

Fifth Sunday in Lent—The Rev. Randolph R. Claiborne, Jr., rector St. James Church, Macon, Ga.

Beginning Sunday, March 17, the choir of Christ Church, assisted by outside musicians, will give a series of five Sunday afternoon services of music.

"She makes a beautiful climate for me," said a mother of her attractive daughter. That is what should be said with truth of every Christian. They should temper the moral climate of the world, warming its coldness, cooling its excessive heat, soothing its sorrows and cheering its discouragements.—The Christian Advocate.

In the translucent depths of the Southern Seas the voyager is aware of the infinite variety of sponge growth, waving to and fro with the gentle movement of the tide. THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL "Fear God and work hard."—David Livingstone.

"We Christians are either Bibles or libels."—F. M. Meyer.

It is only when people make up their minds to go straight for the next world that they can throw up their hats in this, and be bright and happy. The key to this world is the next.—Bishop King of Lincoln.

Paul had a way of saying, "I know." If we do not know, we should make a journey into Arabia and remain there until we do know.—Exchange.

The man who does not believe in missions should burn his New Testament, for it is, from beginning to end, a missionary book.—Religious Herald.

That son or daughter in the home who has never heard the voice of parental prayer has not had his or her rightful inheritance.—Baltimore Southern Methodist.

The period through which we are now passing is one of darkness and disorder. To conform our Christianity to the type of such a period would be to deepen the darkness and intensify the disorder. Our times must be brought to order by a reproclamation of the laws of God and a republication of the saving grace of Jesus Christ.—Bishop Candler.

The first thought of every day ought to be the humble placing of ourselves in His hands to confess our absolute helplessness and to yield ourselves in child-like surrender to receive from Him the fulfillment of such promises as these: "The God of peace perfecting you in every good work": "the God of all grace perfecting, stablishing, strengthening you?"—Andrew Murray.

"Give us, O God, the strength to build
The city that has stood
Too long a dream.
Already in the mind of God
The city riseth fair,
Lo, how its splendor challenges
The souls that greatly dare.
Yea, bids us seize the whole of life
And build its glory there!"

"Those who speak of the incompatiblity of science and religion," said Pope Pius XI, "either make science say that which it never said or make religion say that which it never taught."—Selected.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me. Rev. 3:20.

FOURTH SUNDAY IN LENT.

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

"The Light of the World," which appears on our cover page, is one of the most popular of religious subjects. A careful study of this picture reveals many interesting details as well as color harmony. One is impressed that the artist had a wonderful conception of the office of Christ. He has combined Christ, the King with Jesus, the Saviour of the world, who seeks entrance to the hearts closed by an undergrowth of indifference and neglect.

There is no outside latch to the door; it must be opened from within. The kingly figure of Christ, carrying the glowing lantern, the Light, stands without knocking, knocking at the door of our hearts, but it is we who must open the door for Him to enter.

It is said of Holman Hunt that he painted truth just as he saw it. One of the outstanding features of his effort is that it has outlived the severe criticism of his time and is now recognized as the work of a master.

Holman Hunt died September 7. 1910, at the age of eighty-three. Since then his work has received the recognition it rightly deserves. The demand for it continues to increase. An eastern picture house reports that they have more calls for this picture than for any other religious subject.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

PLIGHT OF SOUTHERN TENANT FARMERS.

Mr. Editor:

Rev. Claude C. Williams Is in Jail.

Mr. Williams is a Presbyterian minister of Paris, Arkansas, who has long befriended the cause of labor, working sympathetically with coal miners, tenant farmers, share-croppers and the unemployed. In so doing he aroused the enmity of powerful groups. As a result he has lost his church, and because of insisting on helping the Southern Tenant Farmers' Union and organized groups of the unemployed in a demonstration against further reduction in their meagre relief, he was thrown into jail in Fort Smith, Arkansas, on trumped-up charges. Difficulty has been experienced in arranging bond.

From his cell in jail Mr. Williams writes: "I am willing to pay the price." Another minister, Rev. Ward Rodgers, has also been arrested and is awaiting trial.

Conditions among the share-croppers and tenant farmers, according to reliable reports, are almost unbelievable. A conservative Federal government official said privately to one of the signers of this letter: "Conditions among the share-croppers are the worst I have seen anywhere in the world except in certain parts of Russia."

While the AAA has benefitted plantation owners, conditions have grown worse for share-croppers. Their misery and unemployment have increased.

In desperation these folks have organized in the Southern Tenant Farmers' Union. Their right to organize and stand up for themselves is bitterly opposed by the plantation owners who have threatened lynching to the leaders and recently forcibly abducted and expelled from the county some of those helping to organize the union.

Three share-croppers have been on a visit to New York. They spoke at a meeting of the Church Emergency Relief Committee a few days ago, telling of working and living conditions almost beyond relief. This committee voted to send out an appeal for money for relief of the families of members of the Tenant Farmers' Union, many of whom have been evicted from the farms and are in utmost distress.

One of the share-croppers told us of a family of seven who "didn't have a teaspoonful" of anything to eat in the house. The mother exhorted the children to hold fast to faith in God. "The Lord will help us," she kept saying. Finally, Howard Kester, accompanied by the president of the Southern Tenant Farmers' Union, came to the house bringing a little food and some clothing. "Mother," whispered one of the little girls, "which one of them fellers is the Lord?"

Please send checks at once, made out to the Church Emergency Relief Committee, and mail in the enclosed envelope.

James Myers, Secretary.
W. B. Spofford, Chairman.

P. S.—Clothing of all descriptions, especially for children, is urgently needed. It should be sent prepaid to Rev. Howard Kester, 2595 School Street, Memphis, Tenn., who will see to its distribution. Please mark your name on the package and name of your church or of this committee so these people may know that church people are interested and want to help.

Lent and Social Responsibility.

Mid-Lent Sunday, long known as "Refreshment" or "Mothering Sunday," again reminds us that in a modern day we have little or no need for a relaxation of Lenten discipline, because few of us have a very strict physical observance of these days of fasting.

But there are in our midst those who need and need badly the refreshment that might come from a truly Christian outlook on the world of today. Christians again might stress the thought of the feeding of the multitude and again picture The Master sorrowfully contemplating those who have grown tired and weary in the world. We who follow in His name can think of ways to refresh those who are hindered from a full and free life. It would be a very good Lenten meditation for most of us.

Today there is too much thought that social reform is something in which the Christian has no place. The main theme that is popular is whether or not some new system of government might replace older systems, and we might as well frankly admit that few leaders in the world are asking for any advice from The Church. But cannot we also ask the question as to what good any reformation in politics will do if the values of human personality are not considered the most sacred things with which we deal? And who, but the Church, has the ability to capture the religious fervor needed to promote such values and enable any reformation to be anything except a passing bit of legislation?

Perhaps we can begin in our average outlook in our own parishes and missions. Our efficient secretary for Social Service with the National Council, Mr. Barnes, has pointed out that the weakness in our Church is that many of our communicants claim they are not interested. But if we really give a serious Lenten thought to the subject we can see that at the bottom of our religious life will always be found the responsibility for those of the community with whom we share life—or with whom we should share. That Christ demands of His followers a social responsibility that is greater and bigger than mere individual goodness is fundamental.

Certainly in our manufacturing centers there is need for playgrounds, better housing and a thousand and one improvements in living. We often forget that in this land of the free, millions are living in what is almost social slavery. Surely we have a few loaves and fishes to give to The Master today that again the multitude might be fed.

"The Lengthening Days."

We are often impressed with the fact that the best religious comments come frequently in the secular press. We might say also that at times the best comments on the world and national events are found in the religious press, but that is beside the point.

Under the title of "The Lengthening Days" we recently read an editorial in the "Knoxville (Tennessee) Journal." On inquiry we learned it was written by Mrs. Anne Rankin of the staff of that paper. On this Mid-Lent Sunday we feel it will prove of special interest to our readers.

THE LENGTHENING DAYS.

An Editorial.

In each year's youth, the days grow longer as the sun turns farther to the North.

And so it came about that this period of early spring was named by our ancient fore-fathers Lengten and Lengten-tide, and now is known as Lent and held a season for fasting and for prayer.

The time delivers us from winter and from the meagerness of all too crowded days.

Comes earlier dawn, and later dusk, and hints of spring that tempt the pagan hearts of us.

It was in this season of the earth's renewal, and of strange longings in man's soul, that the early Christians set the time for the year's commemoration of their Master's forty days in the wilderness, making of the fast a solemn preparation for the great Feast of the Resurrection, that hearts in which Christ had been laid away as in a tomb, might with joy behold Him risen again when the penance and the fast were done.

From Ash Wednesday to Easter Day, men are to examine themselves—now as then.

And in whatever age the time is kept, or what the form of fasting, Christian men and women are to forget the business of saving their own souls and to set about the work of bringing peace to others, and content.

Not by the mockery of a scanty larder as the only fast, nor by the letter-abstinence from some favorite pleasure, but by deep soul searchings and worth while deeds is the fast to be made vital.

Nature herself sets the scene for the seasons keeping, standing as she does, for the moods of life, for the mystery of death and the marvel of things which are eternal.

In her storms and furies are our agonies and tears, and in her unfailing renewal, symbol of a soul that may

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Peace and Munitions.

The Witness, March 14, 1935.

When one considers how, in the World War, the armament makers of France and Germany were able to continue their work of wholesale slaughter because of their influence in high political circles, one seems justified in saying, "Let us rid the world of armament makers and peace will follow." But how is this to be done in the face of their present power and entrenchment? Contemplate for a moment, their influence during the war, specifically, in relation to the Briey iron mines, the principal source of ore for the French munitions manufacturers. Seventy per cent of this necessary raw material came from Briey. In the early part of the war the Germans wrested it from the French. Incidentally, the German artillerymen were instructed not to injure any part of it during the attack. From this time on almost to the day of the armistice these mines supplied the Germans with 75 per cent of all the iron ore used by them in the war.

In 1916, two years after the German capture, the French came again within potential grasp of the Briey Basin. During the entire period of the second battle of Verdun the second French Army was within artillery range, but no shells were fired into it, nor were bombs dropped upon it by airplanes, even though the common soldiers and the line officers were momentarily expecting orders to do so. The news of this inaction soon spread to the French civilian and in due course an explanation was demanded from headquarters. Instead of saying orders for shelling Briey were withheld because the French were expecting to recapture it without damage, headquarters issued the report that if the French bombarded Briey the Germans would retaliate by turning their guns on Dambasle mines, located between the Argonne and Verdun, from which the French were obtaining much of their raw material for munitions. Of course, if both the French and the Germans had destroyed the mines from which the ore was taken the war would have ended much sooner and so also would the profits to the armament makers. Neither Briey nor Dambasle was injured during the entire four years of the war. However, a French artillery General was reprimanded for expressing a wish to bombard Briey when a ten mile penetration of the French army in that direction would have come close to the ruination of Germany in 1916.

This Armament Madness.

The Christian Century, March 20, 1935.

These things happened in one week: Germany announced that her "civilian flying clubs," enrolling more than a million and a half young Germans, have been incorporated in the regular army, with General Goring as commander. France took the initial steps to raise the term of army service from one to two years. England, after publishing a white book which treats the dangers of war in sensational fashion, voted a $50,000,000 increase in her military appropriations. Japan voted the largest peace-time defense budget in her history—$296,000,000 out of a total governmental outlay of $600,000,000. Topping them all, the United States senate approved an appropriation of $400,000,000 for the American army, which not only increased the amount voted by the house by $20,000,000 but also provided for 113 new R.O.T.C. units in colleges and schools and a doubling of the size of summer training camps. What this means is, of course, that a new world race toward catastrophe is in full cry. Not even in the two years immediately preceding the outbreak of the world war were the nations piling up their armaments in such frenzier fashion as this. And in this new armament race the United States is not only participating with the rest but, from the financial standpoint, far more than any of the rest. Military expenditures approved this year by the White House now total $1,021,964,908. Read it and weep!

A Call for Intelligent Action.

The Churchman, March 15, 1935.

What is the Episcopal Church going to do with its finely conceived Forward Movement? We like the designation; we certainly need movement and as certainly that movement must be forward. We are strong for meditation, but we are convinced that action in the church has never been proportionate to its meditation. "Our spirit is not the result of any confidence in self," said Bishop Hobson, chairman of the movement, "but is based first upon the firm conviction that it is God's purpose that in our day the Episcopal Church, as well as other of the great communions of Christendom, shall exert a new power in the life of the world." And the bishop is right in declaring that the people in the church should know a good deal more than they do know about their own religion. Their ignorance is nothing short of appalling. "We see that the great majority of our members are woefully ignorant so far as any real knowledge of the Christian religion or the church is concerned," said Bishop Hobson. "They know little about the life or teaching of Him whom they have promised to follow. . . . . They have little or no understanding of how Christian principles might be brought to bear on the solution of the problems of our day. We have a church in which the majority of our members, when judged by any standard to determine their Christian intelligence, are still in the primary grades." And people who are in the primary grades are going to do very little toward that "turning of the world upside down" for which Bishop Hobson asks. We hope that the Forward Movement will teach more of our people about Christianity, something of what its explosive quality is and how it can best be applied toward bringing in the Kingdom of God.

Social Responsibility.

The Living Church, March 9, 1935.

Has the Forward Movement any responsibility as regards the social implications of the Faith? The question was placed squarely before the Commission at its recent meeting in the form of a communication from the Church League for Industrial Democracy. It is noteworthy that the unanimous answer of the Commission, each member present being individually polled, was an emphatic Yes.

One of the four general objectives of the Forward Movement, as adopted in the meeting of the Commission in Chicago last December, is "a call to Church members to face social, national, and international problems in the spirit of Christ." The Lenten leaflet on Discipleship clearly sounds the note of social responsibility. The reply to the C. L. I. D. that the Commission directed its chairman to send emphasizes and extends it.

One cannot recall too often the words of our Lord: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these My brethren, even these least, ye did it unto Me."

The wholehearted recognition of this truth by the Commission on the Forward Movement is one of the most hopeful developments of the Movement. If the Church will but catch this spirit, as it seems increasingly to be doing, she may in the providence of God fulfill a tremendously worthwhile function in the Christianizing of a corrupt and material social order. The bishops have clearly sounded the call, and the leadership of the Forward Movement has indicated a readiness to respond. It is up to the Church to go forward determinedly and courageously along these lines.

The Rediscovery of the Spiritual World

Dr. Lyman Abbott, editor for many years of the New York Outlook, a few months before his death, said, in an editorial of his:—"Nothing does this age need more than a rediscovery of the Spiritual Universe." This was some years ago and if the world needed a closer connection with God then, it most certainly does now. The spiritual world furnishes something similar to the oxygen which is so necessary a part of the atmosphere which we breathe and without which we could not live. The moral and spiritual atmosphere which surrounds us at the present day is so heavily charged with the poisonous gases flowing from the movies and unwholesome fiction, that it has brought about a most deplorable situation. Something must be done to cleanse and purify the polluted atmosphere in which we find ourselves forced to live, no matter how repulsive it may often seem to us.

The World Like the Prodigal Son.

The world of the present day is like the Prodigal Son in the far country. It has come to realize that the husks which the swine do eat are but a poor substitute for the good food which it might be enjoying. If the world is to be saved from utter degradation, if not from complete destruction, it must turn towards the spiritual world and seek to be restored to that filial relationship with the Father of us all, which has been so largely lost. Only recently we have had a striking illustration of the decadence of our civilization. A convict in Devil's Island, France's well-known penal colony, was pardoned and returned to his native land, after a number of years' absence. In a few months' time he became so appalled at the lowering of the moral tone in Paris, that had taken place since he had known it before, that he came to the conclusion that Devil's Island was preferable to Paris and proceeded to return thither. Will it be necessary to emigrate to Devil's Island after a while to have our souls! Not long ago a Japanese Christian warned an American missionary against taking his child to America as he didn't think it would be a safe place for the child. He had heard so much about kidnapping in America, as well, probably, as having seen American Movies.

Tolerance of Evil Undermining Christianity.

There are certainly enough professing Christians in America to serve as an antidote to the poison which is so prevalent in the atmosphere of American life, but we are too tolerant and indifferent to the evils which have sprung up, to make an effective protest against them. The underworld seemed, a while ago, to be able to defy the Government and to gain a stranglehold through racketeering upon the business life of the nation. The Government has at last realized the danger which threatens society and is now using a strong hand to suppress the criminal element which had become a public enemy. But the Christians have been asleep or such a condition of things could never have been possible. Christianity is a spiritual religion and it is only by keeping in close touch with the spiritual world that Christians can gain the power necessary to make their influence felt in purifying society. By losing touch with the spiritual realities they are as powerless and as lifeless as this earth would be if it were to lose its connection with the sun and drift off into space by itself.

Strong Language Needed.

It may seem to be using strong language thus to describe the situation, but that is because we have become so accustomed to look upon the evils which surround us as commonplace, that we do not realize the danger of our easygoing and tolerant acceptance of the existing state of things. Nominal Christianity is like the dead wood which drifts down stream; it has no real life in it and it cannot exert a wholesome and purifying influence upon human society. It has lost touch with the spiritual world and, therefore, it has ceased to be a channel, linking heaven to earth, and bringing the living waters of the Spirit to cleanse and refresh and give new life to the world.

The World's Greatest Need.

The rediscovery of the spiritual universe is, as Lyman Abbott wrote, the greatest need of the age. If we do not feel it to be so it is because our spiritual nature has become atrophied, and has no conscious feeling of need for that which is necessary to its life. Just as the sunflower turns to the sun so must we turn towards God, who is the source of our true life and without whom we are but flotsam and jetsam, drifting hither and thither, whichever way the tide of circumstance may drive us. To be fellow-workers with God means that we have a share in the divine purpose and that our life has its part in the work that God is carrying on for the good of the world. This gives to life a worthwhile meaning, and if all Christians were of this kind, the world would be a very different place from what it is. There is a tendency towards improving world conditions apart from God, and substituting our own ends for His. However good such intentions may be, men make the mistake of ignoring God's part of the work, whereas it is only His wisdom and power that can bring about the desired result. By using the resources of the spiritual world to overcome the evil and promote the higher good, which God alone can bring about, we are given the inestimable privilege of cooperating with Him in the fulfilment of His divine purpose, though our share may be insignificant in comparson with His.

Faith and Reason.

The Age of Reason overstays its time,
  An Age of Faith awaits its chance to give
New inspiration and a hope sublime,
  That men may rise on nobler heights to live.

If God's will can be done upon this earth,
  As it is done in heaven, by angels fair,
Then Nature may receive her second birth,
  And earth may yet a heavenly vesture wear.

Forward In Missions

By
JOHN W. WOOD, D. C. L.,
Executive Secretary of the Department of Foreign Missions.

This address was delivered March 17, in the "Episcopal Church of the Air" Series.

JUDGED by its purpose, its methods, and its results, the mission work of the Christian Church is the most forward looking enterprise in the world. It does not indulge in catchword slogans and blueprint schemes! It works in time; but it works for eternity.

Century after century, ever since the Incarnate Son of God walked upon the earth, men have gone forth in the quest for souls. That quest began when the followers of our Lord, who had gathered about Him on the day of His Ascension, went at His request, from the little land of their birth into the world of their day. They were not a search party asking anxiously: "What is Truth and where is it to be found?" They went into the world as ambassadors for the Master of men, who had declared: "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life." They went because He had asked them to witness for Him to the uttermost part of the Earth.

It was a small world to which they went—the world of the Mediterranean Sea—the world of Western Asia, Northern Africa, and Southern Europe. Through peril, toil and pain they went proudly on their way, proclaiming Jesus as the Son of God who came into the world of human life to save men from their sins.

The world grew larger. Others took up the task eternal. On they went to Central and Northern Europe—to Gaul, to Britain and to Germany. A thousand years rolled by. The Americans were added to the world. It became the world of the Atlantic Ocean—the world of new lands, with new souls to be claimed, new needs to be met, new victories to be won. Our twentieth century world is larger still. It includes the Dark Continent of Africa with its millions of primitive peoples and the mysterious Orient with its vast populations, ancient cultures and racial religions. Into that world the Church moves forward, strengthened for her task by her Lord's commission—"Go teach all nations."

This seventeenth of March is St. Patrick's Day. Probably few people identify him now as one of the great missionaries of the early Church. But such he most certainly was. A Scottish lad, won to faith in Christ by missionaries to Northern Britain in the Fourth Century, carried away by Irish pirates, he became a slave and swineherd in Ireland. Escaping from his captors, he became after many adventures a minister of Christ and determined to give his life to evangelizing the people among whom he had lived for six years as a slave. Today he is revered as the man, who, more than any other, won the people of Ireland to faith in God. As one result of his life and labors, Ireland became in the century after his death the homeland of great missionaries to northern Britain and to pagan Europe. Our commemoration of St. Patrick may well remind us that if it had not been for missionaries like Patrick, Columba, Aidan, Augustine and Boniface, we of today might still be the heathen sons of heathen ancestors. The life and work of these missionaries laid the foundation, for Christian faith and Christian learning, upon which what is best in our civilization rests.

THIS YEAR the Episcopal Church is commemorating the consecration of its first missionary bishop—Jackson Kemper. His diocese was originally Indiana and Missouri. In Indiana he found one clergyman but no church building. In Missouri he found one church building but not one clergyman. No state bounds could confine the energies of an apostolic soul like Kemper's, with half a continent spread out before him. So he pushed on to Kansas and Nebraska, Iowa, Minnesota and Wisconsin until he became in truth the Bishop of the Northwest. He preached the word of life. He won men for godly living. He gathered congregations. He built churches and founded schools. He orgaized dioceses. He trained his successors in the ministry. In the region in which Bishop Kemper ministered there are today fourteen dioceses—containing nearly three times as many members of the Episcopal Church as there were in the Episcopal Church in the whole country in the year of Bishop Kemper's consecration.

Such pioneer mission work in our great national domain has been well done. But the task is not completed. America is not yet fully Christian. The Christian Church must keep before the people of this land the ideal of a nation truly Christian. A nation without class strife or religious prejudices, or race hatreds. A land of good citizens and good neighbors who try to apply the principles of our Lord's Sermon on the Mount to daily living. A land into which children may be born without fear of contamination, physical, mental or moral.

With 13,000,000 children in the United States, under the age of twelve, growing up without religious instruction of any kind we are sowing seeds of national disaster. Here is one condition that demands the best thought and effort of present-day American Christians.

Some years ago a young missionary of the Episcopal Church in China found an abandoned small boy by the roadside, half dead from sickness and neglect. He took him to his own home, washed, fed, clothed him and finally brought him back to health. But what was to be done with him? The lad knew nothing of home, family or friends. So the school conducted by this young missionary became the boy's home for several years. Then, educated and fitted to make his own living, he went to work. A year ago that missionary died. A few months later a prosperous Chinese business man called on Bishop Graves in Shanghai. He was the Bishop who had encouraged and guided the efforts of the young missionary years ago. The visitor told the Bishop he was "one of Dr. Ancell's boys." "I want to make a gift in his memory," he said. "Will you accept this check and use the interest on the money to help poor boys to receive what Dr. Ancell's school gave to me?"

It was a check for $10,000. With that gift and many smaller ones made in the same spirit of gratitude, Mahan School, in the city of Yangchow, goes forward to larger service than ever for Chinese youth. Such an incident gives one indication of the character-forming work done by the Episcopal Church in all its mission fields through its Christian schools and colleges. Last Christmas seventeen of the students of Mahan School were admitted to membership in the Church through baptism with the full consent of their parents.

FOR THIRTY YEARS Dr. Rudolph Teusler, medical missionary from the Episcopal Church in Virginia, planned and worked to interpret the Christian message to the people of Japan through the building and the conduct of a modern medical center in Tokyo. He succeeded beyond the hopes of his most sanguine friends. His effort cost him his life. Last August his great spirit went home to God. Thousands of people have found health of body and soul through the work of this Christian doctor. Though sorely missing the inspiring presence of its loved leader, St. Luke's Medical Center goes on under the combined direction of its Japanese and American staff. This staff has begun an effort to provide the Center with an adequate endowment and has already given 22,000 Yen. It is a worthy expression of admiration for their leader and their loyalty to his ideals. It is another indication of the extent to which men and women of East and West are cooperating in the effort to transplant to the East the best that our science and philanthropy, inspired by Christian faith, can produce.

St. John's University, Shanghai, beginning as an elementary school, is now one of China's largest and most famous schools of higher learning. For many years it has been training leaders for China, as doctors, clergymen, teachers, business men, government officials and diplomats. One of its graduates was recently consecrated a bishop and sent by the Chinese branch of the Anglican Communion to be a missionary in Northwest China, much as Bishop Kemper was sent to the northwest of our own country, a century ago. China's present minister to the United States, as well as two of his predecessors at Washington, are graduates of St. John's. So are Dr. T. V. Soong until recently China's famous Finance Minister; Dr. C. T. Wang, sometime minister of Foreign Affairs, and Dr. W. W. Yen, a former Prime Minister and now Ambassador to Russia. In fact, the pages of "Who's Who in China" are studded with the names of graduates of St. John's.

TODAY THE EFFICIENCY, and possibly the very existence of St. John's University is seriously threatened because American Episcopalians are not giving as they did five years ago for the maintenance and development of their work throughout the world.

The schools and colleges of the Episcopal Church in every field from Alaska to Southern Brazil, from West Africa to Central China, are leading their students forward towards "Light and Truth." Most of them earn far more in tuition fees paid by students than they receive from the Church in the United States. They cannot, however, as yet become fully self-supporting. Members of the Episcopal Church in America must determine whether these institutions for the production of Christian character are to move forward to the fulfillment of their purpose or are to be hampered and held back. The Church must not take refuge in a missionary moratorium because of economic conditions at home.

Even before the social conscience of the home lands was sufficiently roused to seek adequate means for dealing with the social needs of their people, Christian missionaries were grappling with vast areas of human suffering and distress. Cruel practices, based on ancient superstitions, have been modified and frequently abolished altogether. Entrenched disease has been to some extent, at least, reduced or controlled. Unbelievable poverty has been, in a measure, alleviated by developing native arts and crafts and by introducing improved methods of agriculture. Agricultural missions have become an important factor in raising standards of living and bringing new hope to vast rural populations.

In a crowded section of Kyoto, Japan, where most of the people are engaged in silk weaving, the Episcopal Church maintains a center of work, both through the spoken word and through practical help given to the every-day life of the people. Its small and inexpensive building is wholly insufficient for the demands of the widening work. The American missionary and his Japanese colleagues carry on in the hope that some day soon they will have better tools. The church is always crowded. After each service the chancel and altar are screened off and the Church becomes a parish house. A kindergarten of sixty children is a blessing to them and to the homes from which they come. A night school opens up opportunities for ambitious youth and some older people. There are clubs for boys and girls, young men and women. The tiny reading room attracts many. When the hot, humid days of the Japanese summer make life difficult, a country camp for fifty children helps to relieve the situation.

A health clinic served by Japanese doctors and nurses is doing much to safeguard the health of the region. If you happen to be in the church when Dr. Fujino, a vestryman in one of our parishes in Kyoto, arrives to begin the clinic, you will see him first of all, kneel at the altar to ask God's blessing on what he has come to do. The memory of that simple-hearted devotion, expressing a desire to consecrate one's medical skill, is something that does not fade away. Much of the cost of this work is supplied by a group of fifty Japanese patrons, each of whom contributes the equivalent of $15 American currency a year. True to Rotarian tradition, some of the Japanese members of the Kyoto Rotary Club—and a flourishing one it is too—help to support the work at this center.

This Kyoto Mission is typical of work done under similar conditions throughout the world, to help people spiritually and physically in the Name of Christ. There are, however, vast numbers of people in every mission land for whom no such work is being done. That fact calls for progressive Christian service. Mere humanitarianism or humanism will not suffice. They lack the compulsion of Christian compassion, as manifested in the earthly ministry and teaching of our Lord. Every missionary repeats the experience and the words of St. Paul—"The love of Christ constraineth us." No other motive will stand the strain.

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH in the United States has recently had a distinguished visitor, Dr. Cho-Min Wei, President of Central China College, Wuchang. This college is the outgrowth of Boone School established years ago by the Episcopal Church. It has now affiliated with itself, the higher educational work carried on in Central China by English Methodists and Congregationalists and by Yale University men, supported by an association of graduates and under-graduates in the United States. It is the only Christian institution of higher learning in a region with a population of eighty million people.

Thirty years ago, young Wei came to Boone School from a Cantonese family that knew nothing of the Christian Church, except that it had the reputation of maintaining a good school for boys in Wuchang. His academic record was so good that opportunity was given him for study abroad. Today he is a Master of Arts of Harvard University, a Doctor of Philosophy of the University of London and has recently received the honorary degree of Doctor of Civil Law from the University of the South.

During his visit to the United States he has lectured in a number of American universities on Chinese culture and philosophy as influenced by the principles of Christ. He has brought a message of spiritual renewal to great numbers of students and to members of the Episcopal Church and other communions. He is really a missionary, interpreting to American Christians, the experience and the point of view of a Chinese Christian. It is the policy of the Christian missionary agencies in this country and in Europe to encourage such visits from the young Christian churches of the East to the older churches of the West. They are invaluable in drawing men of different races together in the ever-widening Christian fellowship.

It is Dr. Wei's conviction that in China, the Christian Church today is facing its greatest opportunity since the days of the Roman Empire. Four hundred

The Boy

By

James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington.

Bishop Freeman

OUR age has caught a fresh vision of the essential place the boy occupies in our corporate life. The buoyancy, enthusiasm and ready initiative of the boy has always appealed to us, but we have thought of him as constituting a dramatic and picturesque element in our life, without taking seriously his potential value as a contributor to all that makes for wholesomeness and efficiency of living. Perhaps we have regarded him too much as a play-boy, unresponsive to the appeal of those things that are serious and that occupy a large place in the well being of our social and economic order. It is certainly true that the exigencies of the present hour are compelling us to reckon with elements in our corporate life that we have sadly and tragically neglected, and among these the boy occupies a conspicuous place.

There is an incident related in the Sixth Chapter of St. John's Gospel that is strikingly illustrative of the place the boy occupies in the solving of a serious problem. The Master had been ministering to a vast multitude of some five thousand. As the day advanced the question arose as to what provision might be made for the feeding of this great number. The conservative disciples admonished him that two hundred pennyworth of bread was not enough, and that the problem presented was incapable of solution.

As the story proceeds we read that, one of the disciples said to Jesus: "There is a lad here which hath five barley loaves and two small fishes," to which he pessimistically added, "but what are they among so many?" At this point a new element was introduced into the narrative, the presence of the boy with the few loaves, under the blessing and power of the Master solved the problem and gave refreshment to the hungry multitude.

We like the association of the lad with a situation in which his modest contribution was disparaged by those who could see in it nothing of adequate value. Aside from the great miracle worker and teacher, the boy was the most important factor in the solving of a difficult question. It is another illustration of the use that Jesus made of that which to men seemed inconsequential and indifferent. It is in demonstration of the importance of what might be termed the value of inconspicuous service. We are laying much stress today upon those things that represent large material values. We have come to use terms with which hitherto we were unfamiliar, and in our estimate of life we have a disposition to appraise institutions and agencies by their bulk rather than by their inherent worth.

The whole incident related above is not only appealing, it has a deep significance. The old adage that, "the boy is father to the man" has an import greater today than hitherto, and we would do well in the recasting and re-forming of our social, economic and political institutions to reckon with him as a mighty and potential factor. We cannot dis-esteem him, and we dare not treat him as a liability. As a matter of fact, he is the chief asset in our corporate life, hence his training, his care and his development is a primary and not a secondary consideration. Secular education may contribute its substantial part, but if he is to be the kind of citizen that is to preserve the best and finest in our life, his moral and religious training must be a matter of primary consideration. For this we must look to the home, to parenthood, and the Church, and they must be responsible and consistent.

The destiny of the Republic is in the hands of our youth. Every institution with which we have to do will be enriched or impoverished by those who, today, are being prepared for the duties of tomorrow. We need an educated, cultured citizenry, but above all else we need that kind of Christian culture and refinement that is fundamental to our security and continuing prosperity.

and fifty million people are in a period of transition from the old ways to the new. Communism made a bid for the allegiance of China's millions, but failed to bring it off. The Chinese Communist government in the Province of Kiangsi has recently been up-rooted, but its menace has not ended. Communistic leaders are striving feverishly to establish a new base in West China. General Chiang Kai Shek, the strongest and sanest leader China has had for many a year, frankly declares that today the fate of his country trembles between Communism and chaos on one hand and Christianity on the other. As a Christian disciple, who four years ago asked to be received into the Christian Church by baptism, he is seeking to help China through a "New Life Movement." This movement aims to restore some of the ancient virtues of the people in the life of today. Wherever he goes, he is advising his countrymen to learn from the missionaries how to live a simple, clean, industrious life.

WHEREVER THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, Anglican, Roman, or Protestant, is at work in the world, present conditions call for courageous and sustained advance. It is emphatically true as has been recently pointed out by Dr. J. H. Oldham, one of the keenest observers of world conditions that:

"The penetration of mission lands by western ideas and western technical and industrial methods is producing a situation resembling that in the West, in which Christianity is involved in a life and death struggle with secular modes of thought and a secularized social order. Modern science, Communism and nationalism are creating in Asia and Africa problems similar to those which confront the Church in Europe and America."

My own visits to the mission fields of the Episcopal Church, convince me that this condition can be met only by the application to the life of men, everywhere, of those principles of individual conduct and social relationship, taught during His earthly ministry by Jesus, as the Incarnate Son of the loving Father of all men.

With no intention of speaking for any other communion than the Church whose servant I am proud to be, I say with deep conviction that Christian people must gain a nobler conception of the Christian Church. For too many of us, the Church has come to be little more than a series of groups of individuals meeting periodically, when other interests do not interfere, to seek for spiritual good in some vague way. Bits of American Church-Lore

EDGAR L. PENNINGTON,

Rector of Grace Church, Oscola, Florida.

SIR HANS SLOANE (1660-1753), the celebrated British physician and the first medical practitioner to receive an hereditary title, writes the Secretary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel some suggestions regarding the health of the missionaries (March 4, 1712):

"I have been always of Opinion That Preventive Physick as 'tis call'd is of great Prejudice instead of Benefit to Mankind. Suppose a Person to be in perfect health That person must by any Medicine of Real Vertue or Effect be Changed into One Sick. I therefore shall desire Your Missionary or whom you send to Barbadoes or anywhere, not to be too busy in preparing for the Climates, our Bodies are Made to Inhabit most if not all parts of the Earth, and a due Observation of Diet, Drinking Sleeping &c by good hours, Temperance Sobriety &c is the best way to preserve Life. There is one Custom in those parts of Drinking punch made of Rum & Lime Juice wch brings not only after it the Train of Diseases wch every where follow the Drinking Intemperately Strong Liquors, but more Particularly there, the Colick or Bellyake as 'tis there Term'd, the Bodies of persons goeing Thither are to be kept from being bound by Extractum Rudij, He should when he finds a Boyling in his Blood be bled, when he hath an Inclination to vomit, take a Gentle Vomit of Oxymel of Squills Ipecoacana or Vin: Emetic. if his Head be out of Order, Blister, in Great Looseness take Laudahum, and in Intermitting ffeavers take the bark. In other ffeavers dilute with plentifull Drinking of Cooling not Sour Liquors Bleed & Blister If the Gentleman Going understands the practice of Physick here, he will not need any Instructions for the Operations of Medicines are there very near the Same that they are here, If the Gentleman going will give himself the Trouble to call upon me I will Instruct him the best I can."

When the Reverend Gideon Johnston, of Charles Town, South Carolina, visited England in 1713, he carried with him a young Indian prince of the Yemassee tribe. He rendered the following bill of expenses for "ye Indian Youth" to the S. P. G.:

The Reverend Gideon Johnston writes to the Society regarding the proper clothing for the young Indian prince and especially the need of a winter suit.

"How necessary this is for one Come from a hot Climate into a very Could Country, needs no proof, and he humbly Conceives the whole debate will be; What Sort of Cloaths are fittest for him, It may with great truth be Said, Considering the great demands which are made uppon the Society, that which is plain and Cheap is Best, but Some are of opinion that this garb ought to be a Little better than Ordinary in regard when he is a Little Longer at School and Learns to Speak English a little more plainly that he will then be Introduced to her Majesty, and often have Occasion to wait upon the Quality till he is Baptized, and on this account they think it fitt, that he Shou'd make a decent appearance; To this they add that it will in Some Measure be usefull and necessary for the design in hand, to Send him back to his own Country well Equip't, It being Certain that the Indians in Generall are most affected with that kind of garb, which is gawdy and makes the finest Shew."

FOURTH SUNDAY IN LENT.

Today is known as the Fourth Sunday in Lent, or Laetare. There are several other names given to this day. In the Eastern and Western Churches it is known as Mid-Lent Sunday. In the Western Church it is also called "Refreshment Sunday," partly because of the gospel for the day (Saint John, sixth chapter) being the story of the feeding of the five thousand, and partly because it was a little Carnival between the two halves of Lent, the "Mi-Careme" in Paris being an occasion of great gaiety and splendor. In Rome, Italy, it is known as the "Sunday of the Golden Rose" from the benediction on this day on that token (the golden rose) of the approbation of the Pope. This rose is presented to the most distinguished individual then in Rome, occasionally however it is sent to some foreign Potentate or other eminent personage. In Spain, this day was frequently termed "Mediante", because it exactly halved the old Spanish Lent. In Germany this Sunday is called "Todttensonntag", which means, "Dead man's Sunday". This dates from pagan times and the reason for the name is believed to be because of the procession representing the burial of winter and the return of summer. In the Eastern Church, the Thursday of the Mid-Lent week is called the "Thursday of the Great Canon", because the hymn of Saint Andrew of Crete, known by that name, is sung. The collect for today is taken from the Sacramentary of Gregory (Sarum Missal, 1549). Whoever uses this collect in sincerity must realize that in it we make a confession that punishment is deserved, "we, who for our evil deeds, deserve to be punished," this carrying us to the point that "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God". One may say that I have committed no great crime; can such an one say that never has been left undone the things that ought to have been done, or done the things that ought not to have been done? I believe the sins of omission are greater than the sins of commission. It is needless to dilate on either form of sin, but of how great importance it is that we pray that by "the comfort of Thy grace we may mercifully be relieved. How precious then should the gospel be to us which tells us over and over again of grace to help in time of need. It is because of this Divine grace bestowed and on our repentance that we receive relief from the guilt of sin, and day by day strength to overcome.

Bishop Brent---Ambassador of Christ

By

Frederick Ward Kates.

SIX years ago, March 27, in Lausanne, Switzerland, died one of the towering personalities of our time, Charles Henry Brent.

When we recall some of the greatest modern builders of the reign of God on earth, in human life, among men, the name of Bishop Brent flashes instantly upon our attention. All who knew this rare spirit, refined in the furnace of God, recognized one who had perfectly offered up his life, as a living sacrifice, on the altar of the service of God in this world.

Cardinal Mercier and Bishop Brent stand forth as pre-eminent Christian statesmen and leaders in recent years. Belgium and Europe may claim Mercier for their own, and Western New York is entitled to claim Bishop Brent as its own. The Episcopal Diocese of Western New York, out of which the Diocese of Rochester was formed in 1931, claims "Everybody's Bishop" as its fourth diocesan, from 1918-1929. But no corner of the world can claim him as exclusively its own. His home was in the Philippines, the Orient, Europe's battlefields, everywhere; he belonged to the world just as it belongs to the Master he passionately served the sixty-seven years of his life.

Bishop Brent's labors ended March 27, 1929. His life's forces were spent. He had exhausted his life's energies in performing his proper, spiritual service, which was, for him, giving in love to God his life as a living sacrifice in the struggle for the sacred rights of every man, of every race and birth and color; in seeking to redeem the world and society by Christianizing it; and by championing with the burning passion of a prophet the necessity of Christian unity and world peace.

His life was one of prayer and pain and constant dedication. It was a life centered in God, lived for God, with God and through God's power.

His last great sermon was preached in Canterbury Cathedral, November 25, 1928. His subject was, "The Way to Peace." Those who heard him speak that day listened not to a priest, a missionary, a war chaplain, or a bishop. They heard the God-sent words of a prophet.

In remembering this massive and mighty man of God who for many years moved among us in Western New York, it might be well to recall the two fundamental principles which Bishop Brent said would be the foundations of his life as the chief pastor of Western New York. These principles were enunciated at the acknowledgment service to him as Bishop of Western New York in St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, February 7, 1919.

"First, we must recognize in an active way in every department of society our God as one who knows humankind from the inside and has identified Himself with humankind. There is no hope for society without reincarnation in the life of each one of us. God has so identified Himself in our hearts that every pang in our hearts is in His heart."

"Second, God was made man in Jesus Christ, and, therefore, each individual is considered in God's sight, and is cared for as if he were the only one. And so ours must not be a selfish, individual life: we must recognize our relation to all mankind. This is the missionary spirit. In all we think or do, our nation is related to the nations of the world and in a way is responsible for their welfare."

Noteworthy, too, are almost the final sentences in his last message to his people written from Switzerland shortly before his death.

"Public worship . . . demands the most careful consideration that human life can give it. It is worship rather than preaching upon which the Church of God should centre its attention. Reverence is in itself the highest form of teaching. He who does not know how to worship cannot preach, even if he have the tongue of angels. Worship is a task which demands the highest artistic sense, the greatest love of beauty, the highest form of expression, the most appealing method of presentation, of which man is capable."

And we cannot forget: "It may be, it is, hard to pray well, but it is harder for a complex un-unified life to pray than for the simple and unlearned. It is more within the reach of a child than of a savant. But it is as available as it is indispensable for everyone. Put into sincere prayer the amount of effort you do into a game or into your business and you will prevail. To me prayer is the key that unlocks heaven and opens the door to the deep understanding of human life."

"Our use of the unseen stretches of life determines what we think, say and do in society. Given a right and industrious use of our conscious moments on the secret side of the veil, and all will be well in the burning noonday of active life. In those golden moments, contemplation and prayer, pertinacious and as unbroken as the links of an endless chain, stand in regal dignity governing the whole sweep of life."

As priest and prophet, Bishop Brent loved men all over the globe. The thousands of friends he left behind him when he went on ahead were loved by him, and they in turn remember him in love—remember Bishop Brent who was a majestic ambassador of Christ living in their midst.

FORWARD IN MISSIONS.

other hand you can think of the Church as an army enlisted under the banner of the King of Love and of Righteousness, pushing forward into the enemy's domain to overcome wrong, to free the captives of sin and the followers of inadequate philosophies of life, and to set at liberty all who are oppressed by the forces of ignorance, injustice and unrighteousness.

Some say: "Back to Christ and all will be well." The Christian Church says: "Forward to Christ." He is ever in the van. The Son of God is ever going forth to war against sin, oppression, poverty, ignorance and disease. He is ever seeking to lead men into a fuller, holier, happier life. His Kingdom is ever in the building. His love is ever winning new disciples in every land. So from the Church today rings out the call, "Forward with Christ."

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

A PHILOSOPHY OF PROGRAM BUILDING.

Edna B. Beardsley,
Assistant Secretary Woman's Auxiliary.

Our philosophy of program building has its basis in the newer conception that education is not preparation for life, but that education is a lifelong process. We respond with joy to the thought that we do not cease learning after we reach a certain definite age, and it is not necessary therefore to cram our minds while they are still young and flexible with enough to last during the remainder of our lives. In other words, we do not first learn that later we may do. We learn and accomplish at the same time. With such a basis for our thinking we realize that education is constantly required in the carrying out of any worthwhile enterprise—be it the sending of a box to a mission station, carrying on group discussion, or rebuilding an entire community life.

Our basic conceptions regarding the building of a program have completely changed, along with other developments in the field of education. Not long ago it seemed desirable that a program should be worked out in the utmost detail for at least a year in advance. Now we feel that a program should remain flexible enough to incorporate from time to time things that grow out of the experiences and development of the group. There was a time when large organizations sought for uniformity in the programs of their local groups. This was usually accomplished by programs planned at a central office and sent out to all types of groups. This often resulted in either a rather static program or a total repudiation of the program by the local group, "because it does not fit." The present day method of program building is based on the underlying principle that the group itself seeks to build a program which will make it an effective force in its own community and bring it in contact with the great forces at work in the world today. In order to accomplish this the group will need to understand its own potential resources and needs and something of the world in which it lives.

Among other changes in the theory of program building, is the change in the standards of judging a program. A "good" program may not necessarily leave everyone in a glow of satisfaction. It may possibly leave everyone quite unhappy—but thinking. The measure of the value of a program is whether we are doing any deeper or straighter thinking than before; whether we have grown to understand better our place and the place of the Church in the universal scheme; whether we have perhaps seen our community for the first time as it really is, and what we might mean to the community, the Church and the World. We may be greatly embarrassed and uncomfortable when we realize our individual and group inadequacy, but that in itself is a process of growth. Our desire for the women of the Church as groups, and as individuals, is that they shall grow. We desire that they may grow as our Lord grew, in knowledge and in strength, and in their relationship with God.

We often hear leaders say that "people are not interested." It is of value to us to remember that the learning process or the process of growth holds the interest and enlists new interest. It stirs the enthusiasm and gives a sense of movement forward. We reach out into all the areas of life for help in advancing the growth of our group—into science, philosophy, art, history, as well as the great field of religion. No one individual program is an end in itself, but part of a progression toward a chosen goal. What is this goal? That you must decide for yourself. One thing it will surely be—a step forward to the time when Christ shall truly reign in the hearts of His people.

BOOK REVIEWS

REV. STAMO S. SPATHEY, Editor.

THE GREAT COMMISSION: By the Rev. Henry W. Frost, D. D. Art Paper. Pp. 46. Published by The China Inland Mission, 237 West School Lane, Philadelphia, Penn. Price, 25 cents.

Those who know the missionary heart of Dr. Frost will readily anticipate the message in this little call.

We are all convicted of the fact that the single incentive to missions is the command. True believers are missionary-minded. Those who are apathetic or antagonistic belong to another class. God only knows where to catalogue them; we can only grieve, as He must, that they have lost the divine vision and are dead to the divine call.

There are nine illuminating chapters to this book, all absorbingly interesting and challenging. Its use in missionary meetings would prove of service in awakening the people of our parishes to a new and vivifying concept of the commission of our Lord Jesus to make Him known, near at hand and afar off.

THE PATH OF PROTESTANTISM: By Julius F. Seebach. Pp. 243. Published by The Round Table Press, New York. Price, $2.00.

Dr. Seebach, an able Lutheran minister who is the pastor of the Lutheran Memorial Church in Philadelphia, has made a fine contribution to the history of the Protestant section of Christianity in that he has traced its spirit and movements through the history of Christianity to the present day. His book is to be classed with history of the witness-bearing part of the Christian religion which is known as Protestantism.

The book displays a scholarly knowledge of historical documents well put together for the average reader. It also displays a very cordial spirit in treating all other branches of the Christian Church. The book is mostly taken with the history of Christianity in the United States which the reader will find in the chapter, "Roadmaking in the New World," page 53, following. All the sources of cults and movements are traced to their origin briefly but comprehensively. The breaking away from the sources is treated in chapter IV entitled, "The Forks in the Road," an interesting outline of all the cults that have crept in this country is found in chapter VI, "Private Lanes." This is very informative.

Every one who wishes to read a historical sketch of the Protestant part of Christianity with many quotations from historical sources, we know of no better book than this. A storehouse of information which we recommend to our readers.

PRIZE SERMONS, Church Management Contest, compiled and edited by William H. Leach. Published by The Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tennessee. Pp. 222. Price, $1.50.

This volume contains seventeen sermons selected out of five hundred by a board of distinguished judges as a sample of modern American preaching. The group does not contain a sermon by an Episcopal minister, all the other churches are represented in the selection. The sub-title seems to be misleading, "Church Management Contest." In reality, the sermons are not treating church management as we might think when reading the sub-title, "Church Management." They discuss various subjects of both personal and organized Christianity. The sermon on "The Margin of Goodness," by Professor W. O. Carrington, of Howard University, won the first prize, and rightly so. The text is from Matthew 5:20. The treatment is very good. Its illustrative references from many sources are interesting and apt.

Ministers will find a suggestive method of how to present the Gospel to the modern world in ways people may understand. In this variety of preachers and subjects there is a uniting link that makes the volume one book, and that is ". . . . that we may become partners of God in building an enduring spiritual order." Page 211. This means the Kingdom of God among men.

A VALUED TESTIMONIAL AND SUGGESTIONS.

Central China College.
Wuchang, China.
February 17, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

I have been reading the Anniversary Number of the Southern Churchman and have enjoyed the testimonials sent in by many Bishops and others to its great value as a family paper.

Perhaps one of its greatest contributions to American History was the help it gave to the continuance of Our Church as One Church during and after the War.

There is one note, however, which I miss and would like to stress, and that is, the marvelous emphasis that has been given to Stories for Children. If that page, "For the Young People" were left out, I believe there would be a decided falling off in the number of subscribers. Not only have Nancy Bird Turner and others written specially for this page, but young children have been encouraged to do the same. Our little daughter's story on "Kittens", which she wrote at the age of eight, was printed and gave her a thrill when she read it in Wuchang, China, 1919. One of Dr. Claude Lee's daughters wrote about Chinese customs for your paper years ago and I've no doubt many others have done the same. It made the paper belong to them.

My mother found less of controversy and more spiritual food in your paper than in some others and surely it is spiritual food that we need.

People sometimes ask why we take the Southern Churchman. For one thing you always print missionary items we send you, if possible. But first and foremost, I value the paper for its children's stories, of which I have a large collection.

May I offer a suggestion? Why not mark this year by publishing a volume called "Best Stories from One Hundred Years of the Southern Churchman." It ought to be in every family—not only of our Church but of many others.

With best wishes for a widening influence in the future, I am,

Gertrude Carter Gilman.

P. S.—Dr. Wei's address January 12, 1935, was of great value to us in China.

The Kingdom of God Movement, Church Union, Central Theme.

The Kingdom of God, not only a future destiny but a present reality, has been the theme of a five-year movement in Japan in which most of the Christian groups have taken part. Surveying results, at a recent meeting of leaders, Bishop Matsui of Tokyo advocated united effort in evangelism; a Methodist bishop, Dr. Akazawa, pleaded for Christians to avoid ultra-nationalism and work as a unit for world peace; a veteran Japanese leader of the Congregationalists, Dr. Ebina, also insisted upon the need of a cooperative evangelism; Professor Murata, acting head of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary, declared a more militant attitude necessary for the Church, especially for the solving of social problems.

Dr. Tagawa, president of the National Christian Council, spoke of an "all-Japan Christian conference" to be held in 1935, at which "Church Union" is to be the central subject. A member of Japan's parliament commended the impression made in rural sections by the Kingdom of God Movement, but believed that much more definite work should be done "to demonstrate that Christianity can actually save rural Japan."

A woman leader, Mrs. Kubushiro, calling attention to the fact that all Japan's famous mountain tops and other scenic sites are preempted by Buddhist and Shinto shrines, pressed upon the group the desirability of having Christian shrines wherever pilgrims congregate and in every city a prominent place of Christian worship. Dr. William Axling of the Baptist Mission, author of a popular biography of Kagawa, reminded the gathering that the Christian movement, though a minority, is the most dynamic and creative group in Japan.

Annual Council in Brazil.

The thirty-seventh annual Council of the Brazilian Episcopal Church met at Ascension Church, Porto Alegre, in February 13-17.

Among the more important happenings were:

First, the appointment of a committee to carry out a two-year program of spiritual development along the lines of the Forward Movement. This committee is composed of the Rev. George U. Krischke, rector of Trinity Church, Porto Alegre, the Rev. Orlando Baptista, new headmaster of the Southern Cross School, and Dr. Luiz Appel. The committee is to plan a program of studies and speakers to embrace the whole District.

Secondly, the Council adopted and approved the report of the Missionary Society, including its budget and program of work for the current year. A part of this program includes the full payment of the quota of the Brazil District to the National Council.

Thirdly, the Council adopted the recommendations of a committee appointed a year ago to study the whole question of progressive self-support. This committee had reported a series of recommendations as follows:

1. That the self-supporting parishes maintain their contributions made up to the present time for the support of the clergy;

2. That the congregations not yet self-supporting increase their contributions towards the support of the clergy according to a sliding scale. The scale includes every mission in the District;

3. That each parish in addition to these contributions pay the seven and one-half per cent due the Pension Fund;

4. That in every parish, congregation or mission, there be created and intensified the spirit of general cooperation in the work of the Church and that the members be taught to contribute liberally towards the support of the clergy as a means not only of hastening the independence of the Church, but also of stabilizing its establishment in Brazil.

Statistical reports show gratifying increases in the number of public services, in the total number of communicants, in the number of pupils in the day schools, as also a slight increase in total receipts in Brazilian currency.

Southern Cross School.

The Rev. Orlando Baptista has been appointed by Bishop Thomas as headmaster of the Southern Cross School.

The Rev. Mr. Baptista graduated from the Southern Cross School in 1919. From 1920 to 1927, he taught French and History in the same school. From 1928 to 1932 he studied theology at Porto Alegre and Virginia.

Returning from the United States, after a short rectorate at the Church of the Saviour, Rio Grande, he was called to the Church of the Mediator, Santa Maria, whence he comes to the School.

THE GLEAM IN LEGEND.

(An Inspirational Program.)

There is a tendency to build stories around well-known persons and even things, that has constructed some very beautiful tales in the course of history and the cup that Jesus used when He instituted the Holy Communion is no exception. So in this program we shall tell first of all the story of the grail in legend, then in history and finally its story today.

Legend tell us that when Jesus was praying that He might have strength that the angels brought Him the Holy Grail wondrously fashioned by their hands out of a solid emerald. So that when Jesus came to the Passover He brought it there and used it for the first time when He instituted the Sacrament. When Jesus had finished the Last Supper and was going out to the Garden of Gethsemane, He met Joseph of Arimathea and gave him the cup as a token of His love, and Joseph cherished it. Later, when Jesus was going out to be crucified, Joseph followed with the cup concealed in a fold of his clothes. When Jesus was crucified, Joseph was standing beholding with the cup in his hand, and when the soldier pierced His side and blood and water gushed out, Joseph caught some of it in the cup and the miraculous blood glistened and gleamed like fires in the cup. This part of the legend is probably either the reason for, or built up by, the custom of the sanctuary light that is burning in certain Churches whenever the consecrated elements are upon the altar.

In this connection it is interesting to note that in ancient times with the ignorance of anatomy people pictured the Master on the cross with the wound on His right side, thinking that the heart was on the right. But more modern painters have, of course, painted the wound on His left side, where the heart really is.

Joseph now begs the spear from the soldier, and keeps both the spear and cup. Later so many miracles were wrought by the sight of these relics that the Jewish authorities tried to get hold of them and destroy them. So Joseph took a boat and sailed away to Britain. He landed at Glastonberry on the West Coast and struck the spear in the earth. It took root, so that he considered the miracle a sign that he should stop there and preach to the Savage Britons. The spear was of thorn wood, and every year blossoms at Christmas at Glastonberry. A cutting from it was carried to the Washington Cathedral and is growing there today.

After Joseph died, men were so wicked that the Knights of the Temple were formed to care for the Grail, and for safe-keeping they took it to Asia Minor, where it was set in the Window of a Castle where its gleam could be seen for miles around. Later wicked men tried to steal it so that angels took it away and hid it so in a place where no one could see it unless their hearts were perfectly pure.

All through the middle ages there were many times when men went hunting for this secret hiding place. The quest of the Knights of King Arthur when Sir Galahad was successful was one of these. We remember that of him it was said, "His strength was as the strength of ten, because his heart was pure." One of the causes that helped the crusades was that men thought that by going on the crusade they might see the Grail and also just as we believe that a man should have the right to religious liberty, so the thought that every person should have the right to seek the Grail, and that anyone who tried to keep them from this search was most unjust.

And so the legend ends as an exhortation to us to have pure hearts so that we may some day see the Grail and so we sing the song, "Follow the Gleam."

The Gleam in History.

Though the story of the Grail is very interesting, we can all realize that it is filled with all sorts of things that could not possibly have happened. Yet, there may well have been a tiny bit of truth in the tale. For instance, the emerald part of it might come from its having been made of glass which was fairly cheap in those days, for we remember the Jews had all sorts of Roman conveniences, and as Jesus and His friends were poor, it was probably either of glass or lead, the two cheapest substances. If it was of glass and was taken among Savages in far-away Britain, we can well imagine their confusing its sentimental value with the value of the emerald, a very precious stone.

Then, too, historians tell us that the earliest center of Christianity in England was at Glastonberry, so that it is not impossible that Joseph did carry it there, just as an outlaw, and the early Christians being persecuted were outlaws, might today fly to a most distant land for safety, and Britain was the most distant land known to man, even by hearsay at that time.

Later we can well imagine that wicked men may have tried to steal the Grail and hold it for ransom, so that it was taken to a place of safety.

A few years ago there was discovered a Communion cup in Antioch that many people consider may well be the actual cup used by the Master. It is of lead or some base metal, but has been protected by a silver cover of marvelous carving. The style of the cup and of the carving shows that the cover was not made later than 150 A. D. and being a cheap thing in a precious case, shows that it was highly regarded. In addition to this Antioch was one of the earliest centers of Christianity and may thus well have been the secret hiding place. The Antioch Chalice, as it was called, was on exhibit in the Hall of Religion at the World's Fair in Chicago.

The Gleam in Modern Times.

Today the cup is in the realm of teaching from three angles.

The first of these is connected with the recent Prohibition Law. With fight for Temperance several churches have said that they thought Jesus must have used unfermented grape juice, as wine was wicked. So they said they would use only unfermented grape juice in their communions. Others say that we should not change the old custom of communion wine, which means fermented grape juice, so we keep the old custom.

Another thing that has brought the Chalice into prominence is the furor that has arisen in many places over sanitation. For many claim that we should not drink from a common cup at the Holy Communion any more than at any other time. So they say that we should either use a number of individual cups, or else dip the bread in the wine and give it in that way. The fact in this controversy is often overlooked that Episcopal ministers must, by law, always drink the last drops of wine, so that if it were dangerous they should be an unhealthy lot. But they are one of the best life insurance risks that there are.

The last matter concerning modern times is that the Roman Catholic Church does not give the cup to the people at the communion. Only the officiating priest takes the wine. Now, up until the eleventh century, this custom was not common and only became a law in that church in 1415. Many people objected strongly to the change and in Bohemia, under John Huss the "common cup" was one of the battle cries of the Reformation. The Protestant soldiers wore the cup on their shoulders as their uniform. But the Reformation was conquered in that land for about three hundred years. But with the World War the Bohemians won their freedom from Roman Catholic tyranny by Austria and formed the Country of Czechoslovakia. One of the first things they did was to reform their Church and give the cup to the people. Their Church is now in communion with the Eastern Orthodox Church, and it is hoped that the entire Eastern Church will soon be in full communion with our Church, one of whose slogans at the time of the Reformation was also "The cup to the people."

In the Young People's Work, we find that not only is there different nomenclature as regards the Provincial and Diocesan Departments, in one section it being called Young People's Fellowship, and in another Young People's Service League, but there are also several different diocesan plans. In an early number we hope to give "The Georgia Plan," and also variations that have been found successful in certain parishes. Let us make this page an exchange of methods page as well as one for programs.—The Editor.

Not only by blue Galilee
Did he the leper cleanse, the dead
Raise unto life, and on all hearts
That mourned, His matchless glory shed;
Today he speaks, in homes of men,
To heal each spirit sick with sin,
And at the door of every life
He stands and seeks to enter in.

—MacGowen.

We come to church primarily to worship God, to humble ourselves in His presence, to feel anew the power of His love and to become more conscious of the spiritual influences in life. We gather together not as members of a religious club, nor as an audience at a lecture or concert. But as followers of Jesus we bow in adoration before the God and Father of all mankind.—Exchange.

A LENTEN VISITOR.

"Behold I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."—Rev. 3:20.

This is the season when we are visited, in a very special manner, by the greatest friend we have; and that friend is with us, in this very special manner, for at least forty days. St. Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles and greatest theologian that ever lived, tells us in his epistle to the Corinthians what that greatest friend is. It is Love—The love of God, the sacrificial love of Christ, the mother love of the Church, the evangelizing love of the Apostles, and, it should be the love of all Christian people for all mankind. There is nothing greater in heaven than this friend, and there can be nothing greater on earth: for God is love. How, then, should we appreciate the presence of that friend with us? How should we show that appreciation? By acting in accord with the teaching of Discipleship. Discipleship literature has been sent out by the Church to all communicants. That literature is, what it is designed to be, an aid and inspiration for more unselfish service—Discipleship, in doing as Jesus did—for others. In His service, self is only an instrument for doing good. Love is the only passport to heaven; it is the only currency of heaven; we cannot live in heaven without love. Joining the Church to be saved is not love, it is selfishness; joining the Church to obtain the equipment to help others—that is love; and that is what Lent is for, what Discipleship is for, what Jesus came to earth for. And now abideth faith, hope, love: but the greatest of these is love!

UNEARTH ARCHAEOLOGICAL DATA AT JAMESTOWN.

The excavating which has been under way on Jamestown Island, site of the first permanent English settlement in America, has brought to light much data that is of interest. In the course of this excavation many tons of debris have been dug up and sifted for fragments which might prove of value. There have been uncovered the foundations of seventeen old houses, including one structure 50 by 70 feet. This may have been the mansion of an early royal governor. Gradually built up between the years 1607 and 1676, Jamestown was destroyed by fire during Nathaniel Bacon's rebellion. The little city was rebuilt, but suffered again in the fire of 1699, and gradually fell into ruin when the seat of the Virginia government was removed to Williamsburg. Only about a half dozen buildings were standing at the beginning of the Revolution, and the tides of the James River have, during the centuries, eaten away a large portion of that part of the island on which most of the houses stood. We are told by Floyd Flickinger, the superintendent of the Colonial National Monument, that "there is evidence of several successive settlements on the Jamestown site. The houses of each settlement are orientated differently and constructed differently of different materials."

THANK OFFERING FOR THE KING'S SILVER JUBILEE.

The Prince of Wales has once again captured the imagination of the country with his plan for a national thank offering for the King's Silver Jubilee. At an influential meeting at St. James' Palace, his Royal Highness intimated that nothing else would give the King and Queen such pleasure as the devotion of a national thank offering to the welfare of the younger generation. The Prince has decided to invite subscriptions to be sent to him personally, but he hopes that local funds will be inaugurated as well in order "to make it easy for everyone to contribute who desires to do so—pennies as well as pounds."

Details of the scheme have not been worked out, but the project will appeal to all sections.

"My desire," says the Prince, "is that the thank offering should be used to establish a 'King George's Jubilee Trust', whose work will be not to inaugurate any new juvenile organizations, but to extend the work and activities of the existing voluntary movements".

His Royal Highness has given us a courageous lead, which the country will follow wholeheartedly.—Exch.

GOOD MANNERS IN NOTTINGHAM.

This is from a Nottingham reader, proud of her fellow citizens:

"One day this week there was a traffic jam in the business street in Nottingham. A hearse, bearing a flower-covered coffin, came to swell the number of waiting vehicles. The policeman saluted; the crowd parted; and the first vehicle to be allowed to move on was the hearse."—Church of England Newspaper.

"DE LAWD" GOES TO ETERNAL PASTURES.

Richard Berry Harrison, who acted the role of God in "The Green Pastures", has passed on to his eternal pastures. Harrison had never missed playing his part in this now famous production, until his recent illness; and even then he refused to believe that he would not soon be back on the stage. He was laid to rest in Lincoln Cemetery in Chicago, "after the most impressive ceremony ever accorded a member of the negro race" in that city. Some twenty thousand persons, including government representatives, were in attendance at the last rites. Possibly his life was best summed up by one of his own race, who, as the funeral procession passed by, was heard to remark, "He was 'De Lawd' at all times."—Ex.

A GALLANT YOUNG GROUP.

Some thirty or forty young men and women, mostly American-born of Slavonic parentage, have organized a choir under the direction of Alexander Koshets, which has been rehearsing for several months and is to give its first public concert in St. Michael's Episcopal Church, New York City, on Wednesday, April 3, at 8 P. M. Professor Koshets, their leader, returns to choral work after an absence of several years, since he became internationally known as leader of the Ukrainian National Chorus.

The choir, which is entirely volunteer and non-commercial, has a double purpose; its members sing for their own enjoyment, but they also hope that they may make a contribution to American life through their knowledge of Russian music. They feel that, although several famous choirs and other groups of Russian singers have visited this country and have been well received, their contribution has not made the permanent impress which might be made by a native-born and resident choir.

Peter M. Fekula, an American business man, whose father is a Russian priest in the United States, has organized and befriended the choir, from similar motives of wanting the glories of Russian Church music and other Slavonic singing to be presented in the United States by singers brought up in the tradition.

The Rev. Thomas McCandless, rector of St. Michael's Church, has invited the Slavonic Choir there for the concert on April 3. Individuals who heard them rehearsing report with enthusiasm on the finished quality of their singing.

GLOBE-TROTTING MISSIONER ONE-MAN PASSION PLAY CAST.

The Rev. Walter E. Bentley, seventy-year-old missioner and globe-trotter from New York City, who features a one-man presentation of the Oberammergau Passion Play, is appearing this week at St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, Akron, Ohio.

With the help of 160 colored slides depicting various scenes in the great drama, experience from having seen it three times in Germany, acting ability, and a vivid imagination, the Rev. Mr. Bentley has given his special interpretation of the Passion Play all over the world.

Speaks Every Part.

"I read the lines and speak the parts of all the characters as I show the slides on the screen," declares this Englishman who has known the smell of grease paint and the glare of footlights for over fifty years. "The action all has to be imagined."

The Rev. Mr. Bentley was connected with the Shakespearean repertoire of the noted Sir Henry Irving when he got his call to the ministry.

"After I was ordained, I naturally couldn't lose my love for the theatre, so I brought the stage and church together."

He organized the Actors' Church Alliance, which subsequently split up into three parts, the Episcopal Actors Guild, the Catholic Actors Guild, and the Jewish Theatrical Guild.

Fifteen years ago, the Rev. Mr. Bentley decided to relinquish his pulpit in New York and "take to the road" as a missioner. "Since that time," he says, "I have traveled completely around the world three times."

The Rev. Walter E. Bentley, General Missioner and rector-emeritus of St. Stephen's Church, Port Washington, L. I., after a year's absence holding Missions and giving his Oberammergau Passion Play Lecture throughout the Virgin Islands, Porto Rico, British West Indies and thirty-five parishes in England, has returned to this country and already held successful Missions in Trinity Church, Elmira, N. Y.; Church of the Saviour, Philadelphia, Pa.; Church of the Mediator, Allentown, Pa., and is now at St. Andrew's Church, Akron, Ohio, to be followed by Missions at Christ Church, Riverdale, New York City, Church of the Redeemer, Astoria, and Ozone Park, L. I.

His present address is Box 55, New Dorp, S. I., New York City.

GOOD FRIDAY OFFERING FOR HOLY LAND.

All Churches in Anglican Communion Asked Again to Devote Offering to Jerusalem and the East Mission.

Once again the offerings of the Church at the Good Friday services to be held throughout the world are asked for the work of the Jerusalem and the East Mission. This annual offering is sanctioned by the National Council, regulated by the General Convention and commended by the Woman's Auxiliary.

Knowledge of the splendid work of the Jerusalem and the East Mission is growing. An increase last year of over one hundred and fifty in the number of parishes and missions contributing to the Good Friday Offering, not only arrested the decline in receipts of recent years, but marked a vigorous upturn. The amount received for 1934 was $16,778.72, an increase of $1,135.06 over the total for 1933. . . .

Reasons for Offering.

The primary reason, we would say, is that we may have a share in witnessing to the Gospel of Jesus Christ throughout the Holy Land. Here there may be found over 5,000 Anglicans, both British and American, among them being a goodly number of converts from Islam and Judaism. Here, too, come thousands of English and American pilgrims and visitors each year, who look to the Church to help interpret the religious values of the country and provide religious services. Only the Anglican Communion, it is said, which sympathizes with the Christians of the various Eastern Orthodox Churches, and refrains from proselytizing them, is able to meet their needs and minister to their physical intellectual and spiritual lives.

Center of Jewish Life.

And then again we find in the Holy Land the center of Jewish life and aspiration. To this life we would interpret our Lord as the Messiah of their fondest hopes. Also Jerusalem is the only Moslem City open to Christians, we are bound to represent as worthily as possible the fullness of the Gospel and the true teaching of the Son of God.

The Diocese of Jerusalem is not an English diocese, and it is not on British territory. Palestine is a temporarily mandated country. Syria is a French mandate and Iraq is an independent Arab kingdom. Only Cyprus is British territory.

The diocese is designedly the representative of the whole Anglican Communion in the Holy City of our Faith. For nearly half a century since its reorganization its support has come from all parts of world-wide Anglican Churches, from America, Australia, South Africa, China, Japan, as well as from the British Isles.

For many years the American Church has had a part in the work of the Christian Church in Palestine. Today she has an opportunity, nay more, a duty, to keep alive the glories of the Gospel in this most sacred of all lands, the one blessed by the feet of the Incarnate Son of God, the Motherland of world-wide Christendom, to which we owe an incalculable debt for the treasures of our religion.

To this end we are asked to make an offering on Good Friday.—The Church Herald, Diocese of Florida.

Forward Movement Presented.

On March 12, in Charleston, the Forward Movement was presented to the Kanawha Clericus by the Rev. Walter F. Tunks, Akron, Ohio, member of the Forward Movement Commission. As an outcome of the conference, Bishop Gravatt will appoint a diocesan committee to act for the commission within the Diocese until the annual Council convenes. Dr. Tunks accepted the invitation to present the Movement before the Council in Moundsville, W. Va., May 7-9. A message declaring their full support of the Movement was sent Bishop Hobson by the Kanawha Clericus.

Noon Day Services in Y. M. C. A.

Rev. C. W. Brickman, rector of Christ Church, Fairmont, is preaching a series of sermons in the Fairmont Y. W. C. A. on Friday noons on the topic: "Adventures in Living." The noon day services were inaugurated by the Rev. Mr. Brickman three years ago. They are the only Lenten noon day services, apart from the Church's Holy Week services, held in the city, and each year grow more in public favor.

Informal Services.

On Wednesday evenings during Lent Trinity Church, Morgantown, holds informal services, with reviews and readings of "Plays With Religious Meanings". Plays reviewed this season include: "The Book of Job," "Within the Gates", Sean O'Casey; "Days Without End", Eugene O'Neil; "The Devil Passes", Ben Levy; "Death Takes a Holiday," A. Cassela; "The Terrible Meek", C. R. Kennedy; "Green Pastures', Marc Connelly. Professors and students of the University of West Virginia have been procured by the rector, Rev. Wm. G. Gehri, to read and review the plays. These Wednesday night services are of especial value and interest to the University students.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman D. D. Bishop.

Saturday Afternoon Sermons.

The Bishop of Washington, the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., is delivering a series of sermons on Sunday afternoons during Lent in the Cathedral on "Indispensable Religious Standards". His first sermon in the series was on "A Regulated Life". Dr. D. A. McGregor and Dr. E. B. Niver are also delivering a special series of sermons at the Cathedral during Lent.

Among the Washington Diocesan clergy scheduled to speak during the Lenten season in Annapolis are the following: Revs. Wm. R. Moody, Oliver J. Hart, Henry Teller Cocke and Thos. F. Opie. Dr. C. Sturges Ball, of the Virginia Seminary, is also one of the preachers at Annapolis.

In opposition to the bill for easier divorce in the District of Columbia, recently introduced in Congress, a number of Washington ministers have launched a vigorous campaign of protest.

Jewish Convention in Capital.

Bishop Freeman was one of the invited speakers on the program of the National Jewish Convention in Washington, March 22 to 25. The convention was made up of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, the National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods and the National Federation of Temple Brotherhoods. It drew nearly fifteen hundred delegates to the Capital City from all parts of the country.

Nation-Wide Campaign to Revive Religious Life.

On May 9 several hundred religious leaders, representing Jewish, Catholic and Protestant groups, will assemble in Washington for the purpose of launching a nation-wide campaign to revive the religious life of the nation. The meeting will be under the direction of the National Committee for Religious and Welfare Recovery. The purpose is to enlist individuals for welfare and church work and to increase church membership in all parts of the United States.

Motion Picture Bill Introduced in Congress.

Following up the nation-wide movement to improve motion picture standards, a bill has just been introduced in Congress to eliminate the system of "block-booking" and "blind selling" of motion picture films in inter-state commerce. Representative Pettengill, of Indiana, introduced the bill, which would enable local managers of picture houses to rent such films as they elect, rather than being compelled to buy in blocks of films. Diocese of Washington Oversubscribes Pledge.

The Diocese of Washington by reducing its own missionary budget for 1935 was able to pledge to the National Council for its Emergency Budget the 25 per cent increase promised by its deputies to the Triennial Convention last October.

They have also added to this a pledge of $2,900 toward the Challenge and to increase this.

Great Sorrow in the Diocesan Family.

This diocese was inexpressibly saddened by a most distressing accident that occurred near Lynchburg Tuesday, March 19, in which five persons lost their lives; among them Miss Mary Janney Barnwell, daughter of the Rev. Dr. Carleton Barnwell, rector of St. Paul's Church, Lynchburg, and Mrs. Barnwell.

Miss Barnwell, not quite seventeen years of age, had been at home for the spring vacation and was being taken back by a party of friends to St. Mary's School at Raleigh, N. C. At a point some twenty miles south of Lynchburg their car collided on a curve with another being driven in the opposite direction by Mr. C. T. Smart, salesman for a Chattanooga medicine company. Mr. Smart was thrown out in the road and lived only a few minutes.

The car in which the Lynchburg young people were riding caught fire almost instantly and was completely burned. No one saw the wreck occur, but several persons heard the crash. A large crowd quickly assembled, but could do nothing in the way of rescue on account of the intense heat from the fire. From various indications it appeared probable that all in the car were instantly killed by the impact or else were rendered unconscious before the fire started.

The others in the car with Miss Barnwell were Miss Mary Scott Ligon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Scott Ligon; William Cary Barker, Jr., son of the Rev. and Mrs. W. Cary Barker, and William Caskie Watts, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Owen Watts.

Funeral services for Miss Barnwell were conducted in St. Paul's Church Wednesday at 1:00 P. M., by the Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., assisted by the Rev. Robert A. Magill of St. John's Church, and the Rev. Richard H. Lee of Grace Memorial Church, Lynchburg. The Bishop, Mr. Magill and Mr. Lee and Mrs. Oscar deWolf Randolph accompanied Dr. and Mrs. Barnwell to Alexandria, Virginia, where the interment took place Thursday morning. In the committal service, Bishop Jett was assisted by the Rev. Dr. Wallace E. Rollins, Dean of Virginia Seminary.

Dr. Barnwell's brother, the Rt. Rev. Middleton S. Barnwell, D. D., of Idaho, was unable to be present for the funeral of his niece, but will stop in Lynchburg about the end of March on his way to the Diocese of Georgia, of which he was recently elected Bishop Coadjutor.

At 5 P. M. Wednesday, there was a joint service for the three companions of Miss Barnwell at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Owen Watts, with interment at Lynchburg. The wife of Mr. Smart was a guest at a hotel in Lynchburg, and took his remains to Fort Worth, Texas, for burial.

The love and sympathy of this entire diocese go out to Dr. and Mrs. Barnwell in the loss of their only child and to all the other families so terribly distressed.

CENTRAL NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. H. Coley, D. D., Suffragan

The Social Service Quarterly.

The second number of the Social Service Quarterly, published at the Ember Seasons by the Department of Social Service of the Diocese of Central New York, has just been received. This little pamphlet contains several interesting articles. One is written by the Rev. Frederick C. Ransier, who is in charge of four rural misions in this diocese. Mr. Ransier was assigned to this mission field eighteen years ago. He is the Parson of Northern Central New York. During his incumbency, the four mission churches have been thoroughly renovated, two of them twice, and a small endowment fund has been started. He has never been absent one Sunday from this work, nor late for a service. He has had a total of 356 Baptisms and presented 295 persons for Confirmation. There have been 300 burials and about 120 marriages. Mr. Ransier also tells in his article several amusing incidents which have occurred during his work in this isolated field.

Other articles are, Good Form in Social Service and Discussion of Two Cases Recently Completed. Several books dealing with Social Service Work are reviewed.

A Country Parson.

Here is another tale about a country parson of Central New York. The Rev. George H. MacNish (who by the way is a great-great-grandson of the famous Presbyterian clergyman, MacNish, who refused to surrender his church in Jamaica, New York, to Samuel Seabury, who afterward became the first Bishop of Connecticut), plays the part of a hero. Arriving home rather late, or perhaps early, from one of the social affairs in this Lake Town of Cleveland, he prepared to retire. The faint aroma of burning wood reached his nostrils. He investigated and discovered that the century-old hotel, where he lived, was on fire. He awakened the guests and all were saved. The hotel was ruined and Mr. MacNish lost his personal belongings, including a library of 800 books. The Rev. Mr. MacNish is an author of no mean ability. He has written philosophical works, a book on the Ductless Glands and several novels. His manuscript copy of a new book on the Way Out of the Present Economic Disaster, was lost.

Church Messenger.

The publication of the Diocesan paper, The Church Messenger, will be continued. The main article of this month's isue is The Bishop Chats Again.

The Annual Convention of the Diocese of Central New York, will meet in St. Paul's Church, Syracuse, New York, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 14 and 15. The Rev. Henry H. Hadley, D. D., is rector of the parish.

Girls' Friendly Society.

The Girls' Friendly Society reports steady progress in its work throughout the diocese. There are thirty-two active branches. There are now in the diocese a total of 1,516 members, including 186 probationers, 297 candidates, 727 members, together with honorary associates, active associates, and other workers.

The Rev. Joseph R. Clair, rector of St. Mark's Church, Syracuse, has been elected as honorary member of the Sons of St. George.

The Rev. Mark Lambert, student pastor at Cornell University, reports 630 students at the University recorded as Episcopalians. Of these, 203 are in the freshman class.

The annual diocesan meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary will be held in Trinity Church, Syracuse, May 23. The Woman's Auxiliary of the Fourth District will be the hostess.

Trinity Church, Binghamton, has received a beautiful silk pall, the gift of Mrs. Lewis Seymore, in memory of her brother, Arthur Brattle Wells.

The late Mr. George P. Meade, of Oxford, leaves St. Paul's Church in that village a legacy of five thousand dollars, with an additional five thousand dollars from a trust fund, contingent upon the death of his widow, while the parish is also one of the residuary legatees.

PENNSYLVANIA

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop.

Principal of St. Faith's, Yangchow, Guest Speaker at Conference of Girls' Friendly Society.

Pictures and costumes dealing with the life and work of Christian missionaries in China, together with a description of the service which missionaries are called upon to give under existing conditions in that land was presented March 28, at a Missionary Supper Conference by the Diocesan Girls' Friendly Society in the Parish House of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Philadelphia.

Miss M. Althea Bremer, principal of St. Faith's School for Girls, Yangchow, in this city on furlough, was the guest speaker. Interest in Miss Bremer's meeting with the Girls' Friendly Society is intensified among all the various Branches of the society throughout the diocese by reason of the recent appointment as her assistant of Miss Florence Moore, of the Church of the Epiphany, West Philadelphia, who volunteered for service and is now in China. The Girls' Friendly Society is undertaking the support of the Philadelphia girl as a part of the Society's contribution to the missionary work of the Episcopal Church.

Miss Bremer, who is a graduate of Goucher College and Columbia University, is the founder of St. Faith's School. She went as a missionary to China in 1914 and devoted herself to the building up of the school. She saw the school go to smash in the troubles of 1927, when Yangchow was overrun by soldiers and the school compound was occupied by no less than twenty-six different detachments of invading troops. For five years the school was closed. Yangchow pleaded for its reopening. Finally this was done and since then, until the appointment of Miss Moore of Philadelphia, Miss Bremer was the only American on the school staff.

In St. Faith's School, Chinese girls are taught regular courses from the first grade through junior high. The staff includes seven full-time Chinese instructors, four of them men, and four half-time Chinese teachers, in addition to Miss Bremer and Miss Moore. The latter, who arrived in China about a month ago, is now in the Language School where she is becoming familiarized with the Chinese language.

Miss Lindley Guest Speaker.

In February the Woman's Auxiliary of Emmanuel Chapel, Theological Seminary, in connection with the Junior Woman's Auxiliary, had a very interesting meeting. Miss Grace Lindley, our Executive Secretary, was the guest speaker.

The Auxiliaries from Alexandria, Clarendon, Vienna, Falls Church and Fairfax, were invited. Over seventy were present.

The two branches served tea afterwards.

This was a delightful opportunity for the members of the neighboring organizations to meet each other and also hear Miss Lindley's message. We wish we could do it oftener.

One Day Institute.

On March 1, the Woman's Auxiliary of the Valley Convocation held a One-Day Institute in Christ Episcopal Church, Luray, Virginia. The day began with the celebration of the Holy Communion at 10 A. M. The Rev. Charles Leavell of Elkton, Virginia, assisted the rector, the Rev. Paul E. Shultz. Following this, Mrs. J. A. Welbourne, of Leesburg, Virginia, our new Educational Secretary, was introduced and conducted the Study Class on Japan.

The morning session was given entirely to the study book—with short intermissions between each session for the people to examine the many interesting things from Japan that Mrs. Welbourne had on display, including pictures, clothing, beautiful tapestries, etc.

Luncheon was served at the rectory. During this time, Mrs. Welbourne wore her Japanese costume and demonstrated how the Japanese sit on the floor. At two o'clock we again went to the church and continued with the study book.

Our President, Mrs. Barton, attended the meeting. Between sessions she spoke of the work of the Woman's Auxiliary; its great opportunities and rare privileges and encouraged each Branch to be more and more faithful to the Master—realizing that we are co-workers together with Him.

At the close of the meeting some of the Juniors came in. Mrs. Welbourne showed them many beautiful things from Japan, and we all left feeling that we knew a great deal more about Japan than we did when we came.

There were representatives from Winchester, Lynwood, Rocky Bar, Ingham, Piney Grove, Yancey, Tanner's Ridge and Luray.

These days are certainly worthwhile and we wish we might have more of them.

Mrs. Paul E. Shultz.

Hanover District Laymen's Association of Rappahannock Valley Convocation.

The spring meeting of Hanover District of this Association will held at Fork Church Parish House, Thursday, April 4, 1935, with supper at 7 P. M., fifty cents each. Postal notices have been mailed to all eligible members (sixteen or over). After supper a business meeting will be held and several very important subjects will be discussed.

The speaker for the evening will be the Rev. Herbert A. Donovan, for seven years a missionary and superintendent of a district in Liberia. He is a forceful speaker, and we feel sure you will be interested in his message.

In this district we have approximately 125 eligible members, and we are asking for 100 per cent attendance.

Will you, therefore, do your utmost to set aside this evening, April 4, as a special time to learn more of our work and by your presence and counsel help us to go forward.

The Church today needs every man in his place and at work.

Program of Arrangements for the Commemoration of the 150th Anniversary of the Organization of the Diocese of New York.

At the Convention of the Diocese in 1934, the Committee on the Observance of the Anniversary, presented its report, which was adopted by the Convention. The Commemoration will follow the lines of this Report.

The key-note of the Commemoration is to be "Thankfulness for the years that are past, and Faith and Courage for the years to come."

At the annual dinner of the Church Club of New York at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel on January 29, the note of the Anniversary was strongly emphasized. At this dinner, which was a great diocesan gathering, the speakers were the president of the club, Mr. Edward K. Warren; the bishop of the diocese, the bishop of Connecticut, and Dr. Francis Parkman, Headmaster of St. Mark's School, Southborough, Massachusetts.

The principal Commemoration will be at the meeting of the Diocesan Convention in May, which is most appropriate as the Anniversary celebrates not the founding of the Church in New York, which took place nearly 250 years ago, but the organization of the Diocese of New York, and the meeting of its first convention.

The convention next May will be the one hundred and fifty-second, for there have been some special conventions, but this is the one hundred and fiftieth year since the diocese was organized and the convention first meet.

At the convention in May, the Bishop in his annual address will speak on "The Lessons of the Anniversary and its Relation to the Forward Movement," and at night on Tuesday, May 14, a "Service of Commemoration and Witness" will be held in the Cathedral. This service will be open to all, the clergy and lay delegates to the convention will be present and diocesan organizations both of men and of women will be invited to send special representatives. The speakers at this service will be the Bishop, who will speak on "Our Heritage from the Past and our Witness in the Present"; the Rev. Dr. Chorley, Historiographer of the Diocese, who will speak on "One Hundred and Fifty Years of History in this Diocese"; and the Rev. Canon Stacy-Waddy, Secretary of the venerable Society for the Propagation of the Gospel whose subject will be, "The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel and its Relations With New York."

Fuller details as to this service will be announced later.

During the time of the convention there will be in the Cathedral an exhibition of historic documents and objects connected with the history of the diocese.

The final event in the Diocesan Commemoration will occur in June. The actual date of the organization of the diocese is Saturday, June 22, and therefore on Sunday, June 23, the clergy in all the parishes and missions of the diocese will be asked to commemorate the Anniversary at a Corporate Celebration of the Holy Communion at eight o'clock, or as near to that hour as may be practicable, so that at that time all over the diocese thanksgiving will be offered up for God's mercies in the past with prayers for His blessing upon the work of the diocese in the years to come. The clergy will also be asked to commemorate the Anniversary at the other services on Sunday, June 23, and in their sermons to speak of its lessons and especially to emphasize the message and significance of the Forward Movement in which this diocese and the whole church are now called to take part.

Church Army Mission.

Captain C. J. Atkinson and Captain Ralph Channon of the Church Army will conduct a parochial mission at Nyack on Hudson, New York, from March 31 to April 14. Services are being held every night except Saturday, at 8 P. M., with special mission services for men on Sunday afternoons and for women on Wednesday afternoons, and for young people on Sunday evenings. In addition to the mission services, Captain Atkinson is preaching at the eleven o'clock Sunday services. The Rev. Ernest W. Churchill is the rector of Grace Church, Nyack.

Junior Vestry Appointed.

St. George's Church, New York City, of which the Rev. Karl Reiland, D. D., is rector, has recently appointed a Junior Vestry of twelve members. The Junior Vestry is made up of both men and women, and will aid in the work of the parish. Its members include Mr. and Mrs. William B. Olmstead, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Roynon Cholmeley Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Wilberforce Sully, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Warren Hoagland, Frank Walsh, Henry H. Pierce, Jr., Thurston Greene and Arvid E. Taube.

RHODE ISLAND

Rt. Rev. J. DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop

Presiding Bishop Returning From Western Trip.

Bishop Perry stopped in Salt Lake City, Utah, on his way east, after his conference with the bishops of the Eighth Province of the Episcopal Church in Portland, Oregon, on March 13. He is accompanied by Mrs. Perry. They are expected in Providence on the thirtieth. On Sunday, March 31, the Bishop will confirm a class at St. Martin's Church, at the eleven o'clock service.

The Parish at Work Meeting Community Problems.

The Rev. John Oliver Hart, rector of the Roosevelt Church, St. John's, Washington, also known as the Church of the Presidents, who was the Lenten noon-day preacher at Grace Church, Providence, this week, lectured Monday afternoon in St. Stephen's Guild House for the Social Service Department of the diocese. His subject was, "The Parish at Work Meeting Community Problems."

As the Rev. Mr. Hart has been in Washington only about nine months, the experience back of his lecture was drawn from his work at St. Paul's, Chattanooga, of which he was rector for nine years. There he had only two major organizations—one for the men and one for the women. Contrary to the usual set-up, the men raised the money. The women, as was more to be expected, did the social work. Of the 500 in the parish, 200 were enrolled in study classes to fit themselves to meet the problems of the parish and the community. There were no more cases than the parish, which was amply supported, could care for. Funds were raised a year in advance, so they could gauge exactly the limits of their activities.

It is Mr. Hart's contention that all the social and missionary problems of the world can be found within one mile of most parish churches. For that reason he has no difficulty developing an interest in missions—that is all a part of the every-day life of the parish.

The next lecture in the series will be given by Ralph Barrow, director of the Church Home Society, Boston, at five o'clock in the Guild House, Monday afternoon, March 25. His theme will be, "The Church and Wayward Youth of Today."

Bishop Perry Encourages Devoting Good Friday Offerings to Work in Holy Land.

As primate of the Episcopal Church, Bishop Perry is encouraging the practice of churches in his own diocese and throughout the United States of devoting their Good Friday offerings to work in the Holy Land. Under the British mandate, there is complete freedom for Christian schools in that country. This situation, Bishop Graham-Brown, the Anglican prelate in charge, points out, "forms a striking contrast with the increasing tendency in surrounding countries to use education for nationalistic ends and to place limitations on other than government schools."

The principal secondary schools, both for boys and girls, are Anglican. Some of them are forced to refuse pupils for lack of space. There is a demand, espe-

ON OLIVET.

Grace French Smith.

I stand upon Mount Olivet
At evening hour and shall never forget
The shadows of ancient olive trees,
Now fading into a moonlight frieze.

Somehow I feel that Christ is here,
Praying for courage to persevere;
Quite weary after the cares of the day,
He dropped upon His knee to pray.

From here He saw the city gem,
Jerusalem! Jerusalem!
You kill all prophets and stone all those
Who dare to approach with ideas that oppose!

"How often I longed to draw you nigh,"
On Olivet one hears Him cry,
"But you would not, no, you would not,
The living waters you forgot."

The Battle on the Hill.

Upton H. Gibbs.

Graphic as were the scenes in the wilderness, those which took place two or three years later, leading to the "hill called Calvary," are much more so. From the triumphal entry into Jerusalem to the burial in the rock tomb, the events are most striking, and have furnished the themes for the great masters in painting and sculpture.

When reading the accounts, we are awe-stricken and filled with emotion. We are elated as the cavalcade approaches the Holy City on Palm Sunday, and the hosannas ring in our ears. But what a change on the Friday following, as instead of hosannas there are howls of "crucify Him, crucify Him!" our hearts are touched by the farewell supper and tender discourses, and the agony in the garden. Our indignation waxes strong at the betrayal, the arrest and the farcical trials. We shudder as the cruel lash falls on the back of the August Victim, while He is mocked and spitefully entreated.

It is with bated breath, we accompany the march to Calvary, and see Him raised high on a malefactor's cross.

These scenes have become imperishable and the story of those long six hours under a Syrian sky, when He hung in agony of body, soul and spirit, have been so impressed on the consciousness of mankind, that they will never be forgotten.

When death finally came to His release, it seemed as though the cause of righteousness was utterly lost, and that evil had triumphed. But this would be a superficial judgment. What looked like defeat and the overthrow of righteousness, was in reality a decisive victory for the cause of Truth.

Long before, the great Greek philosopher, Plato, declared that the perfectly righteous man in order to prove his righteousness, would have to suffer persecution and death by crucifixion. Here was the fulfillment of that prediction. The perfectly righteous One established His righteousness by being obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. He saved others but Himself He could not save to prove the absoluteness of His obedience.

The value of this testing and proving to us, is that it was done for us men and our salvation by one of our own race. The Scripture is emphatic on this point: "For as through the one man's disobedience the many were made sinners, even so through the obdeience of the one shall the many be made righteous." Rom. 5:19. How this is possible, morally, ethically and philosophically considered, is the function of theology to show.

Perhaps it can never be made perfectly clear, and perhaps it is not intended that it should be. Our confidence in it depends on our faith and not on our intellectual grasp. To assure us that our faith is not in vain, it was established and confirmed by an event that has the highest testimony in its support, that of the resurrection. He was put to death on the cross, was "declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead."

Marconi's Impenetrable Universe.

The International Congress of Electro-Radio-Biology—how modern are these names, unknown to Newton—met at Venice on September 10 and Sir Guglielimo Marconi delivered the principlal address. A distinguished audience heard him, including eight Noble prize winners, one of whom was our own Arthur Compton of Chicago University. What did this distinguished discoverer of wireless telegraphy and radio transmission who is now flooding all our homes day and night with his messages and turning the whole world into an auditorium, have to say to these men? He said this: "The mystery of life is certainly the most persistent problem ever placed before the thought of man. There is no doubt that from the time humanity began to think it has occupied itself with the problem of its origin and its future, which undoubtedly is the problem of life. The inability of science to solve it is absolute. This would be frightening were it not for faith." He proceeded to draw a picture of "the enormous machinery of the universe" and its impenetrable secret.

As we read such a statement we are impressed with several things. First, these scientists cannot keep within their own field but irresistibly drift into the field of religion. They know that whirling suns and systems are only so much dust in themselves and we want to know what they mean especially for our human life in its origin and destiny. Some of them may scoff at religion, yet they cannot keep away from it and know that it is the main thing. They may talk science at their meetings and not much attention will be paid to them, but let one of them mention religion and they all sit up and take notice and the telegraph nervous system of the world begins to tremble with the excitement of their words.

Next, they say that science cannot solve this main question about life and destiny. It is a sealed book more irrevocably closed than the stony lips of the Sphinx of Egypt. They are right about this, standing on their level and using their instruments of investigation. Electrons and cosmic waves take us not one hair's breadth nearer to the heart of this mystery.

What then do they do? They do what we all do from humblest peasant to profoundest philosopher, fall back upon faith. The prospect "would be frightening," says this Italian genius, "were it not for faith." So said Huxley, the scientific agnostic and inventor of the word: "I have profound faith in the rationality of the universe." Even a superficial look into the universe is the most frightful thing we can see. Only faith can "lighten the burthen of this mystery, the heavy and the weary weight of all this intolerable world." Put the Light of the world at its center and all its suns and systems begin to glow with the glory of God and then we know the universe is friendly to us.—Presbyterian Banner.

To Keep Lent.

Many find the observance of the Lenten season a wearisome and unhelpful business and turn away from it in disgust. Why is this? May it not be that they are trying to squeeze themselves into someone else's mould, trying to copy the precise disciplinary methods prescribed in some handbook or adopted by another person? Formal rules have their value, and it is often our own fault that we find no help in them. But beyond and above the rules stands the man; and the man is a child of God with a unique and personal relationship to his Father. For him the meaning of Lent lies just in that personal relationship with its hidden story of shame and failure and forgiveness and the new start. Let him do what he will in the matter of outward observance: the true Lent is kept in the heart. Liberty is an essential principle of the Christian life, and Christian sonship means that the son can move with freedom in his Father's house. But let him remember that he is a son, and that there is both a duty and privilege of obedience. If obedience seems a forbidding word, let him further remember that the Father calls the son to an intimacy of loving fellowship. He will not have kept Lent in vain if at its close he has found out more about God's love for him.—Exchange.

"IMMANUEL . . . GOD WITH US."

By Vincent D. Beery.

Could we but see the blended portrait of the Holy One of God—
Preternal Wonder of prophecies laid bare;
O'ershadowing Power that gave Him virgin birth;
Childhood wise beyond all natural years;
Commissioned power to heal, to teach, to save,
To bridge the ends of time, and space, and life,
With truths eternal; could we portray
In lines sublime the depth of Love profound—
The agony of death—the Cross—the shattered tomb
That rent the veil of death's despair and brought
To souls of men the light of life and immortality—
Then would we see aflame with heaven's glow,
The face of God—His name, "Immanuel . . .
God with us"—yesterday, and now!

MY PLAYHOUSE.

Magda Brandon.

My beautiful playhouse—
The big out-of-doors;
Has lovely green carpets
Of grass on its floors.

It's lit by a window:
The bright smiling sun;
And lamps of rare beauty
When glad day is done.

Its trees, lovely pictures;
Its brooks, too, that run;
Its flowers are treasures
That charm everyone.

Outdoors is my playhouse;
God made it for me;
His love for me shines there
In all that I see.

Marie is a Magnet.

Marie Mills tapped on the kitchen door, and then, with the freedom of an ever-welcome guest, breezed gaily in where I was busy baking apple pies.

"What do you suppose has happened? What do you suppose has happened?" she exclaimed breathlessly.

Naturally I could not guess, but, judging from her glowing face, surmised that it must be something extremely pleasant.

"Why, the loveliest thing in the world." Her blue eyes sparkled. "Here, cat, give me that chair," and she picked the fat Maltese from his favorite calico-cushioned rocker and took his place.

"Why, the Gastons are going to Silveredge Lake on Saturday," she explained, stroking the fur of the offended Maltese, "and they're doing it to entertain that niece from Boston who has come to visit them. So I'm invited to go along! We'll start about eight, and have that simply glorious drive to the mountains. There'll be canoeing, and swimming, and no end of a simply gorgeous good time, and a dinner at that marvelous inn!"

She paused to catch her breath and let me meditate on the marvels as I rolled pie-crust.

Then she continued. "And what else? My Cousin Etta sent me the niftiest green sport suit with a silk blouse and beret to match. It's almost right, just a bit too long, for Etta is taller than I, and I can fix it easily. You'd never dream it had been worn, for Etta is so careful about her clothes." Marie was running out of descriptives as she rose and restored the cat to his cushion.

"I can't stay, for I must run back and get busy on that sport suit, and I'll show it to you when it is done."

She paused, door-knob in hand. "Doesn't it seem as if I were always having the loveliest things come my way all the time? I think I have blessings enough for half a dozen girls instead of just me, I truly do!"

And that's Marie Mills. "Good things come her way?" Why, of course they do, for a joyous, thankful heart attracts them like a magnet, with a pull as strong as gravitation itself.

Marie gets pleasure out of no end of little things which many people would hardly notice, let alone be thankful for. It may be a red rose which has unexpectedly bloomed on her favorite bush, or some especially lovely radio program, a gorgeous sunset, a walk in the woods. She is always finding things to be grateful for and happy about, and by looking for and expecting and appreciating blessings she draws them to her by the magnet of a grateful spirit. And so can you. Just try it and see.—Girls' World.

A Cat and Bird Friendship.

One chilly day in May last year Miss Kate, returning home from work, found two little boys with a young robin which was barely feathered. The nest which had sheltered it had been blown down. Miss Kate bought the little shivering bird for a dime and carried it home. There were already two pets in the home—"June," a sedate old mother cat, and "Bud," a prancing young fellow. The little bird was given a supper of bread and milk and put to bed in a warm box. Within a few days the tiny feathered bit was hopping about the floor and the two furred creatures, with full stomachs which called for no food, observed its antics with round-eyed placidity.

"Come, Robbie, Robbie!" the new friends would call, and "Chirp, Chirp!" here would come robin hopping along. At night he slept in a corner of the woodshed and in the morning hopped joyously in to share breakfast with the family. He perched on the edge of a dish of cereal and raspberries and helped himself daintily. He flew to the shoulders of members of the family and chirped loudly. But Robbie seemed to prefer the society of cats to any human companionship. He seemed to know that old June, being a mother cat, could be cajoled into adopting almost any young animal thing. He would sit on her back by the hour and peck curiously at her ears. June would only flick an ear or turn her head.

Water would be poured into the cats' basin. One pussy would stroll down for a drink, followed hopefully by Robbie, hopping fast, who would reach the basin at the same time the cats did and decide immediately to take a bath, spattering water joyously right and left. The cats did not like this very well, for Robbie would necessarily spatter much water and everybody knows that a cat has little use for water externally applied. Worse yet, when Robbie had completed his ablutions he would seek a vantage point where he could dry his feathers. Where could he find a better place than old June's back, with his tiny claws firmly imbedded in her fur? Once nicely dried, Robbie would continue to sit there and chirp. June might arise slowly, stretch her feline length and pad softly across the room to a spot of sunshine, and he would merely ride along. But he never tried to ride on Bud's back. Neighbors used to come in to see the performance. When any one played the piano, the robin would hop up and down the keyboard, singing loudly, nimbly avoiding the player's fingers.

The attachment between Robbie and the cats grew. The bird was seldom out of their sight. He might fly to a tree and sing for a few minutes, but he was sure to return to the lawn seat where June lay basking in the sun and hop upon her back. If the cats were given some dainty Robbie had never seen before, he was apt to hop down and inspect the food critically, but if he decided against it, he resumed his perch without more ado.

As summer neared its end June, who was eight or nine years old, fell ill. She no longer approached her dish with a hearty appetite, but sat instead with closed eyes and had to be coaxed to drink her milk. Robbie never deserted her. One day she died, and was interred under the snapdragons and petunias in the garden. Robbie hopped disconsolately about. He missed old June, that was evident. He hopped from one room to another and then across the porch into the flower garden, looking—looking. He made no attempt to sit on Bud's back, as he had sat on June's, although he followed the cat about.

One day, late in the fall, Robbie, who had taken to sleeping in a tree near the house, failed to come at the customary call. His friends inquired about the neighborhood for him. No one had seen him. Perhaps he joined a flock of his brothers, southward bound.—Grace Franklin, in Our Dumb Animals.

MY DOG.

My little dog is fluffy brown,
He curls from tail to ear;
And just exactly what he is
It doesn't quite appear.

His tastes are quite well bred. He is
A danger to the rats;
He likes the best place at the fire;
He has no use for cats.

He wishes dogs could have a vote
(And thinks the day may come);
He'd vote for bones and romps and walks,
And master's love—and home.

The Magic Shawl.

Alene, frocked and furred, stood within a high iron gate, in a shaft of winter sunshine, and looked disconsolately into the street. Flaxen curls hung in a cluster about her shoulders, and her somber eyes were big and dreamy.

As she stood thus she suddenly drew back with an exclamation of surprise. Another little girl stood outside the gate.

"How did you get there?" asked Alene.

The stranger laughed, and there was a quaint ring of music in her voice.

"May I come in?" she asked.

Alene slowly opened the gate. The lustrous beauty of the stranger's brown eyes and hair and ruddy cheeks had not escaped her, nor the threadbare coat she wore, but she was particularly fascinating with a shawl which hung lightly on the little girl's arm. It looked soft and ancient, yet rich with magic hues of embroidered bluebirds in a forest-like setting of red and gold.

"Oh, what a lovely place!"

The visitor skipped across the yard like a flitting butterfly, peeping here and peeping there, and looking, looking everyhere. She paused beside a bird bath, and finding no water in it, went on and in and out among the shrubbery until she disappeared. When Alene found her, she was sitting on a wheelbarrow handle, talking to the gardener. She arose and quickly ran forward.

"You look unhappy," she said, touching Alene's arm.

Alene's pale face flushed.

"Well—" She paused. "Maybe I am."

"Haven't you lots and lots of things to play with?"

"Yes, but I'm tired of them all."

The visitor looked long into Alene's eyes.

"Listen," she said. "I have a secret for you. Come."

She flung the magic shawl about them, and in a twinkling they were in the midst of a large park where children played. One little girl had wandered off and lost her doll and was now weeping as if her heart would break.

"Don't cry," said Alene's companion. 'We'll find it for you."

Beneath a low-hanging shrub she rescued the doll from a puppy and brought it to the weeping child, torn and bedraggled, yet nevertheless so precious that joy now showed through sparkling tears as the child clasped it into her arms.

The magic shawl was about them again, and in a twinkling they were upon the crowded sidewalk of a busy street. A ragged little boy stood beside his poor, frail mother, looking hungrily at a pile of buns in a baker's window.

"Wait, little friend," said Alene's companion, peeping into his troubled face.

She went into the baker's shop and purchased a large bag of buns and brought them all to the hungry little boy. Alene never forgot the look of surprise and joy and gratitude she saw in his eyes.

The magic shawl was about them again. In a twinkling they were between two rows of tenement houses along a narrow street, where children romped like cats among the push-carts, and the sound of crying babies filled the air. A bent old woman with a heavy bundle was struggling toward an open doorway.

"Let us help you," cried Alene's companion.

The old woman sat down her bundle, looked queerly at the girls, muttered foreign words, and pointed bony finger up a dark stairway. The girls lifted the bundle and lugged it slowly up the stairs. The bent old woman followed. At the top she muttered more foreign words and laid her hands on their heads.

The magic shawl was about them again, and in a twinkling they were once more beneath the spreading trees in Alene's yard. Bright color glowed now in Alene's cheeks, and a new light was in her eyes. She looked in speechless wonder at the girl with the magic shawl.

"Come," spoke the little stranger, skipping to the bird bath. "Look! There is no water for the birds."

"Yes, yes!" cried Alene. "Wait!"

She ran into the house, and presently reappeared with a silver pitcher full of water, which she poured into the shallow basin. Then they ran away, and when they looked back, a goldfinch was at the water's edge quenching its thirst.

"See yonder!" exclaimed the visitor, now pointing through the trees. "The poor gardener goes home to his crippled boy who has to sit all day in a chair. Couldn't we send him something?"

Alene thought a moment.

"I know," she cried, clapping her hands. "My roses Aunt Jane brought me! Wait!"

Again she ran into the house, and again she reappeared, this time with a glorious bunch of fresh pink roses. Through the shrubs they sped and caught the gardener as he was pasing through a high side gate.

"Here, Jerry!" gasped Alene, all but breathless. "Take these to your little boy."

The gardener stared in amazement. Then he took the flowers. There was a break in his voice when hs spoke.

"Thank you, Miss—Miss Alene."

Alene stood a few moments looking thoughtfully at the gate that closed behind him. Then she turned to her guest, who observed her, quaintly smiling.

"I must go now," she said.

"Don't," pleaded Alene. "Oh! And your secret! Tell me."

"My secret?" The stranger's bright eyes twinkled. "Why, child, you know it now!"

The magic shawl flashed and she was gone.

Alene stood speechless, her eyes big with wonder. She ran quickly toward the house. Her heart beat fast with sudden joy. For she really had learned the stranger's secret. And the stranger's name was Kindness.—Southwestern Episcopalian.

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter XIII.

M. L. G.

Two hours later Kent lay white and weak in Claire's bed, the broken arm safely set and bandaged, and Dr. Carrington stood by the bed, talking with David and Winnie. Uncle Danger had taken a second trip with Philip, this time to the station, with a hasty note to Mother, which was too late to go by the post-office. They must tell Mother and Father of Kent's accident, the children decided, but they made as light of it as they could, for both knew that it might reach Mother when Claire would be past needing her.

Mrs. Innis had, as she promised, sat by Kent until the Doctor came. The little fellow scarcely noticed her. He had his well hand tight in David's, who sat on the edge of the bed. Winnie moved silently about, trying to think what the Doctor might need, and to have it, ready. But when Doctor Carringtons face, kindly and concerned, appeared in the doorway, Mrs. Innis slid out of her chair in a faint.

"Here, here, what's this? Two patients? Well, never mind, Winnie, I brought young Graham—here he is, Tom—Dr. Graham, I should say. Put her head low, Winnie. Here she comes! No hurry, Mrs. Innis, just lie there till you feel like getting up. Then off to your room and your own bed. Look after her, Tom." He stepped around Mrs. Innis and leaned over Kent, "Ah, little fellow, you have given me a case."

In the queer dream that was only just not a nightmare, Winnie stood by young Dr. Graham, who in a few minutes picked Mrs. Innis up in his strong arms, unheeding her protests.

"Lead the way, little sister," he said cheerfully, and when Mrs. Innis was on her own bed, and Winnie had made her comfortable, the young Doctor called her to the door.

"I think Dr. Carrington's going to give the little boy just a whiff of ether —that's why I'm here. Now don't you worry—I see you're not the fainting sort. Look after Mrs. Innis, and—let me see, what do little girls do? You should be playing dolls. Don't you worry, anyhow, little sister."

But it seemed a long time to Winnie and David before Dr. Carrington opened the door. Mrs. Innis, content with a headache tablet and her hot-water bottle, had fallen asleep. Night came on, but Uncle Danger and Philip had not returned.

"I heard the train blow," David said. "They will wait and come 'round by the post-office. Mr. Jenks always finds our letter first for us. He says, 'Good news of the little miss, I hope,' regularly, every time."

"Oh, if we can get the least better news of Claire, we won't mind this about Kent so much!" Winnie's thoughts flew from the room where the doctors worked with Kent to that far-away hospital room. How was it there? How could she wait to know?

"Winnie, I think we'd have had a telegram if—if—I mean, not to have it is a good sign."

"David, can you pray? It all gets so mixed up in my mind—seems as if it ought to help more—"

"I don't pray, exactly—I just know God's there."

"Just like when Father's home its nice to know he's in the study, even when we're not seeing him?"

"Yes, like that—oh, Doctor Carrington!" A shaft of light from Mother's room showed them the old doctor smiling at them.

"Come in—come right in. He'll be sleepy for awhile, but he's a soldier, this boy is. I'll be along in the morning, David, and sooner if you call me."

"Kent, darling!" said Winnie, kneeling against the bed with her weary head on his pillow.

"This little sister here could stand a bit of nursing herself," the younger doctor said. "Is that tower of strength I carried out of here supposed to be taking care of you children?"

"We've managed all right—Father thought he'd be home by today, but Claire has pneumonia."

"Pneumonia!" cried Dr. Carrington, shocked out of his usual careful tone.

"Is it so bad, Doctor?" David asked, his voice trembling.

"My dear old fellow," said Dr. Carrington, buttoning his overcoat, and his own voice was husky, "it's not so good, and that's a fact. And another fact is you and Winnie have too much on your hands, and Mrs. Innis just another care. Something's got to be done—" he stopped, frowning.

"I hear the wheels, David," said Winnie, too tired to move.

"That will be news of Claire—" David was already running down the steps. Then those in the room above heard a shout, "O Aunt Mollie! O Winnie, Aunt Mollie's come!"

"Thank God for that!" said Dr. Carrington.

Kent had stirred, and was fretting and moaning. Winnie could not leave him, but her eyes were shining. It seemed to her that a real physical load fell from her with the thought that Aunt Mollie was truly here.

A moment, and she was in the room, another and she had gathered Winnie into her arms.

"My blessed baby, what's she trying to do, turn into a combination of Mother and a trained nurse? And here's my Kent with an arm like a bolster—well, it's quite time I got over my grippe foolishness and took charge here."

"I never was gladder to see a body in my life, Miss Mollie!" said the old Doctor heartily. Dr. Graham picked up his bag with a grin.

"Patient number one should be little sister," he said.

It seemed almost magical, how things fell into order under Aunt Mollie's handling.

"I had something to eat on the train," she said briskly, when the doctors were gone. "I don't need a thing. Have you children had your supper? No? What about dinner?"

"You see, Kent broke his arm just as we got to the house, coming from school," David explained.

"Aunt Cindy did remind us later," added Winnie, "but we just weren't hungry."

"Dear life! Well, off with you. Claire's not worse, Winnie, I opened the letter. That's the very best we can hope—now run down and have a big supper, chicks. What say, Philip?"

"I thinked of the ladder-bwidge," said Philip, who had been following Aunt Mollie about, holding a little fold of her dress and murmuring to her.

"Well, that's about your share! Give Aunt Mollie one more big hug. Yes, Kent, Aunt Mollie's right here."

Supper was joyous. David and Winnie found themselves hungry, Aunt Cindy was in a state of mingled excitement and relief, and Philip seemed to think his happy thought of the ladder-bridge had been the direct cause of Aunt Mollie's coming.

"Ain't you glad I thinked 'bout dat?" he asked.

"Just so you don't make a habit of such thoughts!" David answered.

"I'll take Mrs. Innis her supper on a tray, Aunt Cindy," Winnie said, as Aunt Cindy brought in the hot muffins.

"All right, Miss Winnie, but I tells you right now I ain' gwine fix no tray till you done finish all you wants. It'll be 'bring me dis an' fotch me dat,' and' 'I allus been delicate sence infancy'—" Cindy rolled her eyes. "An' I is, I hopes, done hear de las' in dis endurin' worl' of dem sody crackers!"

BUTTERFLIES.

Butterflies so blithe and gay,
Let me fly with you away.
Nothing does your swift wings stay—
Life for you is just one day.

Butterflies go flitting by,
Never time to weep or sigh.
Dull hours I could hurry by—

The Birthday Party That Moved.

Bonnie Jean and Elsie were talking about birthday parties. This was the first year that they had known each other, because Elsie had just moved during the winter from another town into an apartment in the next block. She often came over to play in Bonnie Jean's big yard that was so pleasant both in snowtime and in springtime. Now the yard was all covered with the greenest grass, and even Bonnie Jean's little brother Tommy could tumble around on it. He was just learning to walk, and it was funny to see how proud he was of it.

Bonnie Jean said: "My birthday comes in August when it's sure to be hot. And we always have a picnic at the lake or in the country where there is a creek so that I can go wading. I'd rather do that than most anytihng."

"Mine comes on the fourteenth of April," said Elsie. "School isn't out yet, so we can't have a real picnic even if it is warm enough. And it seems as if it almost always rains on my birthday. So we have to have a party in the house. Mother says I may have one this year, and you're the very first person invited, Bonnie Jean. Don't forget to come at half-past three on Thursday. I'm going to have only six children because we haven't much room to play games in our apartment. But mother is going to make me a birthday cake with rabbits, because it isn't so very long until it is Easter. So I think it will be a nice party, though my Auntie Isabel can't come this year. She always used to help us think of nice games to play."

"O I know it will!" Bonnie Jean said. "And I'll ask mother if I can wear my pink best dress to school, so I'll be all ready to go right to your house that afternoon. I can hardly wait for Thursday."

But pretty soon Thursday had come. And Bonnie Jean went happily off to school in the afternoon dressed in her pink dress all ready for Elsie's party. But when she came out of the schoolhouse at half-past three there was mother waiting for her with little Tommy.

"I am so sorry, dear," mother said, "but I'll have to ask you to take care of Tommy for an hour or more. Father has just telephoned that I must come down to sign a paper, and I can't take Tommy, and I haven't been able to find anyone to take care of him. I'll hurry back as fast as I can, so that you can go to part of the party. But now you'd better put on your play dress so that you can keep Tommy out on the lawn. He needs to be outdoors in the sunshine."

So Bonnie Jean took Tommy home. And she felt so badly about the party that she was missing that she couldn't even laugh at him when he was so proud of being able to walk on his fat little legs. But when he begged, "Play ball, play ball," after she had put on her blue gingham she hunted the big red rubber ball.

"We'll try to have a party ourselves, Tommy," she said. "Mother has left us some animal crackers and two cups of milk. We'll play it's ice cream and birthday cake with candles."

So they started to play ball out on the grass, and they were really having a pretty good time. That was how it happened that they didn't see six little girls come tip-toeing around the corner and onto their own grass. They had a big box with them. And back of them came somebody's mother with a basket.

"O Elsie," Bonnie Jean called when she did see them, "aren't you having your party?"

And Elsie laughed and said: "We are moving our party outdoors, and we're going to have it in your yard. Then you and Tommie can be at it. And besides the game that Aunt Isabel sent in this box for us to play is a game that has to be played on the grass. Look here! There are dozen of lovely colored Easter eggs to roll on the lawn with these little sticks. Aunt Isabel wrote that that was what the children in Washington always do on Easter Saturday on the grass at the White House, where the President lives. She said she wished all American children could do it, but sometimes it is too cold and wet on Easter Saturday to roll eggs outdoors. So she thought I had better use the game for my birthday party if you'd lend me your lawn."

Pretty soon every one was rolling the lovely eggs, trying to see who could get them to the goal at the lilac bushes first without cracking them a bit.

"I think it's as much fun as wading," Bonnie Jean said. "And look how Tommy can do it too, even if he's only a little past one year old."

Elsie's mother had brought the birthday cake in the basket, and pretty soon she came with the ice cream and the rabbit cookies. So they had the whole party at Bonnie Jean's, and mother did not get home until it was almost over.

"I never heard of anything so nice as a party that moved itself,' 'she said.

When Bonnie Jean went to bed mother thanked her for taking care of Tommy. "I was so glad that my little daughter would help me even when it looked like she was going to miss a fine birthday party," she said.

But Bonnie Jean just hugged mother hard. And she said: "Birthday parties are lovely, especially when they have egg-rolling games. But mothers and little brothers are nicer still. And I forgot I didn't have on my pink dress for the party.—Christian Advocate, (Nashville).

Alton's Dime.

"I found a dime! I found a dime!" cried Alton, running into the house to show the bright coin to his mother. "Mamma, may I spend it right away for candy?"

"Is it your dime, dear?" asked Mrs. Kile.

"Why, yes, Mamma. All the boys say finding is keeping," said the little boy, in surprise.

"Maybe someone will come to claim it. Where did you find it?"

"Out in front of the house on the walk. It's only a little bit of money, so no one will ever want it. Once papa lost a wnole quarter on his way to the train, and he just said, 'Never mind,' when Mr. Carson wanted to go back with him to look for it."

"Put the dime on the table until after a while, Alton," said Mrs. Kile. "I am very busy just now. Did you ask anyone who passed about losing money?"

"No. I brought it right into the house. I wish I could spend it now, mamma. Anything on our walk belongs to us, doesn't it?"

But his mother had gone into the kitchen and he had to put the dime on the table. He thought of the candy he could get with that much money, and then some marbles at the store, still he could not decide just what he wanted to do. In the midst of trying to make up his mind he saw Ben Adler going past looking carefully at the ground as he walked, and the little boy in the house turned his head away quickly.

"Ben Adler is the meanest boy in town," he said to himself. "It just serves him right if he lost the dime." Alton did not go out in the yard until he was sure Ben had gone past, but when he did he found Tom Parks waiting for him with a pretty little white rabbit in his arms.

"See here, Alton, what I found," he cried. "It was over in our pasture nibbling clover and I picked it right up. Won't it make a fine pet?"

"It's Nellie Reed's Bunny" said Alton, looking it over carefully. "I wonder how it got out?"

"It's mine!" said Ted. "Findings keeping, isn't it? I'm going to build a nice pen for it right away."

"It's mean and wicked to keep things that don't belong to you," began Alton, and then his face turned very red. Ben Adler was coming along the walk again looking carefully at the ground, and Alton ran quickly into the house for the dime.

"What are you looking for, Ben?" he asked.

"Lost a dime," said the big boy, without looking up. "It slipped out of a hole in my pocket."

"Here it is!" cried Alton, forgetting all about candy and marbles. "I found it a little while ago."

"I guess I'll take the rabbt back to Nellie," said Ted. "I think your way is best."

Nellie was so glad to get her Bunny back that she hugged and petted it and finally sat down and cried for joy.

Ted, too, was very happy; far happier than he would have been if he had kept it.—Exchange.

HOW TO HELP.

Said Peter Paul Augustus,
"When I am grown a man
I'll help my dearest mother
The very best I can;
I'll wait upon her kindly;
She'll lean upon my arm;
I'll lead her very gently,
And keep her safe from harm.

"But when I come to think of it,
The time will be so long."
Said Peter Paul Augustus,
"Before I'm tall and strong,
I think it would be wiser
To be her pride and joy
By helping her my very best
While I'm a little boy."

DEATHS

RESOLUTIONS IN MEMORY of EDMUND PENDLETON.

Whereas our Father in Heaven did call the soul of EDMUND PENDLETON to the rest and peace of Paradise on Saturday, the sixteenth day of February, A. D. 1935;

Be it resolved that we, the rector and vestry of St. John's Church, Wytheville, do hereby express our profound regret and sorrow in the loss of our friend and brother, who for over fifty years has been a faithful member of this body.

We record this as representatives of our entire congregation, being mindful of his generosity and charity, his candor and wise counsel, and his unfailing devotion to the well-being, the missionary work and the services of the church.

Moreover, we instruct our clerk to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of Mr. Pendleton, and to have them printed in our local papers, our diocesan paper and the Southern Churchman, and also, to spread them on our minutes.

"For all the saints, who from their labours rest,
Who Thee by faith before the world confessed,
Thy Name, O Jesus, be for ever blessed.
Allelulia."

Signed,
DEVALL L. GWATHMEY,
Rector.
THOS. F. WALKER, Clerk.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

cially among Moslems, for education that is Christian in standard and quality. Canon Charles T. Bridgeman, an Episcopal priest, who spoke last fall before a diocesan conference of clergy at Newport, and is connected with St. George's Cathedral, Jerusalem, and is also professor of Practical Theology in St. James' Armenian Seminary. Through him the Episcopal Church of the United States shares directly in the common Anglican enterprise.

Bishop Bennett Explains "Sharings" in Mite-Box Offerings.

The Church School Lenten Mite-box Offering was the subject of a recent letter from Bishop Bennett, read at the beginning of the lesson-period in the Church School of every Episcopal parish in the diocese. He explained what their "sharings" meant to the missionaries, and asked them to figure out, when they went home, what a penny a week more from each of the 9,526 pupils in the diocese would do for the Lenten Offering, which last year amounted to $8,069.45. He is sending out another letter to be read on the Fourth, or middle Sunday, in Lent, March 31. It deals chiefly with the Presentation Service to be held at the Cathedral of St. John, May 4. The Church School having the largest per cent of its members present, he announced, would be awarded the Bishop's Citation for 1935.

Worship Through Music.

In an unique experiment in worship through music, St. John's Church, Detroit, is introducing a new Lenten devotion in a series of "Six Adventures in Creative Listening" on the Tuesday noons in Lent.

At each of these services, the theme for the day is set by an initial solo, the remainder of the service consisting entirely of organ music drawn from the great composers of all ages. There is no sermon or address during the service. Those attending receive programs with a few verses of Scripture, suggesting the theme for the day, and a note on the technique of relaxation in order that the listeners may participate emotionally and intellectually in the program.

Each day the theme of the service is some attribute of God—majesty, imminence, love, etc. The music, through which this theme is suggested, has been chosen after considerable study by John L. Edwards, organist of the church, who is in charge of the service. The plan, replacing the daily noon Lenten devotions at St. John's, was worked out by the rector, the Rev. Irwin C. Johnson, who feels that the spoken word has been over-emphasized in Lenten devotions. It follows the theory of Dr. Albert A. Stanley, for many years professor of music at the University of Michigan, who maintained that all great music represents definite pictures and human attributes in the mind of the composer, and that these can be transmitted to the listeners if the environment in which they are produced and the minds of the listeners can be properly prepared.

The services are attracting keen interest and attention. Whereas a small group attended the former noon-day services, nearly two hundred people are coming each Tuesday noon to hear the organ music. No other noon-day services are held in St. John's; a Monday study class for women, Holy Communion Thursday mornings and Lenten Fellowship dinners with special speakers, complete the Lenten program.

Personal Notes

Award to Dr. Easton.

The Rev. Dr. Burton Scott Easton, professor of New Testament at the General Theological Seminary, will receive the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from the University of Glasgow, Scotland, at exercises at the University on June 19.

Dr. Easton has been notified of the award by the Clerk of the University Senate, and by Sir Robert Rait, vice-chancellor and principal of the university. He and Mrs. Easton will sail for Scotland early in June.

Dr. Easton is Reinicke lecturer at the Virginia Theological Seminary, Alexandria, this week. The title for the lecture series is "The Book of Acts."

Appointment of Seminary Student.

Richard Kent Nale of the graduating class of the General Theological Seminary, has been named by the Rt. Rev. Robert H. Mize, Bishop of the Missionary District of Salina, to become associate missioner at Hays, Kansas, succeeding the Rev. George C. Wyatt, a graduate of two years ago, whose term expires.

Mr. Nale will join the staff of the mission, where he will be associated with the Rev. Carl Lemm-Marugg and the Rev. Robert H. Mize, Jr., for a two-year term. The Associate Mission is manned by General Theological Seminary alumni and is entirely supported by the seminary student body. Mr. Wyatt will become rector of a self-supporting parish in the missionary district, built up by him during his two years as Associate Missioner.

Bishop Mize, in whose hands the choice of missioners rests, has been a guest of the seminary during the past week. The announcement of the new missioner was made at a meeting of the student body Thursday night.

Mr. Nale is the son of Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Nale of New York and Montclair, New Jersey. He is a graduate of Montclair High School and St. Stephen's College. He will be ordained to the diaconate by Bishop Stearly of Newark this spring.

During his three years at the seminary, Mr. Nale has been sacristan, and athletic director. He has been actively engaged in mission work among the ocean liner crews at the Seamen's Y. M. C. A., and has also served on the staff of St. James' Church, Montclair.

Rev. J. E. Elliott, Rector of St. Luke's Church.

Announcement is just made of the election of the Rev. Josiah E. Elliott to be the rector of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, Fifteenth and Church Streets, N. W., Washington, D. C. He succeeds to the office recently held by the Rev.

Thomas J. Brown, retired and now rector-emeritus.

The Rev. Mr. Elliott was born in Virginia; was educated in the elementary schools of Washington and Baltimore, and later in an Episcopal Parochial School at Savannah, Georgia. He is a graduate of St. Athanasius Normal School of Brunswick, Georgia. Later he studied at Howard University, College of Liberal Arts, and, after two years matriculated at Temple University, Philadelphia. He left Temple in his senior year to answer the call to the colors during the World War. Returning, he resumed his studies and became o postulant for Holy Orders at Philadelphia. He was examined and passed for such and for the Diaconate. He then entered Payne Divinity School, and was graduated therefrom as a Bachelor of Divinity.

He has served as rector of St. Mark's Church, Bracey, Virginia, and during his incumbency ministered to a large congregation and supervised the construction of a modern church there. Later he accepted a call to become priest-in-charge of St. James' Churh, Charleston, West Virginia.

He is a member of the Brotherhood of Y. M. C. A. Seretaries, a member of Omega Psi Phi Fraternity, the Masoni Order, Knights of Pythias, and others. As has been stated, he is a World War Veteran, having served for eleven months with the American Expeditionary Force in France.

The Rev. Mr. Elliott will formally assume his duties about the middle of April. He is married and lives at 1754 S. Street, N. W.

St. Luke's Church, founded and organized by the late Rev. Alexander Crummell, one of the outstanding characters of the last century, is one of the larger and most important parishes of its kind in the Episcopal Communion. Housed in a structure of pure Gothic design, it is strikingly beautiful in its simplicity. It numbers a large and influential congregation and is regarded by church authorities as the commanding dominant church of its kind in the capital and this diocese and stands well up among the churches measured from a national standpoint.

Clerical Changes.

The Rev. Sumner D. Walters, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, St. Louis, Mo., is to be rector of Christ Church, Alameda, Calif., to take effect May 1.

The Rev. Gerald Francis Burrill, formerly priest-in-charge of All Saints' Church, Mariner's Harbor, Staten Island, N. Y., is to be rector of St. Paul's Church, Morrisania, New York City. Address, 1446 Washington Avenue. Effective May 1.

The Rev. Frederick H. Wielage, formerly curate at Holy Cross Church, Kingston, N. Y., is priest in charge of St. Agnes' Chapel, Balmville, Newburgh, New York.

Ordinations.

Priest.

The Rev. Russell Ellis Potter was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Ingley, Coadjutor of Colorado in St. Paul's Church, Fort Morgan, February 23. The ordinand was presented by the Rev. Harry S. Kennedy, and is in charge of St. Paul's Church, Fort Morgan, with address at 321 Lake Street. The Rev. C. H. Brady preached the sermon.

The Rev. John Ladru Stiffler was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Bartlett of North Dakota in Gethsemane Cathedral, Fargo, February 28. The candidate was presented by the Rev. William F. Creighton, and the Rev. Douglas H. Atwill preached the sermon. The Rev. Mr. Stiffler continues in charge of St. James' Church, Grafton; Redeemer, Bathgate; St. Peter's, Park River; St. Luke's, Walshvile; St. Peter's, Walhala, and Grace Church Pembina. Address, Grafton, North Dakota.

The Rev. Ralph H. Wisecarver was advanced to the priesthood in Christ Church Cathedral, Sacramento, Calif., by Bishop Porter, the Bishop of Sacramento, at the requeste of the Bishop of Oregon, March 11. The Rev. E. P. Runnells presented the candidate;; Vice-Dean Hermitage preached the sermon, and the Ven. Barr G. Lee read the Litany. Mr. Wisecarver is to be assistant at Christ Church Cathedral, with oversight of St. Luke's Mission, Galt.

Frances Ker.

A tribute by her rector, Rev. Willis Gaylord Clark.

As our Master opened a vista to His disciples on the Transfiguration Mount, giving to them a glimpse of the glory which was to be theirs, so I believe He opens to us through certain souls of our acquaintance a vista of the glorious fruitage of His Truth.

Such a soul was that of Frances Ker, who recently, in the bloom of youth, "passed into the open vision."

Those who knew her, in her joys and in her sufferings, realized they had, in the character of her life, a vista of the "radiancy of glory"—the fruitage of an unwavering faith in and fidelity to our Blessed Lord.

Frances Ker was born in Staunton, Virginia . She was the younger daughter o the late James Ker, Jr., and Mary W. McCue Ker, of Staunton. With her parents, she moved to Charlotte, N. C., when she was a little girl. She died in Charlotte on January 30, 1935. Her funeral was conducted in St. Peter's Church, of which she was an ardent member. Her remains were laid to rest beside those of her father, in Staunton.

Her paternal grandparents were James Ker of Eastern Shore, Virginia, and Rebecca Chapman. Her mother's parents were W. A. McCue and Mary Frances Miller. She was the great-great-grandniece of President James Madison. Her genealogical chart shows she was descende dfrom eighteen of the Barons who signed the Magna Carta. She could trace her ancestry, without a break, back to the Plantagenet Kings.

Very few, even of her most intimate friends, knew of this royal lineage, which was hers and of the authenticated evidence she had to prove it. However, all who did know her, knew that she was of royal worth, because of the evidence of her faith and character.

This faith and character made us feel that whenever we were with her we were in the presence of a princess of the Kingdom of God.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

The paramount need of the Christian Church is seven times more prayer.—Andrew Murray.

"Nothing earthly will make me give up my work in despair."—David Livinstone.

"Be like a bird,
That halting in its flight
On boughs too slight,
Yet sings, knowing that it hath wings."

"That man is great, and he alone,
Who serves a greatness not his own
For neither praise nor pelf;
Content to know and be unknown:
Whole in himself."

Today as yesterday the same,
Breathe Thou on us the sacred flame;
The paths our valiant fathers trod,
Help us to find, O Changesless God;
Reveal in us anew this hour
The love of Christ, His life, His power.
—Frank Mason North.

The most urgent need of modern life is to take time to recover the soul, time to recollect and bring into action all the deeper emotions and convictions which are latent within the soul, time in a word to be still and know God.—Archbishop Lang.

One common faith unites us all,
We seek one common goal;
One tender comfort broods upon
The struggling human soul.
To this clear call of brotherhood,
Our hearts responsive ring;
We join the glorious new crusade
Of our great Lord and King.
—Ozra S. Davis.

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills." The vision of God unseals the lips of man. Herein lies strength for conflict with the common enemy of the praying world known as wandering thoughts.

Religion must always speak of a world invisible, but if it is to be the religion of the Incarnation it must touch the healing power the world in which men do their busines and find their pleasures. It must show that it can create community where suspicion and selfishness and vested interests now hold their sway.—Guardian.

"Love has a hem on its garment
Which reaches the very dust.
It can touch the stains
Of the streets and lanes,
And because it can it must."

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

THE FUND OF HEAVEN

"Ye brainless wits! Ye baptiz'd infidels!
Ye worse for mending! wash'd to fouler stains!
The Ransom was paid down; the Fund of Heav'n,
Heav'ns inexhaustible exhausted Fund,
Amazing, and amaz'd, pour'd forth the Price,
All Price beyond: Tho' curious to compute,
Archangels fail'd to cast the mighty Sum:
Its value vast ungrasped by Minds Create,
For·ever hides, and glows in the Supreme.

And was the Ransom paid? It was: and paid
(What can exalt the Bounty more?) for You.
The Sun beheld it—No, the shocking scene
Drove back his Chariot; Midnight veil'd his Face
Not such as This; not such as Nature makes;
A Midnight, Nature shudder'd to behold;
A Midnight new! a dread Eclipse (without Opposing Spheres) from her Creator's Frown!
Sun! dids't thou fly thy Maker's Pain? or start
At that enormous load of human guilt,
Which bow'd His blessed Head; o'erwhelmed His Cross;
Made groan the Centre; burst Earth's marble Womb,
With Pangs, strange Pangs! deliver'd of her Dead?
Hell howl'd; and Heav'n that Hour let fall a Tear;
Heav'n wept, that Men might smile!
Heav'n bled, that Man might never die!"

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Taking the Gospel to Prisoners.
By an Evangelist to Prisoners.

Mr. Editor:

We are back from Southern Prisons, where we have been conducting Gospel services, songs and Bible readings for the men and women behind the bars. To give you an idea of the great work for the lost, we report here one service (others are similar).

A request came over the 'phone while we were in Columbia, S. C., from Chaplain Phillips of the South Carolina Penitentiary, to speak in the Chapel Sunday morning.

Officers armed with Winchester rifles and machine guns guarded the entrance to the prison grounds.

About one thousand men filed into the prison Chapel and took their seats. The prison band was present in the orchestra and several men sang selections from the platform. The chaplain introduced the speaker. I took my text from the third chapter of John—Nicodemus coming to Christ—and the theme was: Contacting the Redeemer of Men by Faith.

At the close of the message seven or eight hundred men stood to their feet requesting prayer for themselves, which was offered for them, and then was distributed among the men quantities of Gospel Tracts—"Got Hold of the Cross," donated to the Prison Work by Dr. Howard A. Kelly of Baltimore. We also gave to the prison two hundred New Testaments.

We desire to thank those readers of the Southern Churchman, who from time to time have forwarded to us material help for this prison work. Our demands are greater as the work enlarges, and we request the prayers of the readers.

Personal Notes

The Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, rector of Christ Church, Cambridge, Mass., was the preacher at the General Theological Seminary Lenten service in the Chapel of the Good Shepherd, Monday, April 11.

The Rev. Theodore Sedgwick, D. D., of Sharon, Conn., lately returned from his ministry to the American Church in Rome, preached at Westover Church, Charles City County, Virginia, Sunday, March 30. Dr. Sedgwick was the guest of the Rev. Duval Chambers, rector, who some years back was associated with him at Calvary Church, New York City, and for whom he holds a strong friendship.

The Rev. J. Brewster, after a rectorship of nineteen years, has resigned the rectorship of St. Michael's Church, Litchfield, Conn.

The Rev. Arthur Vincent Litchfield was installed on March 31, by Bishop Manning as the eighth rector of St. James' Church, Fordham, New York City. The service took place in the church at four o'clock on Sunday afternoon. The Rev. Mr. Litchfield succeeds the Rev. DeWitt L. Pelton, D. D.

The Rev. William B. Carns, formerly rector of St. Luke's Church, Charleston, W. Va., has accepted the rectorship of Memorial Church of the Good Shepherd, Parkersburg, W. Va., to become effective May 1. Mr. Carns' new address will be 901 Charles Street, Parkersburg, W. Va.

Social Security and Christians.

The President's program for social security is attracting attention today in America and in some of the reaction one would think that he had proposed something entirely new. As a matter of fact, there is a good bit of questioning whether the social insurance proposed is as up to date as the English legislation carried through by Lloyd George in 1912. Certainly there is nothing to fear.

Incidentally, the worries of our Pension Fund have been relieved by an exemption granted to our clergy and we need not fear that our very fine and efficient pension system is in any danger.

The lack of security is by far the greatest obstacle to real recovery in America today. Every year three million industrial accidents take place at great cost to workers and at the price of years of savings. Old age is the most fearful thing for any worker in almost any field to have to face. Even our clergy are far from exempt today when we hear that parish after parish considers a man forty-five years of age too old to be called. And in factories youth is asked, and only youth, to carry on the work of the machine age.

For a long time we worried about a dole and talked about the British dole, and yet when we came to need some relief we found that we were the ones who actually had a dole, while the British have never had a dole. Incidentally, the British have never felt their depression as we have felt ours, though it has been seven years longer in actuality, but their unemployed have had at least a minimum of security during these days.

Certainly for Christians with their knowledge that the Gospel of Our Lord implies that we have most of our troubles in proportion to our own deserts and that sins of the community should be shared by the community, there should be no opposition to any social insurance that will guarantee some sense of security.

Let us not forget that there were Christian ministers who opposed ordinary life insurance when it was first proposed on the ground that it would incite to murder and also opposed casualty insurance on the ground that it would encourage crime. We can profit by their mistaken ideas.

These Mites Boxes.

There has been a natural reaction to the use of the mite-box during Lent in the Sunday School. It has been said often of late that "we do not want our children to think of Lent only as a time of giving money." And indeed we don't, and yet there is a danger that this now time-honored custom, if allowed to die out, would, in dying, deprive us of one of the greatest factors of religious education which we have.

A few years ago the Religious Education Department of the National Council found a most attractive way of making these mite-boxes real and alive to the children and the only sad part of this good scheme is that a number of rectors and Sunday-school superintendents have not yet found out what this system of education was all about.

We were really proud when at the General Convention it was announced that, in fact, the children of our church schools had given more than the men—this was expected—but had also given a larger sum towards missions than even the women in their United Thank Offering. The children to whom this has been revealed have been duly proud of their accomplishment.

A rector who has a majority of children in his Sunday school, whose parents are on relief, tells us that the children take a great interest in the mite-box offering. At the beginning of the depression he thought he ought to eliminate this custom of giving out boxes, but he discovered two things. That mysteriously the children had money at times to buy candy and chewing gum and even some of the girls could get their hair waved, and that should he cut out the mite-box, there would be no demand made at all upon the children for any kind of sacrifice. They would have been paupers indeed!

Aside from the accomplishment of providing a great and wonderful sum to carry on the work of The Master in the foreign and domestic field, the children themselves have more and more been trained to know what missions are doing and the importance of the work—something that certainly their parents had been given too little training in their youth. Also the fact that a sacrifice is asked brings home the truer Lenten meaning of "giving up," for they know they give up something themselves in order that something might be given to somebody else, and not just for the sake of "giving up." Let us encourage, rather than discourage a fine custom.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

A Time for Reconsecration.

Federal Council Bulletin, March, 1935.

The Lenten Season is preeminently a time for reconsecration to Christ. It is also, of course, a special period for bearing a Christian witness to those who have not come under His influence, but our evangelistic outreach will only be in proportion to the measure of rededication in our own lives.

A movement which was launched by a group of Presbyterian churches in New York earlier in the winter might well be widely extended during Lent as a new kind of "revival." Its distinctiveness lay in its combined appeal to church members to take Christ more seriously in their personal living and also to relate their own attitudes and conduct to the larger issues of economic justice, racial goodwill and world peace. The members of the sixty cooperating churches of New York were asked to sign the following unusual "Reconsecration Covenant":

"I will pray and read the Bible systematically in order to understand the mind of Christ.

"I will seek to win at least one person to Christ and to bring him into the followship of the Church.

"I will strive to bring about a more Christian economic order, and to that end I will earnestly study the meaning of the Gospel for our economic life.

"I will take some positive and public stand against war.

"I will not knowingly be a party to any un-Christian racial discrimination and I will seek the friendship of persons of other races.

"I pledge my sacrificial loyalty to the worship and work of the Church."

If church members generally were to make such a recommitment to Christ and His purposes during this Lentén season, it would mean the spiritual rebirth which is the deepest need of the Church.

Justice Holmes' Last Gesture.

The Christian Century. March 27, 1935.

Why did Oliver Wendell Holmes leave the residue of his estate, amounting to over $250,000, to the United States, without even indicating a use for a sum of money which, large as an individual legacy, is an infinitesimal sum compared to those named in appropriation after appropriation by the federal government? The Christian Science Monitor suggests the answer and at the same time suggests that the fund be earmarked for some special use that would dramatize the gift—perhaps offer it "as a first installment to shame every bloc that comes begging for a special hand-out, with the words, 'Here, take this; this is the kind of money you are asking for'." The meaning of the bequest of half his fortune, according to the Monitor, was that Justice Holmes did not regard the government of his country as a reckless spendthrift, but had confidence in its integrity and in its essential ability to maintain at least an approximation to statesmanship. And while he thus registered his trust in American government and American democracy, Justice Holmes emphasized, possibly, his scorn of that attitude on the part of the rich that every penny they give to the government in income or other taxes is a regrettable diminution of fortunes rightfully theirs. His attitude the Monitor contrasts with that attitude on the part of the rich, and with that which rich and poor alike share, that the flow of money should be from the treasury to them rather than the other way around. Justice Holmes' bequest becomes therefore a symbol of an obligation which is binding on us all: to support our government and to remember that every penny of benefit we extract from it for ourselves is a penny taken from the savings of our fellow-citizens. How closely that explanation of Justice Holmes' motive parallels his conscious thinking when he made the bequest, we cannot say. But that the Monitor's interpretation is not only significant and arresting, but substantially correct, we have little doubt.

Taking the Profit Out of War.

Dean John W. Day, in The Witness, March 21, 1935.

Let there be no slackening in the efforts of all those interested in the ideal of a peaceful world. The Churches have declared that "war is sin." Then let the Christians of the land bind themselves together in ever increasing numbers and declare their intention not to participate in the wholesale murder of other peoples unless they as aggressors actually attack the people or borders of these United States. Let the clergymen of this country express themselves as determined never again to turn their churches into recruiting stations. Let them refuse even to become chaplains in regiments or on naval vessels.

Let the American Legion become more enthusiastic about pressing the matter of a universal draft in the event of war; a draft that will demand that machines, materials, employers and owners be recruited as well as employees. Let the constitution of our land be amended so that wealth may be drafted as well as life in case of war. Distinguished as all will admit our constitution to be, as a document of human liberty, nevertheless, it incorporates a presumptive principle which must be changed by an amendment. I refer to the principle which declares that Congress may draft a man's life in defense of his Country but not his property. This principle makes it possible for some men to give their lives in defense of their country while others become millionaires. Let an increasing number of citizens demand that in the event of war, Congress be authorized to draft all wealth, all industrial plants, banks, mines, railroads—every conceivable agency and means necessary to carry on the war and thereby make it impossible for any man to profit one penny at the expense of those who must offer their bodies in defense of the constitution.

The Use of Silence.

The Canadian Churchman. March 14, 1935.

A great help to beauty in our services is a space of silence. The Quakers for a long time have made use of this and we are beginning to do so. For a long time it has been observed at ordinations and more recently in our induction service. But there is nothing to forbid it in our ordinary services and creative silence is a most potent thing. Once I remember the rector at the close of the service called on all to say silently their own closing prayer. That silence was more impressive than any words he could have framed. I suggest that there is a beauty and power in silence that we should seek.

Then also the close of many of our services is marred by the fact that the clergyman and the choir will not let go. The close of our service is the Benediction but it iss almost a rarity for our churches to be satisfied to let it go at that. The organist and the choir insist on adding a vesper. Then when the choir are almost out of the church the clergyman frequently pauses at the back and says another little prayer, or the choir in the vestry sing the amen as a signal for the congregation. When will we be content with our service as it is? I submit that the Benediction closes our service and it cannot be improved by additions. All additions, I think, simply detract.

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

Staggering at the Promises of God

It is said of Abraham, that "He staggered not at the promises of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that what He had promised He was able also to perform." What we need in these days is faith of this kind. If it was general among professing Christians, we should soon see mighty changes taking place which would give us a new civilization of a far higher and better kind than that which is showing such signs of decadence now. God's promise to Abraham seemed impossible of fulfilment, but nevertheless he believed the promise, because it was God who made it, and he felt certain that He was fully able to fulfil His promise, no matter how impossible it might seem to be. Later on, Abraham's faith was put to a severer test still. He obeyed the command to offer up his son Isaac as a sacrifice to God, believing that He was able to raise him from the dead, in order to fulfil His promise that he, Abraham, should become the father of many nations, and that in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed. And so he became the father of the faithful, and an example of faith down to the end of time.

Another Wonderful Promise.

Christ, on the night before His death, gave to His disciples a wonderful promise, which was intended not only for them, but for us as well, since we profess to be His followers and disciples. He said:—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also and greater works than these shall he do, because I go unto my Father." St. John 14:12. It must be said, however, that Christians of today do stagger at this great promise of Christ, and are not strong in faith as Abraham was, because they do not believe that it is possible for this promise to be fulfilled. That is to say, they do not believe that what He promised He is able to perform.

Christianity's Failure Due to Our Lack of Faith.

It is, in a great measure, due to the fact that Christ's present-day followers stagger at this promise of His that Christianity is practically at a standstill. We measure that promise by what we feel we are able to do ourselves, rather than by what His power can accomplish through us. St. Paul put the matter very clearly and forcibly when He made the two following statements:—"I can of mine own self do nothing"; and, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." Our faith has sunk to so low an ebb that it does not measure up even to the minimum mentioned by our Lord, when He told His disciples what they would be able to do, if they only had faith as a grain of mustard seed. There were two occasions when our Lord commended certain persons for the greatness of their faith. One was that of the Centurion whose servant was sick and Christ was asked to heal him. On His way to the Centurion's house He received a message from him saying, "I am not worthy that Thou shouldest come under my roof, but speak the word only and my servant shall be healed. . . . When Jesus heard it He marveled and said to them that followed, Verily, I say unto you I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." But would not Christ have difficulty in finding a similar faith among His followers of the present day, unless it were the Japanese Christian, Kagawa? Then we remember our Lord's amazement at the persevering faith of the Syro-Phoenician woman, after He had denied her plea again and again, "O woman, great is thy faith, be it unto thee even as thou wilt, and her daughter was made whole from that very hour." This fits in very well with a similar saying of His, when He said to the father of the afflicted child, who came to Him upon His descent from the Mount of Transfiguration:—"If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth."

An Age of Faith, the Great Need.

We must return to an age of faith before we shall see what Christ can do to save us from our present situation. At Nazareth "He did not many mighty works because of their unbelief." And it is for the same reason, doubtless, that His Hand of power is stayed until we cease staggering at the greatness of His promise, because our faith is so infinitesimal that it is far from measuring up to the grain of mustard seed.

Christ's Power is Sufficient to Meet the World's Needs.

Some of our scientific friends are never tired of reminding us that this earth of ours is but a mere speck in the vast universe of an untold number of worlds far greater than it in size. Does it not seem absurd that we cannot trust Him, who guides the destiny of the whole universe and gives to each individual atom its part to play, to manage this tiny world of ours by bringing it into harmony with His Will? His Will and purpose are directed towards our everlasting good, but we must work together with Him so that our clumsy and ignorant interference will not hinder and retard the fulfilment of His Purpose.

IF.

If I had but the nerve to believe,
Just simply believe
That one could achieve
The things under the sun
That Jesus wants done;
If I had but the nerve to believe:

If I had but the nerve just to try,
Bravely venture and try
What the power from on high
Could do with just me,
From my poor self set free;
If I had but the nerve just to try:

Then my eyes would no longer be dim,
For I should see Him
With cup filled to the brim,
And each set of sun
Would see golden deeds done,
For I should see, I should see Him.

Frederick W. Neve.

Light of the World

(A Legendary Narrative.)

By THE REV. LOUIS TUCKER, D. D.

THE city of Jerusalem was the chief city of the Jews. It was not their biggest city. Sepphoris, for instance, about forty miles north, was a good dealer larger. Yet hardly anybody has ever heard of Sepphoris and Jerusalem is known all over the world.

That was because the Temple of God was at Jerusalem and Jesus came there. Great and rich and large and strong and beautiful as was Sepphoris, all its people came down to Jerusalem to worship: and many other people from all over the world came also; so that Jerusalem was famous from the British Isles to the Indies and from Morocco to Madagascar.

One of the thousand remarkable things they did at Jerusalem was to illuminate the Temple on the great feast days. The Temple itself was not very big—not larger than a middle-sized church: but it was plated with gold in places so that it flashed like a torch: and it was surrounded with courtyards and colonnades so big that they would hold two hundred thousand people. In these courtyards twice a year the chief priests put up great masts, so high that they towered over the tops of all the buildings: and across the tops of these masts they put iron crosspieces, and from the ends of these crosspieces they hung iron pots by iron chains. The pots were filled with olive oil and had great linen wicks in them so that they were like enormous lamps: and the masts had spikes driven in, so that you could climb up easily and put more oil into the pots.

Nobody was allowed to climb up there unless he were a young man and athletic and the son of one of the most important men in Jerusalem. They would not let a servant or an unknown young man do it. The chief priests issued invitations to the young men and big boys of the greatest families in Jerusalem to come and take turns at keeping the pots full of oil; and everybody who was invited accepted gladly, because such an invitation meant that you had socially arrived. It meant that you would be invited out everywhere and asked to all the dinners and entertainments and could go into politics if you wanted to and if you wished to marry any rich man's daughter no matter how great he was, you could, if she would have you. You were good enough to marry into any family. People often took a great deal of trouble to get invitations for their sons: and because the chief priests gave the invitations, they were the social rulers of Jerusalem.

One reason for the masts and lamps was really for the beauty of the illumination, just as we would build a bonfire. It lighted all the city and made the Temple courts almost as light as day. But the Rabbis tied moral meanings on to everything and sometimes there were poets among them. So they said that it was to teach the people of the Light that should shine out from Israel when Messiah came to lighten all the world. The real reason they would let only well-born boys put oil on the lights was that they wanted to rule and control who should or should not get into Society: but they said that it was to teach that Israel's best were none too good to act as servants in spreading the Messiah's Light.

AMONG all these young men who took turns in climbing up these masts and pouring oil into the great iron cauldrons were many, therefore, who felt that they were none too good, in spite of being the best in Israel, to tend the light that stood as an object lesson to all nations of how the Messiah should lighten the world. One such Elieasar bar Kor. His father was a man grown rich by importing ivory through Carthage so that he was able to move to Jerusalem to live and put his sons to school there.

Now everybody in ancient times got up very early in the morning—often before daybreak. This was because they went to bed very early at night—mostly at dusk. The reason was that they had no way to make a good light. Torches cost a lot of money and made a lot of smoke, but their light sputtered and flickered and was unsteady. If you did not use torches you had to use olive-oil lamps; and they flickered nearly as badly and cost more. So, except on great occasions like banquets and festivals, everybody went to bed at dark. People usually slept on the floor on two or three bed quilts folded up and laid one on top of the other and covered themselves with the top one: and they got up at first cock crow, when there was just the faintest suspicion of dawn in the east. The boys who fed the fires in the iron pots on the Temple masts stayed up all night; but they stopped putting oil in at grey dawn, so that the lights died out just about sunrise.

Jesus of Nazareth had slept on a pallet on the floor in the great upper chamber of Martha's house in Bethany, with the Twelve Apostles on pallets around Him. He waked at first cock crow, which is before daylight, and waked the others. They got up at once and went through the purple darkness before dawn to the Temple. They took no breakfast. Very few people ate breakfast in ancient times. For most, the first meal of the day was at noon.

When they got to the Temple the great iron cauldrons on the masts had not yet burned out and were still blazing gloriously, making the Temple Court as bright as day. It was still grey dawn. A young man clung partway up one of the masts, high enough up to see over the Temple colonnade and watch the dawn over the mountains. It was Elieasar bar Kor.

Jesus never seemed to speak very loudly; but any crowd could hear Him, no matter how large it was. Sounds echo upward, anyhow, reflected by the earth. So when Jesus stopped and, looking up at the great lights on the masts, pointed and began to speak, Elieasar could hear Him perfectly. He said, "I am the Light of the World."

The men around Him stopped, struck by the beauty of the comparison. The lights were put there to remind all people that the coming Messiah would shed a moral light out of Israel into all nations; so when Jesus said that Re was that Light, it meant that He was Messiah. But it meant more. Other nations have great and good men just as other houses had lamps and torches; but what were the strongest lamps and greatest torches compared with the great blazing lamps upon the Temple masts, and what were the wise and good men of other countries compared with Jesus. He may have meant even a greater thing. It was near sunrise. When the sun rose there was no more need of even the greatest lamps. There is promise of a time when the knowledge of God shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

Anyhow, it was a very beautiful comparison. So it made His enemies angry. The best way to destroy a beautiful poetical comparison is to ask the man who made it to prove it; because you cannot prove poetry. The Scribes and Pharisees asked Jesus to prove it:

and He said they were unreasonable and talked of something else. But Elieasar bar Kor clung to the mast and watched the sunrise and thought over what he had heard.

FROM that time on he was interested in Jesus of Nazareth. Fashionable society in Jerusalem paid very little attention to Jesus. They thought He was just another one of those street preachers and went through their round of dinners and garden parties and let Him alone. Pilate had to worry with Him; but Pilate was just a sort of chief of police and so did not amount to anything socially. Caiaphas, the High Priest, worried too; and Caiaphas was somebody—but, then, the worry was just part of his luck in being High Priest. The rest of really good society in Jerusalem hardly knew that there was such a man.

Therefore, when Jesus was crucified at Jerusalem nobody of any social importance paid any attention to it, except Pilate and the High Priests, and they could not help themselves. Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea did, of course; and they were socially important because they were the two richest men in Jerusalem, except Annas; but they had been thrown with him before and so they did not count. Nicodemus was leader of the opposition and so was thrown with anybody whom Annas attacked. Society did not have balls and dances in those days; but the round of dinners and parties went on as usual.

Elieasar bar Kor, however, was so interested that he went to the crucifixion. He would have saved Jesus if he could, but his father Kor bar Abner did not have enough political influence to do anything. At the crucifixion he was suddenly smitten with the certainty that Jesus was Son of God. He did not know how he knew, but he knew it. He was sure that this was he who should have saved Israel. He came home weeping, for young men in that day and country did not hesitate to cry if they felt like it, and he stopped going to entertainments and dinners.

He went, instead, to where the disciples met. There were about a hundred and twenty disciples. They would not let him in, of course, but they talked to him when he asked questions. He, therefore, heard all about the empty tomb and the angels and the appearance of Jesus to Cleopas of Emmaus and then to the disciples in the upper chamber and then to Thomas. It did not satisfy him. It was all private. He felt that there ought to be more. He talked with his father about it, because he was the kind of boy who is friends with his father. They agreed that there really ought to be more. If Jesus were Messiah, He ought to show Himself publicly to all and prove to them that He was risen.

THE disciples who had gone to Galilee came back; and then, one morning Jesus came to them at John Mark's home in the residence-part of Jerusalem. He gave them time to gather round Him and then He walked through the streets of the city. Elieasar bar Kor was there with his father, for they lived close by and the disciples had let Elieasar know that they expected something. Jesus walked half a mile through the streets to the business district and then half a mile more through the crowded streets among the shops and stores to the Jericho gate, and anybody who pleased could follow. Thousands did, and other thousands saw Him from doorways and windows. He went out of the Jericho gate and up to the crest of the Mount of Olives, where you could look down on Jerusalem on one side and on Bethany with all Jordan Valley beyond it on the other; and there He stayed talking with His apostles until the thousands who followed had time to come up and crowd around Him. Then He spread out His hands in blessing and rose into the air until at last a cloud received Him out of their sight.

About a month and a half later, Peter preached a great sermon in the Temple; and about three thousand men believed and were baptized. Among them was Elieasar bar Kor and his father. Kor bar Abner died soon after, saying that it was a pity that he had lived in Jerusalem during the whole ministry and only seen the Ascension; but that it was all right, because now he was going to see Jesus. As for Elieasar bar Kor, he went with Thomas to India, preaching, and twenty years later savage men crucified him, because he kept on telling people about Jesus and would not stop: but the ancient church he helped to found is alive on the coast of Coromandel even to this day; and the Light is now filling all the World.

BOOK REVIEWS

ROMANCE OF FIRE: By Paul Hutchens. Pp. 254. Price, $1.00. Published by William B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

This is really an inspiring story of what faith and love can do for other people, if used by Christians who are trained to know and possess them. The title of the book, "Romance of Fire," is suggestive to the treatment of the subject. It is the romance of the fire of faith and of love that purifies and moves both the giver and the recipient.

The story is a picture of a young lady, Betty Dreanard by name, who lived in the city of Chicago. Her father died and her mother married the second time. Betty's stepfather was cruel to her and a few days after her mother's death, she was forced to leave home with no place to go and no friends to care for her. But providentially she came in contact with Christian people who demonstrated the love of Christ for the lonely and needy. Their care and love led her to find faith in God which was destroyed by her step-father's cruelty and to see the reality of the love of Christ which constrained her to a more hopeful and decent life. It led her to happy marriage.

She was accused of or her cruel step-father's death and was made the center of many evil suspicions, but her newly-found faith was strong enough to lead her through her troubles victorious.

We would like to see more novels similar to this one. We need them today more than ever before. Here the reader will find the heroism of the Christian faith and ministry. An active faith, love and mystery are well combined in this story.

SNOWDEN'S SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS, The Fourteenth Annual Volume Published by The Macmillan Company, 60 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Pp. 370. Price, $1.35.

A practical exposition on the International Sunday School Lessons for 1935.

The book is divided into four quarters. The first quarter covers the Life and Letters of Peter the Apostle. It begins January 6 and ends March 31. The second quarter is a fine arrangement of lessons on "Some Great Christian Teachings." It goes through the thirtieth of June. The third quarter is very interesting to all who teach and who learn as well. It is a course on Biblical biography, "Representative Men and Women of the Bible." This series ends September 29. Some of the characters selected are, Moses, leader and lawgiver; Naomi, a woman of faith and courage; David, the great-hearted; Amos, prophet of social justice; Daniel, a temperance lesson; Joshua, a religious reformer; Martha, a home-maker; Barnabas, a converted man of means; Paul, worker with hands and brains; Lidia, Timothy, James, John. The Scripture lessons selected and treated very vividly make these old characters of the Bible to live today. The fourth quarter is a course of study on the "Later Prophets and Leaders of Judah." This course ends December 29.

We are pleased to recommend these studies to all who teach classes, both in churches and schools. They are evangelical and non-sectarian, but deeply spiritual and illuminating. Dr. Snowden's wide learning and deep spiritual life are reflected in these lessons.

Our Idols

By

JAMES E. FREEMAN, BISHOP OF WASHINGTON.

Bishop Freeman

THE WORSHIP OF IDOLS is not necessarily the bowing down to images of wood and stone. We become idolators when we make a fetish of conceits and practices and regard them as the supreme arbiters of our thought and action. Prejudice, bias, intolerance and other expressions of our thinking and habit where they govern us in our life, become idols that we pay homage and reverence to and in doing so, narrow our vision, limit our affections and restrict the area of our field of operation. Our modern life is characterized by much of this practice, and many of the old ideals and wholesome conventions that we once regarded as the high standards of conduct have been displaced and in their stead we have set up our selfish conceits and to them we pay unfailing homage.

In one of the ancient prophecies, namely, that of Ezekiel, fourteenth chapter, fourth verse, are these words: "Every man of the house of Israel that setteth up his idols in his heart, I the Lord will answer him according to the multitude of his idols." These ancient prophecies have never had greater pertinence as applied to modern conditions than they have today; indeed, some of the utterances of these great statesmen-prophets have a distinctly modern flavor.

Evidently the prophet, Ezekiel, was dealing with conditions that were threatening the peace and security of the people. The abandonment of their religious convictions and the setting up of new standards of conduct had carried them away from the wholesome practices and usages that had governed and controlled them in other and more prosperous days. While religion was indifferently held or its practices lightly maintained, they had ceased to be largely operative in the life of the people.

There is something about this condition that is suggestive of our modern life. We may not be prone to pay tribute to external objects that constitute idols. It is certainly true that we have come to pay devotion to our own conceits and to regard them as the infallible guides of our daily habit and practice. Among these we name three that are generally conspicuous in our life today, namely, self-ease, self-esteem and self-gratification. There are others, but these are possibly the most evident, and they exercise the largest influence upon our modern ways of living.

Self-ease, the desire to have nothing interfere with our complete freedom of action or to lay upon us any restrictions, is common to most of us. If we have a diluted religious faith or a superficial conception as to its relation to our daily conduct, we do not permit it to cause us any inconvenience or to lay upon us any disciplines that are irksome or unacceptable. Our desire for complete freedom makes us unresponsive to anything that places limitations upon us. We would be unfettered and unembarrassed by anything that disturbs our comfort or our assumed right to live our lives according to the dictates of our own wills. We pay unfailing tribute to the god of self-ease.

Again, an undue self-esteem occupies an important place in our philosophy. Our infallibility of judgment must never be questioned. It reserves to itself the right to speak with finality upon all matters that concern belief and practice. It is a final court of authority, and from its decisions there is no appeal. This form of self-idolatry issues in a kind of insularity of living, denies social responsibility and refuses to accept the ancient dictum that, "no man liveth unto himself." It is individualism carried to the nth degree.

Self-gratification normally follows upon an excess of self-ease and self-esteem. It implies unrestrained indulgence and utter abandonment of one's self to ways of living irrespective of the consequences they may entail on one's self or others.

These are some of the modern idols we worship, and they bar the way to the attainment of those high things of Christian character that are utterly indispensable to our truest development and highest attainment.

FIFTH SUNDAY IN LENT. PASSION SUNDAY.

The week upon which we today enter, the fifth week in Lent, begins with today, known as "Passion Sunday," and is so called from earliest times because with it commences the special commemoration of Christ's Passion. Some without any reason or authority identify this week with "Holy Week." This is absolutely incorrect. The services this week are commenced with the two glorious hymns of Venantius Fortunatus. Another name sometimes used for today is "Midlent Sunday," because it follows the Mid-Lent week. In Germany, today is called "Black Sunday," with reference to the veiling of the crosses in black, which takes place at that passage in the Gospel, "Jesus hid Himself, and went out of the temple." It may be of interest to add here in regard to the "Passion Flower" (Flos Passionis), it being supposed to have a connection with the Passion of our Lord. The name arose from the supposed resemblance of the corona to the crown of thorns, and the other parts of the flower to the names or wounds, whilst the five sepals and five petals were taken to symbolize the ten apostles—Peter, who denied, and Judas, who betrayed, being left out of the reckoning. In some of the botanical books of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries curious illustrations of this flower are given, in which the artist's faith or imagination had been given full sway. The collect for today is taken from the Sarum Missal, 1549 (Sacramentary Gregory), and seems to have no especial connection with this day, and is very similar to the collect for the Second Sunday in Lent. In connection with this collect it will prove interesting to turn to the Epistle for today (Hebrew, Chapter 11), in which we find the words, "Purge your conscience, etc." Conscience should guide our lives, setting before us a sense of duty. Consciousness, says Locke, "is the perception of that which passes in our own mind, the knowledge of our own feelings, right or wrong." I am sensible of a thing when I feel it. I am conscious of a thing when I reflect upon it. I am aware of a thing which concerns me, but is external to myself. Consciousness is the secret monitor within man, which accuses or excuses him, as he does what he thinks to be right or to be wrong. Therefore, we pray that "we may be governed both in body and soul and that through this guidance our conscience may be awakened in order that we may follow the monitions conveyed to us.

Superb Negro Leadership

By

THE REV. H. H. SMITH.

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON was a Moses to his race, and his leadership brought untold blessings to the Negroes of the South. He was born in slavery, but became one of Virginia's distinguished sons. Hampton Institute, under the leadership of General Armstrong, left its impress upon Washington. Few men ever owed more to their alma mater than Booker Washington owed to Hampton. He was in hearty sympathy with the idea that industrial education was the great need of his people. His educational aims for his race are the very essence of common sense. Speaking of his work at Tuskegee Institute, he said: "We wanted to teach the students how to bathe: how to care for their teeth and clothing." (Three girls, on entering the Institute, were found to be the joint owners of one tooth-brush.) "We wanted to teach them what to eat, and how to eat it properly, and how to care for their rooms. Aside from this, we wanted to give them such practical knowledge of some one industry, that they would be sure of knowing how to make a living after they had left us."

While the Tuskegee students were given practical instruction in carpentry, brick-making, farming, etc., their mental training was not neglected. Had he tried to prepare every student who came to the Institute for a "white collar" job, there would have been thousands of Negroes without employment. Washington was profoundly interested in the welfare of all the members of his race, and would have them make the very best of their talents; but he knew that the great majority of them would have to look to the trades and industry for a livelihood.

To a certain extent slavery had caused both of the races to look upon manual labor as an evil to be avoided, if not a positive degradation. To the slave this was natural, for he was without that incentive to labor which a sense of ownership inspires. Booker Washington was the man for the hour. He met the situation by teaching his students the dignity of work, and setting them an example by going out with them and taking part in house-building, brick-making, etc. Who can measure the good effects of such a common-sense attitude to life as he taught his students in these words:

"Our greatest danger is that in the great leap from slavery to freedom we may overlook the fact that the masses of us are to live by the productions of our hands, and fail to keep in mind that we shall prosper in proportion as we learn to draw the line between the superficial and the substantial, the ornamental gewgaws of life and the useful. No race can prosper till it learns that there as much dignity in tilling a field as in writing a poem."

Booker Washington taught his students by precept and example that the selfish life is a miserable failure. The Christian teaching of sacrificial service for others as the high aim of life was emphasized at both Hampton and Tuskegee—and bore fruit. When Indians were first admitted at Hampton, there was some objection by the students, but they were well received. "Whenever asked to do so, the Negro students took the Indians as room-mates, in order that they might teach them to speak English and to acquire civilized habits." "I have often wondered," says Washington, "if there was a white institution in this country whose students would have welcomed the incoming of more than a hundred companions of another race in the cordial way that these black students at Hampton welcomed the red ones."

And shall we not receive very kindly this little preachment from our brother in black? "How often I have wanted to say to white students that they lift themselves up in proportion as they help to lift others, and the more unfortunate the race, and the lower in the scale of civilization, the more does one raise one's self by giving the assistance."

One of the most admirable traits of Booker Washington was his patience and forbearance in the face of so many wrongs inflicted upon his race. However provoking the occasion, he never allowed himself to become bitter or abusive towards those who mistreated the Negro. General Armstrong, a Northern man of fine character, who founded Hampton Institute shortly after the war, seems to have inspired young Washington to cultivate a spirit of good-will towards friend and foe alike. Washington says:

"In all my acquaintance with General Armstrong I have never heard him speak, in public or in private, a single bitter word against the white man in the South. From his example in this respect I learned the lesson that great men cultivate love, and that only little men cultivate a spirit of hatred. I learned that the assistance given to the weak makes the one who gives it strong; and that oppression of the unfortunate makes one weak." He not only learned the lesson, but also practiced it in his own life. "I resolved that I would permit no man, no matter what his color might be, to narrow and degrade my soul by making me hate him."

WHEN Booker Washington passed away, his mantle fell upon a worthy successor, Dr. R. R. Moton, who had also been trained at Hampton. Dr. Moton continues at Tuskegee the good work carried on by Booker Washington.

In response to a call from President Wilson, Dr. Moton went to France during the World War to hearten the colored soldiers who were fighting in the ranks. We get some insight into the quality of leadership exhibited by Dr. Moton from an address he made there to the soldiers of his race, at the close of the war. He said, in part:

"The record you have made in this war, of faithfulness, bravery, and loyalty, has deepened my faith in you as men and soldiers, as well as in my race and country. You have been tremendously tested. You have suffered hardships and many privations. You have been called upon to make many sacrifices. Your record has been a thrill of joy and satisfaction to the hearts of millions of black and white Americans, rich and poor, high and low. Black mothers and wives, sweethearts, fathers, and friends, have rejoiced with you and with our country in your record.

"You will go back to America heroes, as you really are. You will go back as you have carried yourselves over here—in a straightforward, manly, and modest way. If I were you, I would find a job as soon as possible and get to work. To those who have not already done so, I would suggest that you get hold of a piece of land and a home as soon as possible, and marry and settle down. . . . Save your money, and put into something tangible. I hope no one will do anything in peace to spoil the magnificent record you have made in war."

President Wilson, while in France, wrote to Dr. Moton, at the close of the war, as follows: "I wish to express my appreciation for the service you have rendered during the past few weeks in connection with our colored soldiers here in France. I have heard, not only of the wholesome advice you have given them regarding their conduct during the time they will remain in France but also of your advice as to how they should conduct themselves when they return to our own shores. I very much hope, as you have advised, that no one of them may do anything to spoil the splendid record that they, with the rest

Colonial Churches En Route to the Magnolia Gardens

By

MARY F. GOODWIN, HISTORIOGRAPHER OF SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

There is something about an old church building which has an irresistible attraction for most of us. Many of us feel, however, that the majority of these structures are to be found in Virginia. While we have, perhaps, a larger number of them than any other Southern State, there are churches of great interest to be found to the south of us.

The annual trek to the Magnolia Gardens in Charleston has begun. It may not be out of place to point out a few of these old churches which can be visited en route to Charleston, though many of them may be off the direct highways to that city. However, a short detour here and there is certainly worthwhile when one is interested in seeing these old buildings.

The most direct route from Richmond south is through Petersburg and over U. S. Route 301, but one can hardly imagine a less interesting trip. By adding a day to the time allotted to the journey, the route on the northern side of the James River can be taken, U. S. 60, which passes the colonial churches of Hickory Neck, near Toano; Bruton in Williamsburg; St. John's, Hampton, and after crossing the Roads, St. Paul's, Norfolk. Or, if the southside of the river is preferred, one passes near old Blandford in Petersburg; Merchants Hope, which is a bit off the highway, but well worth a visit; the ruins of Lawne's Creek Church, near Bacon's Castle; St. Luke's, Smithfield, and St. John's, Chuckatuck. From this last village, by keeping on the same highway a two-hour's run brings the traveler to Edenton, N. C. There is scarcely a more interesting town in the South than this. Its many quaint buildings, its revolutionary war history, and the general atmosphere of leisure and peace which pervades it, are entrancing. The church here is not colonial, but is over a hundred years old, is the successor of an older building, and is surrounded by a colonial cemetery in which are many handsome tombs.

The Church in North Carolina, which has the longest colonial history, is the simple little church at Bath-St. Thomas, which has just passed its two hundredth anniversary. Readers of the Southern Churchman may remember reading the sermon preached at this celebration by the Historiographer of the Diocese of Virginia. Being so near Virginia, one is not surprised to find the architecture of this church conforming to the type most often seen in Virginia, simple, unadorned, but in perfect proportion.

On entering South Carolina, and making a few detours off the beaten path, one finds churches of a different type. The founding of the Church of England in this Province being under the direction of the great S. P. G., it is reasonable to suppose that when a new church was to be erected, plans and specifications were sent along with the order for its building. These little churches conform much more to the type seen in Rural England than to those built in Virginia. About twenty-six miles north of Charleston, on the Ashley River, may be found the ruins of the tower of St. George's Church, Dorchester, erected in 1719. Built of brick, this remnant gives credence to the tradition that the church was a copy of a Wren building. Surmounted on a Norman tower is an octagonal section of beautiful proportions, which must have been in turn surmounted by one or more smaller sections up to the Lantern at the top. The nearest approach to a similar tower in Virginia was the wooden steeple put on the older brick tower of Bruton Church. This old tower stands now in a tangle of trees and moss. The village it was meant to serve has also been deserted, and has fallen into ruins.

Within a radius of thirty miles of Charleston, one finds Strawberry Chapel, at Childsburg; Wambaw Church in St. James' Parish on the Santee, built in 1768; and St. James in St. Stephen's Parish, built in 1762, which is one of the handsomest country churches in the State. One notices that the windows in these churches are of a different proportion to those in the old churches in Virginia; the doors have over them a larger and more ornate canopy, and the roof-line is often quite unfamiliar to us.

Of course, the gem of country churches in South Carolina is St. James at Goose Creek. The date of its erection is variously given as 1706, 1711 and 1716. It is true, however, that the first church on this site was built in 1706 under the auspices of the S. P. G. It has the distinction of being the first church which this Venerable Society built in a foreign land, and a picture of it adorns the wall of the Society's Home Building in London. The present edifice was built during the pastorate of the Rev. Le Jau, of Ireland, but, judging from his name, a refugee Huguenot. He died in 1717, and was buried at the foot of the altar where a tablet to his memory was placed by his son. This church is only about twenty-one miles from Charleston. It is built of cast-brick with four arched windows and a door on each side. Each door is surmounted by a cherub. Over the west door, the keystone of the arch is crowned by the figure of a pelican feeding her young. There is a large window in the eastern end of the church, under which are the tablets with the Commandments on them, as required by English Canon Law, and the pulpit occupies the old accustomed place at the back of the chancel. Over this window is the Royal Arms of Great Britain, perhaps the only church in the United States today where this symbol of England's former authority can be found.

In Charleston itself one easily finds the colonial church of St. Michael, with its beautiful steeple, which is said to be a copy of that on St. Martins-in-the-Fields in London. St. Philip's Church, though not colonial, is considered beautiful, and well worth a visit. The other church in the city to which attention is called, is the successor to a colonial church, but has passed its centennial. It is St. John's, the home of the first Lutheran congregation in the South. For sixty years the pastor was the Rev. John Bachman, D. D., friend and fellow-laborer of Audubon.

The Jewish Congregation also has the distinction of being the first of its faith in the South. Their first synagogue was built in 1781. The great fire of 1838 destroyed it, however, and it was replaced by the present handsome building of brown stone, Athenian in style, and handsomely furnished.

Doubtless the traveler will find for himself many other old churches which are worthy of a visit from passing strangers. Aside from the beauty of these buildings there is something sacred in their old walls which stand so sturdily against the assaults of time. They were all built through the faith of some devoted church members; for that faith, and the old services held within them, for the Word preached to worshippers gathered therein, we bless God's Holy Name.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

A REASONABLE WOMAN'S LENT.

By

Sarah S. Pratt.

EARLY in a long life, under the influence of a cultured and churchly mother, there grew within me a constantly increasing appreciation of the beautiful adaptation of the words of our Prayer Book to human needs. The writer has lived through four Prayer Books, three of them called "revised," but it was in the first of them that this word "reasonable" seemed to be fitting for a school girl's religion.

Reasonable. God did not expect an unusual or dislocating mode of life. He remembereth that we are but dust. And so Lent became a time of reasonable thought and behavior tempered by the desire to make it a little different from everyday life. A little different. That seems or should seem to be the keynote of these quiet, beautiful forty days consecrated by the good and the great for about fifteen hundred years.

A sectarian minister once said to me, "Your Lent which you make such a fuss over was not begun for four hundred years after the Christian era." That seems a small criticism as nothing is recognized as great until it is seen in perspective. It is but a few years since many religious bodies began to notice Easter, but they will never stop. Rather will the importance of this Festival grow more important with time.

In the placid years of my youthful Lents, a woman had more time to be reasonable. There were not the time consumers—series of committees, groups, circles, clubs, classes, the penetrating voice of social uplift, and above all, the thunderous cry of bridge, to use every spare hour of woman's time. She might be a little aloof if she so desired.

And aloofness is the great need and privilege of Lent. How the hurried American soul needs this aloofness. Men may not always achieve its gracious sweetness, nor may the business woman, yet it should be sought by all Church people. Such an invitation to come aside and rest awhile should be gratefully accepted by those whose souls are worn and perplexed by life.

"You Episcopalians always do your sewing in Lent," a good Methodist once said to my mother. "Do you call that being religious?"

"You can call it religious, for it gives one time to think," my mother replied. And sewing does. The overflowing sewing basket of yore is seen no more, but there wil lalways be more or less of the gentle art, and it is tranquilizing and conducive to thought. Once a woman on being congratulated on a lovely poem she had written, said: "I composed it in my mind while I was doing my weekly mending."

A very important feature of a reasonable woman's Lent may well be a complete change of reading. These are the days and evenings to catch up with hastily read Church papers, to read the excellent books chosen by our educational secretaries, and to acquaint ourselves with the history of the Church and of the Prayer Book. The requirements for Confirmation do not seem as detailed as formerly, and there are many—yes, many—women who do not know even the rudiments of Church history. Lent is a suitable time for getting together in small circles for such a course. I once heard a clergyman commenting humorously on a program of Lenten study prepared for a Friday morning class: "You women get through in six weeks what it takes the clergy three years to master." "Well, at any rate, it creates an appetite for a knowledge of the Church," was the reply. And she was right. Those condensed talks about St. Augustine, Henry the Eighth, the Oxford Movement of the last century, John Wesley, have laid a foundation for a better education.

Small. kindly acts may easily become a Lenten feature: the sending of a book or a note or a telephone call to a lonely person. Besides these acts of friendliness, the giving of money is emphasized during these days. Added to our usual pledges, there is the little blue box with its mouth always open awaiting the daily gift of thanks. A pleasant friendship with Miss Emery, for many years our Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, especially interested me in these small boxes. A number of Triennials ago she asked me to write a history of the United Thank Offering. She suggested as the name, "The Offering of Romance." The article was prepared very thoroughly, all the financial details being furnished by Mr. George Thomas, for years treasurer of the Board of Missions. In time this pamphlet became out of date, but it was sent out with the literature from the Church Missions House until a successor was needed. The Triennial Thank Offering has grown steadily, and Lent has played a great part in it. Abstinence from favorite foods is practiced in some families. In a nearby family of children, candy is given up, and it is a cheerful denial—but, ah, when Easter comes!

But, above all these helps to a good Lent, there may well be the reasonable woman's attitude that her household should never be made uncomfortable; rather that there should be more attention to certain comforts and niceties which have perhaps been neglected or overlooked. A better place for the children to study, the right places for things, comfort and convenience in whatever place the loved ones may wish. All or any of these practices, gleaned from many Lenten seasons, may bring to the reasonable woman not only a profitable but a really happy and contented Lent.

Mrs. A. H. Sterne, Past President of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Atlanta, was invited to attend the meeting of all the women of St. Paul's Church in Albany, in the Diocese of Georgia, to help organize all the groups into a Parish Council. Mrs Sterne motored to Albany for the meeting on April 1.

During Mrs. Sterne's presidency most of the parishes in the Diocese of Atlanta unified the work of their Guilds and Auxiliaries, thus all the women's work touches the five fields (parish, community, diocese, nation, and world) and works under the four ideals of service, fellowship, prayer and study.

The women of the diocese have been studying Japan during Lent, with many study groups in each parish. Illustrated lectures and talks, with exhibits by returned missionaries, have been added features for some of the groups.

The women of Atlanta have the additional privilege of hearing Bishop H. J. Mikell lecture on the Bible each Friday morning at eleven o'clock at St. Luke's Church.

SUPERB NEGRO LEADERSHIP.

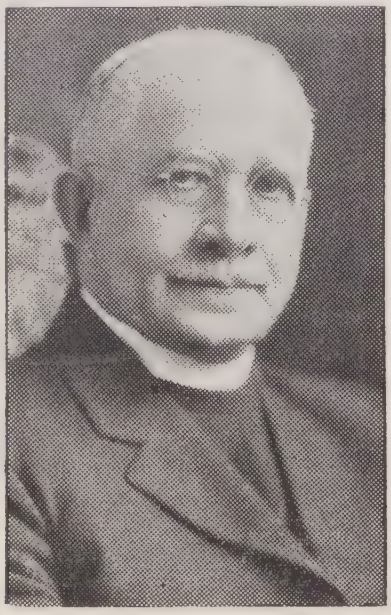
of our American forces, have made."



The white race has never done its full duty toward the colored race. But we trust that a brighter day is dawning. At least it is encouraging to hear Dr. Moton say regarding the outlook:

"The Church in the South, of every denomination, is becoming increasingly aggressive in its demand for a genuinely Christian attitude and program in race relations. The program of these bodies is not confined to works of mercy and charity in alleviating suffering and helping the unfortunate. They feel it their duty also to challenge the Christian conscience of their whole body of adherents to practice in daily contacts the principles to which they subscribe as disciples of Jesus Christ."

Archdeacon Russell Passes Away

The Rev. James Solomon Russell, principal-emeritus of the St. Paul Normal and Industrial School, Lawrenceville, Virginia, died at his home in Lawrenceville on the morning of March 28, at the age of seventy-seven. The funeral took place March 30.

As founder of St. Paul's School and its head from 1888 to 1929, Dr. Russell has long been known throughout the Church as one of the most distinguished and accomplished leaders of Negro education. He was born in Palmer's Springs, Virginia, December 20, 1857, and from his early boyhood seemed to be destined, by his mother's ambition and his own patient industry, to do great things for his people. He earned his way through Hampton Institute with intervals of a year's work.

Archdeacon Russell.

The desire to enter the ministry of the Episcopal Church came to him before he finished at Hampton, and in 1882 he was graduated from the Bishop Payne Divinity School, Petersburg, Virginia.

Seven days after his ordination to the diaconate he was at work in his first little mission, in Lawrenceville, and almost immediately began a parish school in the vestry room. In 1888 a three-room building was formally opened as St. Paul's School, with the principal and his wife and one other person as teachers and fewer than a dozen boarders.

The present school is famous, with a student body of over 700 boys and girls, enrolled in junior college, normal, high school, industrial, and grammer school departments. Numbers, however, are the least important indication of what Dr. Russell has mean to the whole cause of Negro education. As a former governor of the state has said, "The influences which have been going out from Brunswick County, through St. Paul School, cannot be expressed in words. The silent, powerful influence of Archdeacon Russell is felt among the colored people of America."

His wife, the former Virginia Morgan, was of the utmost help in all his work until her death in 1920. Dr. Russell received the degree of doctor of divinity from Virginia Theological Seminary and doctor of laws from Liberia College, West Africa. His son, the Rev. James Alvin Russell, succeeded him as head of St. Paul's.

Since 1906, when the Board of Missions of the Episcopal Church organized the American Church Institute for Negroes, of which the Rev. Robert W. Patton is director, St. Paul's has been one of the group of superior Negro schools cooperating under its direction and receiving much of its support through the Institute. There has also been a steady growth in local support and the school is held in increasingly high regard by Negro and white population alike.

Dr. Russell was a member of the National Council's Social Service Department from January, 1924, to December, 1931, the first Negro member of a National Council Department. He prized his membership highly and attended the department meetings as long as his health permitted.

Archdeacon Russell was one of the great men of his race, of the country of which he was a citizen, and of the Church of which he was a loyal and devoted servant.

Where could one find a greater contrast than that presented by the ancient and dilapidated cabin in which fifty years ago an almost friendless youth gathered a few students about him, and the great St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School in Lawrenceville, Virginia? Even more stimulating is the recollection of the thousands of young men and women who have passed from Lawrenceville to take their places in our national life as God-fearing and law-abiding citizens.

One thanks God for the patience, the imagination, the constructive genius with which He endowed James Solomon Russell. Among hosts of others I counted him a dear friend.

FREDERICK W. NEVE,
Archdeacon of the Blue Ridge and St. John's Church in the Ragged Mountains, and Founder of The Order of the Thousandfold.

He walked and talked with me one day,
Ah blessed day, moments sublime!
I led his faltering feet the way,
For he was old and blind that time:
He guided straight my groping mind,
For I was young and he was kind.

White hair and eyes that were afflicted,
Ah, Priest, with great and stooping frame
That moved with steps perforce restricted,
Thou hadst a soul, that all aflame,
Has lit a path for other souls—
"The Order of the Thousandfold."

LAST VOYAGE.

By

Rose Akin.

I spread my sails for home as one long lost
Would trace a silver path along the sky
That leads to those he loved, already crossed
Beyond the heavenly beacon's lazuli,
Dispelling all the intervening maze
That halts the spirit's course it boldly dares,
Nor once looks backs along the tangled days
So soon exchanged for breathing clearer airs.

The stormy, ocean-furied nights withdraw,
My sails now take their fill—no vacancy
In all their curving width or length—no flaw
To deviate my course, nor mutiny;
And no more tears nor dread of any night,
Where God, Himself, He says, will be our light.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

THE SPIRIT OF CHURCH HISTORY

Leader: In these days we are apt to be thinking so much about our own problems that we are apt to forget the privilege of spreading the Gospel to all nations. So this evening we are going to try to picture to you in three scenes what seems to have been the Spirit of the Church in bygone days. The first scene is in Ephesus. The date is 100 A. D. The characters are St. John, the Apostle, Bishop Polycarp and a boy named Irenaeus, who was later to be a great missionary in France.

John: Brother Polycarp, the time has come for you to depart for your Diocese of Smyrna. Sometimes I fear that people weary of always hearing the message that I so constantly bring of "Little children, love one another". But none that looked into the eyes of Jesus when He told us, "This new commandment give I unto you, that ye love one another even as I have loved you", can ever forget it even for a moment. So it is that message that I bid you carry to Smyrna, not only in your words, but in your life, that all may know that you and those of your Church have been in truth with Jesus.

Polycarp: Yes, father and brother, Apostle whom Jesus loved, your message shall be my message. For you remember that the Master took me, when I was a mere child, no older than little Irenaeus here, and set me in the midst of His Disciples and said, "Except ye become as a little child, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven". I can never forget the look on His face when He so spoke, so that I shall ever try to take and send that word abroad. Also, father, I would that I might take this child, Irenaeus, whom you have taught, with me to Smyrna.

John: This child I have loved, but my days on earth are few, so that if he is willing, I will gladly send him with you. Would you like to go with Bishop Polycarp, Irenaeus?

Irenaeus: Yes, father, for last night I had a dream. In my dream I saw an angel standing beside me, who said, "Come, child, the Master calleth for thee". Then I arose, for I saw Jesus afar off, and as I was coming to Him I awoke. What think you was the meaning of the dream?

John: I know not, child, yet possibly it was Jesus' call to you, even as He called my brother James and me to leave all and follow Him to become fishers of men. So if He calls thee again, go where He sends thee, even if it be to the ends of the earth.

Irenaeus: Truly, father, I shall do so. Perhaps from Smyrna He shall call me to go to some far off land, perhaps even to France, there to preach the Gospel of love, and there to found a mighty church that in turn may send the Word even farther, even to the islands of the west that men call Britain. Yet wherever He calls me I shall go, and in order to prepare I shall be diligent to study for the task. (Exeunt omnes.)

Leader: Irenaeus did indeed go to France. Our next scene is in Lyons, France, where, 590 years later, Aetherius, the successor of Irenaeus, is assembled with another Bishop, Virgilius of Arles, to greet Augustine, a monk of Rome, on his way to Britain, now under Anglo-Saxon rule.

Aetherius: Whom have we here, Brother and Bishop Virgilius?

Virgilius: Brother and Bishop Aetherius, Gregory, our brother and Bishop of Rome, has sent you a letter concerning this priest and monk, whose name is Augustine. Here is the letter.

Aetherius (reads the letter and then speaks): Welcome, Augustine, our Brother Gregory tells me that he is sending you to preach the Gospel to the English in Britain, and begs of me that I will consecrate you Bishop of the English.

Augustine: Yes, Gregory, my father in God and Bishop of Rome, has sent me to those heathen lands. I feared to go. Indeed, after I set out I turned back to ask him to send another than me. But he bade me go forward. I feared to be the only Christian in that heathen land.

Virgilius: Then fear no more, Augustine. For Christ has many who worship Him there. First, there are the British Christians, those who were conquered by the English. They have Bishops, priests and deacons, even as we, but their customs are strange, and the English will not listen to them. Then recently my friend, the King of Paris, had his daughter, Bertha, marry Ethelbert, King of Kent. But Bertha would not consent to the marriage unless she be allowed to remain a Christian. So she has taken Luidhard, a priest of Paris, to be her chaplain. Luidhard is a good man, and I know that he will help you.

Aetherius: Yes, and I will give you a letter to Bertha, to Luidhard and to Ethelbert, that you may have friends from the moment you land in Britain.

Augustine: I thank you both. Now, I will gladly go to the country of the English, for I see with my mind's eye a vision of a great Church of the English that I shall found. I see it spread to all of the British Isles, and though they be called the Isles of the West, I can see them sending missionaries to all the world until people of whom we now know nothing may hear the Word through English missionaries. Come, let me be consecrated Bishop of the English, that I may hasten to my task.

Leader: Our next picture is about a thousand years after the last. The scene is in London, England. There are four characters: The Archbishop of Canterbury, the successor of Augustine, is the first. Then we have the Bishop of London. The other two are Captain John Smith and the Rev. Robert Hunt, who are both about to sail to found Jamestown in Virginia.

London: Your Grace, the Archbishop, I have asked you to be present here in our final plans before the sailing of the ships to Virginia, that you may give us your advice and your blessing.

Canterbury: I thank your Grace, the Bishop of London. Nearly a thousand years ago Augustine founded this Church of England, and I, as his successor at Canterbury, will gladly speak to those who are going abroad to found a new country in Virginia. (He turns to Smith and Hunt.) To you my friends, I would speak to remind you that there are three reasons that Her Majesty and the London Company are sending you out. The first of these is the religious reason, that you may preach the Gospel to the heathen. So we send you, Mr. Hunt, and I charge you to be faithful. The second reason is the empire reason, that even as Spain has founded a Spanish Empire of the Roman Catholic faith in South America, so you may found an English Empire that will give freedom of worship to all Protestants, in North America.

John Smith (interrupting): But, sir, I am a soldier, and know nothing of teaching religion.

London: Yes, Captain Smith, the third reason has to do with you. It is that we may conquer a land with which to trade, and to found a colony for that purpose. But you must not fail to remember the first two reasons and to support Mr. Hunt.

John Smith: I will not, sirs. And each day we shall beg the blessing of Almighty God upon our undertaking, and I will pledge my cooperation to our chaplain, Mr. Hunt.

Hunt: Rev. father in God and Captain Smith, I thank you. Of you who remain in the homeland I beg your prayers. Captain Smith and I are going into a new land to found a Christian Empire. Where now there are but forests and savage Indians I have dreamed a dream of a flourishing colony, of Virginia. To this colony there will come other colonies until we shall have other colonies or states united in interest and in the worship of God. And I see in my vision a Church that spreads there until it reaches the sea in the South, in the West and in the North. Nay, more, I dream that in these United States the Church shall grow until its missionary zeal shall send missionaries to all lands that have not yet heard the Gospel, that they, too, may share in its benefits.

London: I thank you, Mr. Hunt. You and Captain Smith understand our purpose, so I will now ask his Grace, the Archbishop of Canterbury to give us his blessing.

Canterbury (who should be the rector): "The Peace of God," etc.

To deliver His Chosen out of the fire, He came and walked with them in the fire. Hereby Christ showed that what is done against His people, He takes as done against Himself; whoever throws them into the furnace does, in effect, throw Him in. "I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest."—Matthew Henry.

Faith in the cross is the cure for sin. Faith in the resurrection is the cure of spiritual weakness. In days, when wickedness is rampant and courage hard to keep, it is faith in a living Christ that fills our mountains with the horses and chariots of God.—Rev. J. B. Belk.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT COMMISSION—FROM EASTER TO PENTECOST.

Orders from the dioceses have necessitated large printings of the publications of the Forward Movement Commission. Up to March 23, 39,428 copies of Bishop Hobson's Radio address had been circulated, 83,472 copies of the leaflet, "The Episcopal Church," and 671,199 copies of the folder, "Discipleship."

The Commission's manual for Lent reached out for souls who had never yet really responded to the call of Christ; and to others with a recall to deeper Discipleship. It was not clothed in soft raiment. At times its cry to Turn! Follow! Learn! was like the Voice in the Wilderness.

The Commission's new manual for the Great Fifty Days between Easter and Pentecost is of another sort. The keynote is struck by the title, "Disciples of the Living Christ." True to Gospel and Prayer Book Teachings it views the discipline of Lent as only a right beginning, the clearing away of rubbish and the laying of a foundation. It strikes out at the commonly accepted heresy that Easter ends the Church Year when Churchmen may relapse again into casualness.

It teaches such a use of the great fifty days as the first disciples' experience when in company with their Risen Master, they solved their doubts, focussed their faith, and were filled with wonder and power.

The Living Christ—not a dead ethical hero of the long past but living for you and me—is affirmed through the seven weeks. Response to Him—action—discipleship in action—is the watchword. The theme is developed through daily Bible reading, daily meditations and counsel for daily action as follows:

Easter week: The Disciples and their Living Master.

Second week: The Disciples in their Home Circle.

Third week: The Disciples in their Parish.

Fourth week: The Disciples in Modern Society.

Fifth week: The Disciples in the Wider World.

Ascension: Christ the Living King.

Seventh week: The Gifts of the Holy Spirit.

Let Ascensiontide be spent by all in unusual watching and prayer. Let the Church give herself to prayer and dispose herself to expect an inpouring of Holy Spirit. Missions and retreats should be held in the Ten Expectant Days for winning souls, for instructions, Baptisms, recalling to loyalty, and to the long neglected Altar.

Whitsunday is to be the climax. The Presiding Bishop and the Forward Movement Commission call the Church in every place to make Whitsunday a day of great gladness, missionary expression, and ingathering of members.

The Prayer Book provides four services of Holy Communion for Whitsuntide. The Presiding Bishop calls for a Church-wide Corporate Communion at Pentecost. After the Offertory the people are to be led in a corporate ritual act whereby they reaffirm their vows taken in Baptism and Confirmation—with the new members received into the Body.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLICITY.

By the Rev. G. Warfield Hobbs, D. D., Executive Secretary.

The three major publicity modes of our day are: (1) Printing—including the secular press, the religious press, books, pamphlets, tracts, maps, charts, posters; (2) Radio—the newest miracle by which the Gospel message may be proclaimed; (3) The Motion Picture—by which in more convincing form than words, whether printed or spoken, the Church at home may see the Church afar.

To meet the challenge of the new day the first need is the spread of churchly knowledge. Publications and other printed material of the highest interest and quality, and of the widest types and kinds, are available to meet this need. There has continued a fairly appalling lack of the use of these availables. Four Church weeklies, The Spirit of Missions, and other Church publications have a total number of subscribers shamefully small in proportion to our communicant strength. The Department urges as a major activity on the part of each responsible leader in our dioceses, parishes, and missions that throughout the new triennium there be a determined and sustained effort to secure actual readers for Church literature, confident that only by reason of widening knowledge can we hope for greater power as individuals, and corporately, as a Church.

Radio presents a different problem. The Department of Publicity has been able to secure generous time, through the courtesy of the Columbia Broadcasting Company, on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and with the cooperation of notable leaders, clerical and lay, has presented programs of Church-wide interest. In addition broadcasting companies have accorded time to individual parishes and other units for services and for notable occasions of various kinds. It will be noted, however, that time on the air for religious services cannot be bought. As a result, on the occasion of each broadcast we are guests and as such are not able to make the fullest use of the opportunity for direct presentation of the specific message of this Church for propaganda in its interest. One alternative would be to own a broadcasting station and to conduct it as an evangelistic missionary on behalf of this Church. A more feasible activity which the Department urges upon the leadership of the Church is to secure through local stations all possible air time, acquainting such stations of special occasions as they occur, and more especially to secure when possible time on the air to stress the great seasons of our calendar. A most gracious spirit of cooperation toward the Church is universal among broadcasting groups, and the Department urges that real cooperation be offered them.

In no particular of modern promotional methods is the Church so lamentably behind the times as in connection with the motion picture, with or without sound. The Department of Publicity has made a few films, visiting only one field, however, for that purpose. Here and there amateurs at home, and returned missionaries, using 16mm film, are proving that there is today no more effective means to tell the mission story than by such pictures.

The Department is commanded to develop and prosecute the work of Church publicity. It points out these three challenging fields for such development and prosecution and urges that the whole Church unite in cooperation with it that in loyalty to the printed word, that in belief in the evangelistic validity of the broadcast, that in the convincing message of the motion picture we may build a program of the utmost helpfulness to our own people and of aggressive and successful approach to the great multitudes around us who need the message of the Gospel of Christ as it has been given to us to proclaim.

SUMMARY OF REGIONAL CONFERENCES.

The Rev. Dr. Bartel H. Reinheimer, Executive Secretary of the National Council's Field Department, has summarized as follows the discussions of the regional conferences directed by that department which were completed early in March, with the exception of one to be held in Boston April 23 and 24. Dr. Reinheimer says:

With the Boston conference in the present series not yet reported, the attendance reached 282. There was a fine representation on the part of the bishops, and the clergy and laymen present included diocesan field department chairmen, diocesan executive secretaries and treasurers, aides of the department, and local clerical and lay leaders. For the first time, diocesan and national officers of the Woman's Auxiliary were included.

Never before have conferences arranged by the department disclosed such an interest in missionary education and in ways and means to personalize missionary giving. Great interest was displayed in the proposals submitted for putting into effect the new canon aimed at greater uniformity in diocesan accounting. The whole experience of the Church in the matter of diocesan and parish quotas was reviewed. Preliminary discussions were held with the bishops and representatives of the dioceses on the subject of their "objectives" for the 1936 budget.

Finally, from the point of view of the field department, there was no more hopeful note than the apparent general recognition that the dioceses must strengthen their organization and program of field work to compensate for the reduced scale of national field work provided for in the Emergency Schedule.

CONFERENCE OF CHURCH WORKERS.

Preceding the General Conference of Southern Mountain Workers, Knoxville, Tennessee, St. John's Church and Parish House, April 1 and 2, 1935.

The conference opens April 1, at 8 P. M., with a service at St. John's Church.

"The Need of the World and the Forward Movement," will be the subject of the address given by the Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, D. D., member of staff of The Forward Movement, formerly connected with Department of Religious Education of the National Council.

"Some Glimpses of the Home Field," by the Rt. Rev. Frederic B. Bartlett, D. D., Bishop of North Dakota and Executive Secretary, Department of Domestic Missions.

On April 2, the morning session will include a Statement by Bishop Bartlett and brief reports from the field. "The Relation of Missionary Work in Coal Camps to Mountain Work," by the Rev. John Winslow, of St. Mark's Mission, Dante, Virginia. Moving Picture: A National Program in the Tennessee Valley, by courtesy of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The afternoon session—

"The Mountain School," by the Rt. Rev. Robert E. Gribbin, S. T. D., Bishop of Western North Carolina.

"Agricultural Phase of Mountain Work," by Captain George Wiese, of Grace House-on-the-Mountain, St. Paul, Virginia.

"Our Work in the Cumberland Mountains," by Ven. Gerald H. Catlin, Archdeacon of Mountain Missions in the Big Sandy Valley.

"The Supremacy of Christ," by the Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, D. D.

Please register with Miss Ramee at 7:30 Monday evening, or directly after the service, in the Parish House.

INCREASING EMPHASIS ON MISSIONARY EDUCATION.

The Rev. Dr. B. H. Reinheimer, Executive Secretary of the National Council's Field Department, is sailing on April 10 to visit missionary districts of Puerto Rico, Haiti, Dominican Republic, Cuba, and Mexico. He expects to collect pictures and information for missionary education. The Field Department has been placing an increasing emphasis on the use of missionary education rather than organization and financial appeals in the promotion of the support of the Church's general work. It was this policy which prompted the department to carry through the Church-wide itinerary of missionary teams last November.

The need for fresh information about our missionary work in the Caribbean and Central America is considered as especially important because of the fact that all the communions cooperating with the Missionary Education Movement will be studying Latin America throughout 1936.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE.

Under the general topic, "The Church and Social Security," the next regional industrial conference under the direction of the National Council's Social Service Department is to be held on Monday, April 8, in St. George's Church, New York, by courtesy of the rector, the Rev. Dr. Karl Reiland, with sessions at ten-thirty, two-thirty, and eight. The Federal Council's Department of Church and Social Service is cooperating.

Current widespread concern for social security will, it is believed, give particular interest to this consideration of the subject in the light of the social principles of the Church. The Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, Executive Secretary of the National Council's Social Service Department, states as the purpose of the gathering: "This Conference, set up to explore the relation of the Church to the whole question of social security, is designed primarily for the clarification of issues. Resolutions of policy will not be adopted."

With this end in view, the speakers and their subjects are:

In the morning: The Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of New York, and Chairman of the Sponsoring Committee. An introductory statement.

John B. Andrews, Ph. D., Secretary, American Association for Labor Legislation, "What Is the Problem of Social Security?"

Mr. Barnes, "The Church's Concern With Social Security."

Spencer Miller, Jr., the social service department's consultant on industrial relations, "Labor's Concern With Social Security."

In the afternoon: Edwin E. Witte, Ph. D., professor of economics, University of Wisconsin, and executive director of the National Committee on Economic Security, "The Government and Economic Security."

Bradford B. Locke, executive vice-president, Church Pension Fund, "The Church Pension Fund and Social Security."

In the evening: The Hon. Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, "The Goal of Social Security."

Forty Churchmen are a sponsoring committee for the conference. Among them are, besides Bishop Gilbert, chairman:

Dean Fosbroke;

Charles C. Burlingham, president of the New York City Welfare Council;

Henry Goddard Leach, editor of The Forum;

Mrs. Elinore M. Herrick, regional director of the National Labor Relations Board;

Mrs. Mary H. Simkhovitch, Director of Greenwich House;

Miss Winifred M. Forsyth, director of Christadora House;

Mrs. John M. Glenn, president of the Family Welfare Association of America and of the National Council Church Mission of Help;

Rev. Harold H. Kelley, superintendent, Seamen's Church Institute of New York;

Edward L. Parker, executive secretary, Social Service Bureau of the City of Newark;

Walter W. Pettit, assistant director, New York School of Social Work;

Mrs. Harriman N. Simmons, president, Consumers' League of New Jersey;

Miss Lucy Randolph Mason, executive secretary, National Consumers' League.

RURAL LIFE SUNDAY.

The National Home Mission Council has for several years been sponsoring a movement for the observance by all churches of the nation of the fifth Sunday after Easter as Rural Life Sunday. It urges that at this time appropriate exercises, designed to arouse interest in and promote good country life be observed.

The Virginia Rural Church Conference Board has for the last five years given its support to this movement. The same is true of the Grange. The Governor has also usually issued a proclamation in support of the observance of this occasion.

May 26 has been selected by the Virginia Rural Church Conference Board for this observance this year, although any date in May most convenient to local groups will do. Two types of programs are suggested: (1) a church service especially stressing the moral and social responsibility of all for community well being as well as a service designed to inspire efforts to reach the higest possible plane of community life; and (2) a stock-taking or inventory of community conditions, needs, and progress. A listing of all families in the community and a check-up as to which ones are not affiliated with various local organizations is especially desirable at this time. The second type of undertaking will require advance work by committees. The results of this inventory should be reported at a special meeting before or after the special church service. It is highly desirable for all the different groups in a community to cooperate on this occasion.

A special leaflet giving Scripture readings and prayers, suitable for Rural Life Day, can be had from the Home Missions Council, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York, for three cents. Material of value for such programs can also be had from "Forward Steps for Country Life," "Virginia County Conditions and Trends of Social Significance"; and "Negro Life in Rural Virginia," obtainable for the asking from the V. P. I. Department of Rural Sociology, Blacksburg, Va. For additional information, write Rev. W. C. Shawen, Chester, Va., Chairman of the Rural Life Day Committee of the Rural Church Conference Board.

Rt. Rev. H. St. G. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Seminary Missions.

Plans are being perfected by which a clergyman, not connected with the Seminary, is to have the oversight of the churches and Sunday schools, known as Seminary Missions. Students from the Seminary will still do the work in these various stations as heretofore, under the supervision of the minister-in-charge.

Rappahannock Convocation.

The spring meetings of the Laymen's Association of the Rappahannock Convocation will be held as follows: April 1, St. John's, Warsaw; April 2, St. Mary's, Fleeton; April 3, Ware Church, Gloucester; April 4, Fork Church, Hanover County; April 5, Aquia Church Parish House. These will all be supper-meetings and will be addressed by the Rev. H. A. Donovan of Fairfax, former missionary to Liberia.

The Rev. W. Leigh Ribble, formerly of Grace Church, Stanardsville, entered upon his duties as rector of Old Falls Church, Fairfax County, on March 10. Mr. Ribble is keeping the editorship of the Virginia Churchman, to the gratification of all the friends of that paper.

To Unionize the Clergy.

The Ministers' Union of America, with a membership of about seventy-five Protestant ministers and a few rabbis, is seeking a charter in the American Federation of Labor. The Rev. Dr. Edmund B. Chaffee, editor of "The Presbyterian Tribune," is the founder of the Union. Among the New York ministers who signed the petition for the charter is the Rev. Henry P. Van Dusen, dean of Union Theological Seminary; the Rev. James Myers, Industrial Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches; the Rev. Phillips P. Elliot, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Brooklyn, and the Rev. Dr. John Haynes Holmes, minister of the Community Church. Dr. Chaffee, the founder of the Union, feels that it is necessary to unionize the clergy, not only on economic grounds, but also "to raise professional standards."

Social Service Conference.

The Department of Christian Social Service of the National Council of the Church conducted a conference at St. George's Church, New York City, Monday, April 8. Old-age, unemployment and health insurance were discussed at the conference. It was the first social security conference ever held by our Church in New York City. The conference was called by the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, executive secretary of the Department of Christian Social Service. Mr. Barnes said that the conference would adopt no resolutions of policy, but was designed primarily for "clarification of issues." Among the speakers were the Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, Suffragan Bishop of New York; Dr. John B. Andrews, secretary of the American Association for Labor Legislation, the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, and Miss Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor.

PENNSYLVANIA

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop.

Address on the Love of God and the Human Body.

Dr. Richard C. Cabot, Professor of Social Ethics at Harvard University, and a member of the staff of the widely known Massachusetts General Hospital, made a special address on Tuesday, April 2, in the Church of the Holy Trinity, on "The Love of God and the Human Body." Dr. Cabot, who comes to the city at the invitation of the Rev. Howard R. Weir, rector of Holy Trinity, and the vestry of that parish, is known throughout the United States as the originator of medical social service. He is credited with being the leader in bringing doctors to center their science and skill upon the patient rather than the disease, and it is said, is especially interested in helping clergymen to deal more effectively with people in difficulties, particularly in times of illness. Dr. Cabot is also the author of many books, of which "What Men Live By" is probably the one best known to the general public.

Conducting Noonday Services in Old Trinity.

The Rev. Dr. Leicester C. Lewis, rector of St. Martin-in-the-Fields Episcopal Church, Chestnut Hill, accepted an invitation to conduct the Noonday Lenten Services in historic Old Trinity Church, New York, during the week, April 1-6.

St. Mary's Chapel Service.

George Herbert Randall, Director of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew Chapter of the Church of the Holy Trinity, conducted the 11 A. M. service in St. Mary's Chapel of the Cathedral Church of Christ, in Upper Roxborough, last Sunday. Mr. Randall, who is a member of the Executive Council of the Pennsylvania Assembly of the Brotherhood, is also a licensed Lay Reader in the Episcopal Church by appointment of Bishop Taitt.

Bishop Bennett at Holy Trinity.

The Rt. Rev. Granville G. Bennett, assistant to the Bishop of Rhode Island and former Bishop of Duluth, conducted the fifth in the series of Thursday night Lenten preaching missions in the Church of the Holy Trinity.

Bishop Davenport Addressed Clerical Brotherhood.

The Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, Bishop of the Diocese of Easton in the State of Maryland, made a special addressed to the Clerical Brotherhood of the diocese, April 1 in the Church House

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman D. D. Bishop.

Unique Service.

On March 31 a unique service was held at St. Mark's Church, Washington, the Rev. Wm. R. Moody, rector, when the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the men's and boy's choir was celebrated. This is one of the oldest male choirs in the Church, and was organized in 1885, under the Rev. A. Floridus Steele. The first choirmaster was Charles Wake. At this service a number of former members of the choir were in attendance. Thirty-seven years ago a choir camp was set up at Point Lookout, and there are nearly a thousand choir "alumni" in Washington and elsewhere.

Pertinent and Timely Resolution.

"We believe it to be wrong for any government to hinder or discourage the free worship of God in accordance with the tenets of any religion. Therefore, we cannot remain silent in the face of persecution of religious or racial groups anywhere; and we hope and pray for the speedy end of persecution. We hereby express and record our sympathy for those who suffer because of being in the minority, in religion or race, no matter what that religion or race may be." This is the draft of a pertinent and timely resolution, passed by the Council of the Union of American Hebrew Associations at its sessions just closed in Washington. It had indirect reference to religious persecutions in Mexico and in Germany. A resolution in behalf of peace was also framed as follows: "This thirty-fourth council of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations wishes to reiterate its belief in peace and its prayer is that mankind may soon learn the way to avoid war." Bishop James E. Freeman was a speaker at the council sessions.

Clericus Meeting.

The Rev. Dr. Wm. S. Bishop addressed the March meeting of Washington Clericus, held at Epiphany Parish House. His subject was, "Baptism and the Baptismal Formula in the New Testament." The next session has been set for April 30, at the same place.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Presiding Bishop Enthused Over Spirit Shown in Western States.

The Presiding Bishop and Mrs. Perry stopped briefly in Chicago this week on their return from the West, where Bishop Perry has been on a tour of inspection of Western dioceses.

Bishop Perry was most enthusiastic over the progress of the Church in the West. He was particularly enthused over the spirit shown among the clergy and workers in far Western States and the rapidity with which such workers gather together from long distances on short notice.

Bishop Perry sees in the Forward Movement plan of the Church a great opportunity and a challenge. Such should give spiritual impetus to the whole work of the Church, he believes.

The primate expressed great concern over the stricken dust storm areas. He and Mrs. Perry were in those territories both going West and returning. He saw in the dust storms possible far-reaching future effects upon the territories stricken.

Bishop Perry was met at the Northwestern station by Bishop Stewart of Chicago, Bishop Johnson of Colorado, who is in the city speaking at the noonday services of the Church Club, and Mr. Wirt Wright, diocesan treasurer. Reports were given the primate on the progress of the Chicago million dollar forward movement campaign and he promised to return to the city for a "victory" meeting at St. Luke's Pro-Cathedral in Evanston in mid-June.

Bishop Perry appeared rested and much improved in health.

Bishop Johnson Advocates Archbishopric.

Creation of an American Archbishop for the Church, with a primatial see and larger authorities than are now given the Presiding Bishop, was suggested by Bishop Irving Peake Johnson, speaking before a group of Chicago laymen at the Hotel Sherman this week. Bishop Johnson was in the city speaking at Church Club Lenten noonday services.

Such a plan, in Bishop Johnson's opinion, offers the solution for the Church's problems at the present time. The Presiding Bishop at present has little authority, he said, and in fact hardly knows what his duties are. He said, instead of the Church being Episcopal at present, it is Congregational and is run by vestries.

Under the system he suggested, Bishop Johnson feels the Bishop of a diocese and the vestry of a parish should have equal and joint authority in the election of rectors. As it is, he pointed out, a vestry can force any sort of a priest it pleases upon the Bishop of a diocese.

Bishop Johnson spoke at the noonday services on what the Church is and whether or not it has been a failure in modern times. He attacked the propaganda of Huey Long, Hitler and Stalin, and labelled the present-day gospel as "the gospel of be comfortable at any cost."

St. Luke's Pro-Cathedral Joins Campaign.

St. Luke's Pro-Cathedral, Evanston, is the latest large parish in the Diocese of Chicago to join heartily in the million-dollar centennial fund campaign. This week St. Luke's decided to seek to raise $200,000, of which $60,000 would go to the diocesan fund; $140,000 to the parish fund. Mr. George K. Gibson, for many years a leading layman in the diocese, was named chairman of the St. Luke's campaign fund.

St. Luke's this year is celebrating its fiftieth anniversary and the jubilee program will be part of the campaign. In June it is planned to have a great victory service, with the Presiding Bishop taking part.

Noted Author to Speak.

Miss Winifred Kirkland, internationally known author of "Portrait of a Carpenter," "Let Us Pray," and many other books, will speak to the women of the Atalnta District on Monday, April 8, at 2:30 o'clock at All Saints' Parish House in Atlanta.

Preceding Miss Kirkland's address on Prayer will be a meeting of the Atlanta District, which is composed of women from Atlanta, Austell, Carrollton Cartersville, Cedartown, College Park, Dalton, Decatur, Marietta, and Rome. This meeting is called for one o'clock.

The Woman's Auxiliary has divided the Diocese of Atlanta into three districts for the purpose of a closer coordination of the work. They are Atlanta, Athens and Macon, and are under the direction of a vice-president of the Diocesan Auxiliary, who is a resident of the district.

Archdeacon Russell Buried. Three Bishops Take Part in Service.

Lawrenceville, March 30—(A.P.) — With simple rites in which no eulogy was spoken, in conformity with stipulations he wrote down during the last four years, Dr. James Solomon Russell, 77, founder of St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School and the first minister of the Negro race to be elected to the Episcopal bishopric, was buried here today with three bishops and forty ministers taking part in the services.

Thirteen of the priests in the procession were white, all the honorary pallbearers were prominent white citizens of Brunswick County, and among those sending 200 messages from twenty States were Presiding Bishop James DeWolf Perry and Bishops William T. Manning and A. S. Lloyd of New York, George Stewart Craig of Chicago, Robert C. Jett of Southwestern Virginia, and E. Thomas Demby of Arkansas.

Most of the telegrams received lauded Dr. Russell as "a leading churchman and Christian and a credit to his race, state, nation and church." Dr. Russell died Thursday. He had founded the school for Negroes here in 1888 and declined his election to the bishopric to remain at the institution, of which he was principal-meritus when he died. No eulogy of his work was spoken at the services today, in keeping with his own request. "My work will speak for itself," he had said.

More than 3,000 persons attended the funeral, which was in charge of the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, Bishop of the Diocese.

America Far Behind European Contemporaries.

Mr. Spencer Miller, Jr., Director of Workers' Education Bureau, and the Consultant for the National Council Department of Social Service, on Industrial Relations, was the guest speaker, Sunday, March 24, in two Chattanooga churches. He spoke at the Chapel of the Good Shepherd in the morning and at Grace Church in the evening. Mr. Miller's presence in Chattanooga was occasioned by a Conference on Social Security, which was held under the auspices of the Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council. In his talks in the churches, Mr. Miller concerned himself with the present widespread social insecurity and outlined the Christian approach to the problem with which we are faced in this and other countries. America, according to Mr. Miller, prides herself upon her program, and yet in this, perhaps the fundamental issue in a real progress, America is far behind her European contemporaries. Mr. Miller gave some disturbing figures concerning the present economic and social aspects of our day. The New Deal has accomplished few of its major objectives, and its program of spending has shifted an impossible burden to the shoulders of posterity. Social insurance, Old Age Pensions and Health insurance are real necessities, and are steps in the direction of a more realistic recovery. The perspective of this day bids us realize that we are in truth members one of another.

Three Clergy Conference.

Fresh impetus to the Forward Movement in South Florida was given by Bishop Maxon, who, assisted by Bishop Wing, conducted three conferences for the clergy—these held in St. Andrew's, Tampa, on March 18; in Holy Trinity, West Palm Beach on March 19, and in the Cathedral parish, Orlando, on March 20, each marked by good attendance and keen interest. Bishop Maxon's help was deeply valued, and will reach the congregations through the clergy.

During the week of March 17-24, the Rt. Rev. Frederick B. Bartlett, of North Dakota, visited the colored missions of this Diocese as the representative of our National Council.

Winter visitors from many States have been gladly welcomed in our church services throughout the Diocese, with effort by clergy and parishioners to make them feel at home while sharing the ministrations of the Church in our Southland.

Crusading Convocation.

The Northwestern Convocation of the Diocese report success for their crusade held during the Epiphany Season. Crusades were held for periods ranging from one to two days in twelve points within the Convocation, by teams consisting of a Bishop, a priest, a layman and a laywoman. Group conferences were held during the day, dinner meetings with the men and mass meetings in the Church during the evening. Results noted are: new branches of the Woman's Auxiliary, one Church school re-established, in one parish the largest Confirmation class ever presented, new branches of the Layman's League, volunteers for Church school teaching, in one parish the organization of a Parish Council. The offerings taken at the services produced sufficient capital to underwrite the entire Crusade expense.

THE CROSS.

I wonder oft who made the cross
On which my Saviour died.
Who nailed in place that shorter piece
Across the upright wide?

That timber was a worthy thing—
So tall and straight and true.
It never could have been a cross
If left the way it grew.

'Twas human hands that fashioned it
With arrogance supreme
That dared across that perfect thing
To fix the lesser beam.

Oh, woe to him, who'er it was Performed that cruelty.
I censure while I pity him—
Yet I am base as he.

This very day I made a cross,
And on it crucified
My Lord, with spikes in feet and hands.
A spear-thrust in His side.

Across His purpose in my life.
So loving, kind and true,
I set my weak but stubborn will
And tortured Him anew.

Armageddons.
V.
Triumphant Humanity.

Rev. Upton H. Gibbs.

When the sun set on Good Friday evening, on darkness, despair and apparent defeat, it was to rise on Easter morning most gloriously bright, to chase away the darkness, turn despair into confidence, and defeat into victory.

At the close of Good Friday, the hopes and aspirations of the followers of Jesus Christ were buried in a cavern tomb with its entrance securely sealed, as if to prevent their renewal. However, love remained, though hope was given up. And love had its great reward by having its fears dispelled and its mourning turned into joy.

The revelation that the Crucified One had risen from the dead was first given to those who represented the authority that crucified Him. To them it was the revelation of judgment and condemnation, paralyzing them with fear. But to the faithful who sought at the first break of dawn to complete their loving ministrations for the care of His body, it was the revelation of life and the triumph of righteousness.

We sense something of their bewilderment and joy, on reading the accounts of their finding the tomb open and empty, and the angel announcing:

"Fear not ye; for I know that ye seek Jesus, who hath been crucified. He is not here: for he is risen even as he said. Come see the place where the Lord lay."

Then all doubt was removed as they met Him on the way, and were assured that it was He indeed and no other.

What a change from the Crucified to the Risen Christ! Instead of being despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, here was One who while bearing the marks of the conflict, was undeniably the triumphant Victor. Humanity's champion had won humanity's fight against the full power and forces of evil.

Easter Day is humanity's Emancipation Day, and festival of rejoicing. The open and empty tomb, with the discarded grave clothes was the casement from which triumphant humanity emerged into light. For the resurrection was not a resumption of the old life, but a new development after a higher order.

The Crucified One could be imprisoned in a tomb, bound with cerecloths and subject to death, but the Risen Christ cannot be held by these, for He transcends them and all other temporal limitations and conditions. Henceforth the whole universe is subject to Him to command and control all authority and power being conferred on Him.

"The strife is o'er, the battle done;
The victory of life is won;
The song of triumph is begun;
Alleluia!"

Note: Armageddon usually refers to the "battle on the plain", predicted in the Book of Revelation, that is yet to be waged. But the name is applicable to the two battles we have been considering. As all three represent the same conflict between the opposing forces of good and evil, and under the same commanders, Christ and Satan. The issue also is the same, the supremacy over humanity, for which depends its life or death.

"The Bountiful Goodness."

Every churchman knows that Lent is forty days long, omitting Sundays, because Jesus fasted forty days in the wilderness. Likewise everyone knows that the Christian Easter corresponds to the Jewish Passover. "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us."

The fifth Sunday in Lent is just a fortnight before Easter. It is called Passion Sunday, because the Epistle makes distinct mention of the shedding of Christ's blood and the Gospel records an attempt on Christ's life, which may be regarded as a hint of His passion. In our Hymn Book there is a special hymn for the fifth Sunday in Lent:

"The royal banners forward go
The Cross shines forth in mystic glow."

It is not an easy tune, but as it is specially marked for this Sunday and has come down the ages to us, we think that all our churches should attempt it.

One phrase in the Collect is very arresting—"Thy great goodness", or as it may be translated, "Thy bountiful goodness". Our word, "God", is only a modified form of the word "good". God is the good one—the liberally and bountifully good one. "God is love."

"Thy bountiful care
What tongue can recite?"

asks the hymn, and truly God's bountiful goodness runs like a thread of gold all through revelation. Far back in the second commandment it is written that the sins are visited to the third and fourth generation, but the mercy is shown "Unto thousands in them that love me and keep my commandments". The mercy far outruns the judgment.

The Psalmist in that matchless twenty-third psalm has the same idea, though it is not clear in our translation. The last verse is, "Goodness and mercy shall pursue me all the days of my life". It is a stronger word than "follow". God's bountiful goodness is in our lives abundantly, but few of us are as wise as Mrs. Wiggs, and count our blessings. The climax of this thought was expressed by Jesus when He said: "Your sorrow shall be turned into joy." Mark that it is not exchanged for joy, the sorrow itself shall become the joy. Bountiful goodness can go no further than that.—Canadian Churchman.

Unless we suffer grief
We never know the joy
Of peace and rest in smiling
When little things annoy.

Unless we suffer pain

We never know the pride
Of overcoming hardship
When hope has almost died.

Unless we suffer loneliness

We are in close friendship

The Ageless Entities.

Some things never grow old. Eternal youth gilds their brow. They are the imperishables, the ageless entities, the eternal verities. The singing stars that kept watch over us last night are the same that shone on the shepherds that watched their flocks while angel voices floated out over the night air. The Sea of Galilee is as lovely this morning as it was beautiful when Jesus walked on its ample and spacious stretches. Baby fingers are as soft and baby's voice as sweet today as when Moses slept among the bull rushes on the river's brink. The shining eyes of youth and love's old sweet song are as potent and wonderful as when Lozenzo and Jessica sat in the silvery silences of the moon's elfin light and "let the sound of music creep in their ears".—Southern Christian Advocate.

Peace.

Monica Williams.

Have you ever stood within a portico or the open doorway of your home, watching an on-coming storm? Did you not feel a sense of security as you watched the heavy clouds draw closer, and saw the racing wind catch up the dry leaves and send them whirling in a cloud of dust across your door. Then the rain came, and the spray that dashed against your face brought an inward feeling of relief that the heat of the summer day was gone. Peal after peal of thunder crashed and you went within, not because you were afraid, but the lightning was sharp. One should not unnecessarily risk danger through standing in a door. You had been taught that as a child, and so you went indoors. In the house you were secure, the tin roof was ample protection, there was no need now for the lighting rods. You had not liked them any way, they had seemed to almost hurt you in their bold defiance of the clouds that floated by. And you were glad they were gone. They had seemed to profess so much, and had done so little. The lightning had struck and torn the shingles from the roof-edge while these bright sentinels had stood faithless in their duty. Badly adjusted, some had said; well, they had gone, and restful ease had come to you through simpler means. A roof that only sread and covered all now held within the composition of its being, the fact of peace within. No spires of glistening brightness were telling all the country-side of boastful hopes. But the mere shelter of your home was all you need, and as the storm raged without you felt secure and safe. The clouds passed on, the raindrops lessened one by one, the sun shone forth again. Peace had entered your soul.

And so it is with life, when we learn to know God as our shelter, peace dwells in our hearts; we stand secure and see the clouds that darken troubled brows, and feel how insecure is life without. We see the fitful whirl of pleasure as it gathers rootless yearnings of the hearts of men, and throws them down across the door of life. The tears that flow through disappointed hopes are but as rain-drops in the summer storm, they do but loose the tension, as the threatening clouds move on. There is no peace without the refuge of God's love. The highest hopes of man will fail where God is not. Man's thoughts and deeds may be but glittering peaks of boastful pride, which cheer us on awhile. We like to look at things that are not real. We like the sound of drums that call us to the march, but when the cannon roar, drums speak of other things. We like the praise of men, the glamour of their song, but when the echo leaves our heart, what then—peace, too, has gone.

Only within the covering of God's love are we safe as we give ourselves to Him. But woof and warp must be as one continuous shelter, over all. The things that hurt and those that bring us joy are gently hallowed, woven into one. They must not be apart. We must know that God is there through all, and trusting Him, look up and feel secure.

Then the rain will come and go, the sun will shine again, the wind will blow the dry twigs here and there, but our way will be clear as we stand at the door of life—peace will be within.

Preaching and Partisan Prejudice.

If the man at the wheel will not mind, as he threads his way through the traffic jam constituting the statu quo, I would like from the backseat to make a few observations by way of steadying his nerves.

My own ministry began as a home missionary on pioneer prairies. My first important task was not strictly clerical. It was to umpire a baseball game between the clubs of two villages, in both of which I was a minister, and which were fighting tooth and nail for the county seat. I knew the game all right. In fact, in a practice game, I even substituted, without a mask, for a crippled catcher, and as a result was the proud bearer of a black eye into the pulpit next day. That was a badge of honor compelling more reverence than a white tie. But how to umpire a match game so as not to give one of these county seat rivals benefit of more doubtful decisions than the other was the supreme test of continuing usefulness. I have been in all sorts of ecclesiastical anxieties, all the way from wall flower at a mite society social to chief beggar at a church dedication, but for real delicacy of pastoral poise there is nothing nicer than the tight rope walk between two vigorous pioneer towns fighting for the county seat. In that contest one contacts the quintessence of partisan prejudice. Once in a town meeting I ventured to express an opinion tactfully. Never again!

Having been burned in the childhood of my ministry, I determined to avoid the fire of partisan prejudice. No partisan politics in the pulpit for this preacher. When a preacher praises my party in the pulpit it makes me ashamed. When one attacks my party in the pulpit it makes me mad. Both anger and shame forestall edification. And edification is the chief end of preaching.

The absolute futility of serving truth, however pure, in partisan capsules is over and over again demonstrated even in church assemblies. The subtlest of all autointoxications jeopardizing the spiritual life is partisan prejudice. No one has ever voiced the futility of trying to break through it with truth more succinctly than Jesus in His picture of casting pearls before swine. To be mindful of partisan prejudice is to be mentally porcine in attitude toward truth. When one is drunk with partisan bias he may be fanatically willing to give his body to be burned or a formula, and be blind and deaf to the angels. The most amazing contradiction in terms of the spiritual life is the passionate devotion to a conviction coupled with an equally passionate unwillingness to let love be its carrier. The hardest thing to reconcile with a profession of faith in Jesus Christ is that to many of us so often the command of Jesus to love one another just has no meaning at all. Lord, is it I?—George Luccock, in Presbyterian Banner.

FOR THE CHILDREN

A TREE FRIEND.

There's nothing that's nicer than telling a tree
The secrets you wouldn't tell even to me.
A tree is so quiet, a tree is so still,
And listens an hour or a day, if you will.

There's something that's better than merely pretend,
In having at least one old tree for a friend.
And if you reach up to its arms with your hands,
You'll know just how truly a tree understands.

Now, every tree knows the loveliest things,
But if you would hear you must wait till it sings.
A whisper of music will open your ear,
And then you must listen, and listen to hear.

You'll hear about fairies and tree toads and bees,
And many more people, as charming as these.
Just why the leaves dance, when the wind passes by,
And where the birds go in the rain to keep dry.

So if you are lonely and sighing, "Dear me!"
Run out of the house and make friends with a tree.
An old tree will listen to all that you say,
An old tree is wise and an old tree is gay.

Those Rectory Children.

Chapter XIV.

M. L. G.

"And the beanstalk fell, crash! And that was the end of the bad old giant. And Jack and his mother lived happily ever after, with the harp that played so sweetly and the hen that laid the golden eggs. And they even bought back the old cow! There, now, Philip, that's all the story, and Aunt Mollie must do a dozen things at once. Tumble out of my lap!"

Philip tumbled out and sat on the floor in deep thought. Presently he rose and followed Aunt Mollie, holding on to a bit of her dress, as his way was, until she noticed him.

"Aunt Mollie, could you have it not the end of the bad old giant, so then Kent could be him, and my Noah's ark could be Jack's house, and Mrs. Noah could be Jack's mother, and Mr. Noah could be—"

"Yes, you funny little duck, if you want a giant on your hands, we'll say he just broke his arm. And you'll be mighty careful of this giant, Phil, and stop when he feels tired?"

"Do I have to be a bad giant?" asked Kent. He had been sitting up at the window, and now lay on Claire's sofa. Since his accident, Noel had hung about the room, as he had been used to do when Claire was in it, and the dog lay now contentedly at his feet.

"No, Kent, le's play you were sorry for all your trepusses, an' Jack will be so good to you you can have a golden egg for breffus every morning. An'—did the ol' giant have a giant dog, Aunt Mollie? Oh, she's gone. Well, Noel is a nice giant dog Jack bought for you; he cost a million golden eggs."

Aunt Mollie, glad to leave the little boys happily playing, had slipped into Winnie's room, which Mrs. Innis, with her medicines, her water bottle and her crocheting, had left on the morning after Aunt Mollie came.

"I'm glad I could take their mother's place, Miss Mollie," Mrs. Innis had said, packing her trunk in happy excitement. "I feel quite assured that the dear children have not lacked a mother's care. But my delicate constitution has somewhat suffered, and I've fallen behind on the bedspread I'm making—quite two squares behind—so it is perhaps as well you came."

"I think, perhaps, it is, Mrs. Innis, but we're all grateful to you for your kindness. Are the spreads all in? Here's a box of capsules, and your tooth brush. Uncle Danger will strap the trunk; just you come and make yourself comfortable in the carriage."

So Mrs. Innis had left with a sense of duty done, and the children had rejoiced in the change to Aunt Mollie's pleasant face and watchful care. This was just next to mother herself! She managed the nursing of Kent with time left to give each of the others what they needed, and to Winnie especially her coming seemed a happiness to be enjoyed afresh each day. There were, indeed, anxious times at first, for the hope for Claire was very slight. But Aunt Mollie's determined cheerfulness, her reminding them, as mother had done, that they could never really lose their little sister, and her taking all the burden of Kent's care from them, carried David and Winnie through the three weeks of suspense. Now, the news was daily more encouraging. Father had even come home for last Sunday, though he could not stay. Kent, after several bad days, had started a steady improvement, and Aunt Mollie had turned Winnie's room into a sewing room, where she spent spare moments "running up" several little spring dresses for Winnie of materials she had brought.

The machine hummed busily. Aunt Mollie hummed in concert, and yellow ruffles ran in a stream from the machine to the floor when Cindy put her head in at the door.

"Miss Mollie, please'm, Miss Trent's 'Lijah done come an' brought Kent some squab an' truck enough foh ten, an' here's a note. He say please'm sen' de answer back."

Aunt Mollie took the note, and a pleased smile crossed her face. "Nice for Winnie! Miss Alice asks if she can spend Thursday at Ivanhoe—it's George Washington's birthday. Certainly, she can! Wait just a minute, Cindy."

"Yas'm, she need a sliver o' fun, Miss Winnie do, ter set her dancin' 'round lak she usen ter do."

And so on the Thursday Winnie set out in happy expectation for Ivanhoe, with paint box and paper. David and Philip went along for the ride. The only cloud on Winnie's horizon was that there seemed to be a cloud on David's.

"Can I sit up with Uncle Danger an' help drive?" asked Philip. "Frank is such a big horse, he may need two peoples."

"Yas'm, Miss Mollie, he ain' gwine bodder me, an' Frank big; yas'm, he a monst'ous hawse," Uncle Danger added grinning.

"Well, then, Phil, you take care that Uncle Danger comes to no harm. Remember, the store and postoffice as you come back. David boy, and Winnie, have one perfectly good time!"

"David, does something bother you?" Winnie asked as they drove past the pine woods.

"I'm all right," David said shortly.

"It seemed to me—mother not being here nor father—you might want me or Aunt Mollie to help."

"No, no! Just do let me alone!"

This was so unlike David that Winnie fairly jumped.

"Well, why, David!"

But instantly Winnie saw David's lip trembling, and her warm heart forgave him even before he could blurt out:

"Aw, Winnie, 'scuse me. Just don't notice, that's all you can do. Maybe when father comes—I don't know—" he stopped miserably.

"Father can fix anything, David, and he'll be home in two days for Sunday. Don't mind it till then."

"Maybe not. Don't you, anyway," David said in a tone he tried to make cheerful.

Ivanhoe was reached through a mile of private road after they turned in from the highway. The beautiful white-pillared house, framed in its lawns and great trees, seemed to stretch wide arms into the early spring sunshine, welcoming them. And Miss Alice and Miss Sarah were soon beside the carriage doors.

"Ah, here's our girl! And look at Philip, driving as if he were at the horse show!" This was Miss Sarah, "You brought your painting things—good! This is just the day for it."

"Get out, boys, won't you? Uncle Danger, just go 'round to the kitchen—" Miss Alice began.

"No'm, Aunt Mollie needs some things from the store and the mail," David said, standing by the carriage.

"Well, then, Uncle Danger, go 'round anyway for a little basket of things that's there for Kent. David, you need a holiday, too, by the looks of you. You remember Mr. Craig, our missionary cousin? I've a plan to have him back in the summer—his furlough lasts through August—and he's a great camper. Perhaps you and your father can get up a little trip for him."

"That would be fine!" David's face really brightened now.

"And mind," Winnie whispered as Uncle Danger, with the "little" basket, and David got back into the carriage, "don't bother. Whatever's wrong, father can fix it!"

An Ill Wind.

"I don't see why grandmother says that 'it is an ill wind that blows no good'," exclaimed Harold crossly as he jerked his gray and white cap down over his eyes. "I'm sure this wind is no good."

The wind, as if making fun of him, twitched at his cap again, and nearly snatched it from his head. Harold scowled.

"Horrid old wind!" he cried.

The wind had hurled the sharp edge of a leaf into his eye. As he raised his hand to his face the wind snatched the gray and white cap, whirled it high in the air, and then neatly lifted it over a stone fence.

Harold, raising his head just in time to see the cap sail away, cried out angrily. Now he would have to go in the yard and get it! He forgot the stinging pain in his eye. Harold was bashful, and he didn't know the people that lived in that white house.

Harold sighed as he struggled with the gate. It seemed as if even gates were unfriendly in the city, where he didn't know any one, and where it seemed so hard to get acquainted.

At last the gate was open, but the cap, which he expected to find inside the gate, was caught in a small evergreen tree in the center of a flower-bed surrounded with a low fence of wire. Harold did not like to climb it without permission.

He rang the bell, and, after a very long time, some one opened the door.

"M-m-mmy c-coo—" Harold stammered, his face growing red.

The lady in the door glanced at him over her glasses. "Dear me! That must be some new kind of language!" she said. "Wait a moment until I call my nephew; perhaps he will understand." She beckoned to Harold to follow her.

Harold was more embarrassed than ever within the house, but he was trying his best to make himself understood. "I-I, j-j-just w-want—" he began.

Then there was a wild shout, and a boy of his own size came dashing through the doorway. "Harold Norton! Whoopee!" a voice shouted.

"Bobby Deane!" Harold shouted back, forgetting to stutter.

"This is my aunt's house!" Bobby cried, jumping around. "How did you know I was here? I was just telling Aunt Martha that there was a boy in this city that I knew, but I didn't know where he lived!"

It was an hour before Harold went through the gate again, this time with his old-time friend's arm around his shoulder. The wind tugged at his cap.

"Isn't the old wind horrid," laughed Bobby.

"Not much!" Harold said. "I guess this isn't an ill wind, after all."—Little Learners.

Runaway Rufus.

"Such a lovely spring morning!" mewed Rufus, a little white kitty, as he ran out of the garage when Bobby's daddy left the door open. It would be simply perfect if it were just a bit warmer. Anyhow, it was much too nice to sit on the doorstep waiting for Bobby to get up; so he'd stroll down the alley and see what he could see.

Of course, both Bobby and his pretty mother had told him over and over again that he must never go away, for kitties were always much safer at home. But he guessed there wasn't anything to hurt him just a little way down the alley, so Rufus started on.

He had trotted along almost two blocks, gazing about at everything, when suddenely he heard a gruff, "Bow wow!" right behind him.

"Oh, my claws and whiskers!" trembled the kitty. He ran as fast as ever he could and crawled in under a woodpile in somebody's back yard. Why, oh, why, hadn't he stayed home where Bobby had told him to? "Oh, oh," he whimpered, crouching low, and stiff with fright. He heard feet above him. Something went, "Sniff, sniff"—then a voice, "Now, Tige, bad dog, come away from there! Go right back home. Go on now!" and the feet that the little cat had heard pattered away.

Next, the wood was being thrown to one side. Pretty soon the shivering kitten was grasped around his middle and lifted out. Now he would be taken far away. He'd never, never see Bobby again. Oh, how terrible!—but, as Rufus peeped shyly from the corner of one eye, he saw that a gentle little girl was holding him in her arms. How good it did feel when he was so cold and frightened! Now she was carrying him into a house.

"Mother, just look!" called Ella Jo, as she opened the kitchen door. The kitty was white and soft and fuzzy, and his toes were very pink from the cold. "Oh, mother, isn't he cunning? He's surely lost and hungry, so can't I give him some of my nice warm mush and milk?"

"Why, yes, dear, we must feed the rusty little thing."

So then the kit was happy and cried no more. Presently he looked up into Ella Jo's face and purred. His big, wondering eyes said very plainly, please, lovely little girl, can't I be your kitty always?"

And the child soothed his white coat and patted his soft head as she whispered back: "Yes, sweet, I think you're going to be my own dear kitty forever and forever!"

Ella Jo took such good care of her new kitten that he was sleek and playful. He often chased a string or a catnip mouse; but, best of all, he loved to romp with one of mother's old shoes. Then Rufus would roll and tumble, bite and kick, while Ella Jo looked on and laughed till she cried at the funny antics.

In pleasant weather these pals played on the porch in the fresh air and sunshine while mother was busy inside. When Rufus was tired of romping, his small mistress put him on her doll's bed in a sunny corner to take a nap. One day Ella Jo told him, "Now, my little Rufus, I'm going in to help mother do the dishes. I do hope you'll stay right here, like a good kitty, and sleep till I come back, won't you?" Then she patted his soft silky coat, and went inside.

Rufus blinked and yawned and shut his bright eyes tight for as long as half a minute, then they popped wide open again. My, my what a fine day to be just sleeping! He believed he'd take a short walk as far as the gate, and look around a bit. Oh, no, he wouldn't go any farther at all. He remembered quite well how a very few days ago that big dog had almost caught him. Then, besides, he wouldn't do anything really to displease Ella Jo, for he did love her so, even better than Bobby!

So Rufus jumped up and sat on the gate in the warm spring sunshine. Pretty soon a boy came along. The kitten started to climb down and ran; but saw, upon looking closer, that it was the nice freckled-face Tommy who left their milk every day.

"Oh, hello there, you little white kit! Why, you belong to Bobby over on the next street, don't you, now?" And Rufus mewed a faint, "Yes, I do; but I'd so much rather stay with Ella Jo, please, and be her kitty."

Tommy lifted Rufus to his shoulder and went on to the back door with the milk. "Oh, hello, Ella Jo! Do you know whose kit this is?"

"Why, he's Rufus, my kitten, Tommy! I drove away a big, bad dog that was trying to get him. I brought him to the house and fed him. Isn't he a lovely white kit?"

"He sure is a nice one, Ella Jo, but he really belongs to little Bobby on the next street over. I've seen him there ever so many times. Just this morning Bobby was crying 'cause his kitty is lost. But I must hurry. Good-bye, Ella Jo."

"Good-bye, Tommy," answered Ella Jo in a mournful, small voice.

The child stood by the steps and hugged the kitten close. She lovingly smoothed its fur. "Oh, my sweet little precious, how can I ever let you go?" and the big tears chased each other faster and faster down Ella Jo's face. "But," she told Rufus after a minute, "if you had been my kitty first, and you got lost and went to Bobby's house, I'd want him to give you right back to me, wouldn't I? I'd think he was a real bad boy not to do it."

Ella Jo's throat ached with grief, but she tried very hard to stop crying, and pretty soon she went into the house.

"Mother, dear, did you hear what Tommy said about the kitty?"

"Yes, darling."

"Well, mother, I guess I'd better take him right over to Bobby."

"I think you had, dearie," and mother very tenderly kissed her small daughter, and dried her tears.

A short time later, Ella Jo, with Rufus on her shoulder, rang the bell at a white house back from the street. A sweet-faced lady came to the door.

"Is this where Bobby lives, please?"

"Yes, dear, come right in, won't you? Oh, look here, Bobby! He's been crying all morning for his little lost Rufus kitty."

The small boy's face brightened with smiles as Ella Jo handed the kitten to him.

"Oh, pretty kit, pretty kit," the child went on as he held his pet tight in his arms. "Bobby does love you so! Please, please don't ever go away any more!"

As soon as the kitten was put down he rubbed around Bobby's fat legs and started purring. Then the boy laughed and clapped his hands with joy.

Ella Jo watched Rufus with a sad little smile, then: "I must go, for mother told me not to stay long."

"Thank you so much, my dear," said Bobby's mother, "for bringing the kitty back home. You must come real often to see Bobby and Rufus. I'm sure you'll all have fine times playing together."

"Good-bye, Bobby—good-bye, sweet little Rufus," and Ella Jo stroked the silky fur with her cheek. "I'll be seeing you both tomorrow!"

Ella Jo smiled at them all as she ran up the street toward home. Two big tears tumbled down when she caught a last glimpse of the kitten; but as she thought of little Bobby's shining face, Ella Jo was happy.—The Sentinel.

HOW DOES PEACE GROW?

"In your world and my world
How does peace grow?

"By friendly neighbors
Sharing labors;
By every honest, kindly way
Of planning work, and rest and play;
By strength to work nor hope forego;
Courage to speak a forthright 'No!'
By serving each another's need;
By laws of justice, not of greed
And all that's done by me and you
To make our dreams of peace come true.

"In your world and my world
So does peace grow!"

TEA PARTY.

Patricia is my cousin,
She lives next door to me,
Most every Sunday evening
She just drops in to tea.
I use my nicest dishes,
The cloth is snowy white,
And there are little tea-cakes
That Mother made last night.

I set a chair for Johnnie,
He is my oldest child,
Another one for Mabel,
So amiable and mild.
My littlest one is Susie
Who sits upon my knee,
She loves these little parties
And claps her hands in glee.

Patricia brings her children,
She has exactly four,
The table is so crowded
We haven't room for more.
And when the tea is over,
And all their prayers are said,
I kiss them all goodnight
And tuck them into bed.

DEATHS

EDWARD RANDOLPH TURNBULL, M. D.

On March 20th, at his home in Lawrenceville, Virginia, DR. EDWARD RANDOLPH TURNBULL entered Life Eternal, in the seventy-eighth year of his age.

Dr. Turnbull spent his long and useful life in the place of his birth. Connected by blood with many of the families that shaped the policies and destinies of his beloved State, he belonged to a family that for many generations had taken a most prominent part in the religious, social and political development of Brunswick County. Without any social or political ambitions, he was content to do his duty in that state of life in which it had pleased God to call him. As a country physician, he went around doing good, skillfully ministering to the sick and comforting the distressed and brokenhearted.

As a devout Christian and loyal member of the Episcopal Church, the Church of his forefathers, he was always zealous or her welfare and for the spread of the Gospel as she had received the same. Becoming a member of the vestry in early manhood, whether as a member or an officer, his counsel was characterized by sound judgment and a zeal for true religion.

He was laid to rest on a beautiful early-spring afternoon, in the presence of his loved ones and a large gathering of sympathetic friends, budding nature and beautiful flowers proclaiming the Resurrection and re-echoing the message of the service, "I am the resurrection and the life".

MISS POLLY CARY RANDOLPH.

MISS POLLY CARY RANDOLPH, a member of Christ Church, died in Millwood, Clarke County, Virginia, on January 31, having spent her entire life near her birthplace, "New Market", the old Randolph home.

From her father, Dr. Robert C. Randolph, she inherited a devotion for and an activity in the Church, and not in her more than fourscore years did she fail to obey this impulse in her not busy, but never idle, life.

Endowed with a beauty of soul, it shone through her every association with those privileged to know her. There was only kindliness in her nature, this she expended in a full life consecrated to God. Never showily doing great things, yet she never omitted some small act which might give pleasure to others. No bazaar or sale was complete without her tray of nosegays, artistically bunched together, deftly and daintily tied old-fashioned flowers; they were always popular, for purchasers knew there was much more than mere blossoms in those tiny packets.

Hers was a rare combination of sweet gentleness and an impelling desire to do her part, which extended to many activities, for her interests were wide.

Having lived beautifully, she died as beautifully, stepping beyond the veil without struggle, without pain. Throughout her life she walked with God, and then one winter's morn "she was not, for God took her".

SAMUEL TAPSCOTT PLEASANTS.

God's faithful steward, SAMUEL TAPSCOTT PLEASANTS, departed this life Thursday, March 14, 1935. Born in Lynchburg, Va., August 5, 1870, the son of Louis Phillips and Emily Tapscott Pleasants, he was confirmed in early youth, becoming a member of St. James' Church, Richmond, having removed to that city at the age of eighteen years.

For twenty years he was a consistent communicant of the Church of the Epiphany in Barton Heights. Funeral services were conducted from the residence, 3310 Lamb Avenue, by the Rev. H. B. Peters, with burial in Hollywood Cemetery.

He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Daisy Drake, of Clarksville, Va., and four children: Harry Douglas, the Misses Emily, Ruth and Betty.

Of a gentle nature, true to every calling, his church, his family and his business, he leaves many friends who mourn his passing.

"Jesus, Thou Prince of life!
Thy chosen cannot die;
Like Thee, they conquer in the strife,
To reign with Thee on high."

TEXAS
Rt. Rev. C. S. Quin, D. D., Bishop.

"There is a flair for Dictatorships in Europe today," declared the Rt. Rev. Frank E. Wilson, Bishop of Eau Claire, speaking at the city-wide noon-day services in Christ Church, Houston, the week of March 18. "But here in America," continued Bishop Wilson, "the principle of representative government is so ingrained in us that it is more than likely to continue." The Bishop condemned those who would apply the principles of Christ in rigid formalism, as well as those who abuse the free spirit of Christ through a too liberal interpretation. "The problem of Christianity," he said, "is in applying the free spirit of Jesus Christ to specific situations. Some abuse Christ through super-freedom; others handcuff Christ through rigid formalism. God is not so much interested in legislation as He is with Christian Character." Bishop Wilson is to be followed at the daily noon-day services at Christ Church in successive weeks by Bishops Maxon of Tennessee, Wise of Kansas, and Casady of Oklahoma. The Rev. James Pernette DeWolfe, rector of Christ Church, will be the preacher during Holy Week. These daily services, planned and promoted by a layman's committee headed by Colonel John Lansdale of Houston, are being attended by enthusiastic crowds daily.

PERSONAL NOTES.

The Rev. James McDowell Dick has announced his resignation of the rectorship of Christ Church, Pulaski, Virginia, to accept a call to the Church of the Good Shepherd, Raleigh, North Carolina, effective May 1. A native of Sumter, South Carolina, and a graduate of Sewanee, with the degree of B. D., in 1926, Mr. Dick came to Pulaski in December, 1928. In addition to the work at Pulaski, Mr. Dick has had charge of Grace Church at Radford, since February, 1933, and for a time prior to that served at Christ Church, Marion. Mr. Dick has been especially popular in these several communities and elsewhere in the diocese. He is at present a member of the Executive Board of the diocese and is particularly interested in religious education and work among young people. For years he has been one of the leaders in diocesan young people's activities. His associates in Southwestern Virginia will experience a feeling of deepest regret at his departure. In his new charge at Raleigh, he will succeed the late widely esteemed Rev. Theodore Partrick, Jr.

Deaths.

The Rev. Leon Alverden Mansur entered into life eternal on Saturday, March 23, 1935. The funeral services were conducted in Christ Church, Middle Haddam, Connecticut, on Monday, March 25, at 3 P. M.

The Rev. William Page Chrisman, 65, priest and rector of St. Stephen's Church, Beckley, W. Va., died on March 21 in Beckley, of heart failure following an attack of pneumonia. Funeral services were conducted in St. Stephen's Church, March 23, by the Rt. Rev. William L. Gravatt, Bishop of the Diocese, assisted by the Rev. Ben Roller and the Rev. J. W. Hobson. A large number of diocesan clergy were present. The committal services were at Hedgesville, W. Va., March 24, with Bishop Gravatt officiating, assisted by Bishop-Coadjutor R. E. L. Strider, and the Rev. Ben Roller of White Sulphur, W. Va.

The Rev. Mr. Chrisman was prominent in the Church in West Virginia for many years. After graduation from the Virginia Seminary in 1894, he assisted W. L. Gravatt, later Bishop, at Edgar Priest.

The National Cathedral sustained an irreparable loss in the death of Edgar Priest, organist and choirmaster, who died rather unexpectedly on March 30, after a week's illness with influenza and complications. He was fifty-seven years of age and had been organist at the Cathedral since its beginning, under Bishop Satterlee. He was English born and was at one time connected with Manchester Cathedral as assistant organist. He had been training the Cathedral choir for the singing of the sacred cantata, "The Crucifixion", when taken ill, and had presided at the organ on the previous Sunday, despite a high temperature, and contrary to the doctor's advice. He was buried on April 2, the services being conducted by the Bishop of Washington in the Cathedral. Mr. Priest's work with the magnificent men's and boys' choir on Mount St. Alban was singularly effective and quite unique. He had organized this choir and had brought it to a standard scarcely excelled in the entire realm of the Episcopal Church. His place will be difficult to fill. He leaves a widow and hosts of devoted friends and admirers, who have been shocked and saddened by his death.

Our Risen Lord
Leads His Church
To United Action
He Counts on Us to Go Forward in the Great Fifty Days from Easter to Pentecost
OUR MASTER is no mere ethical teacher, embalmed in remote history. Victor over sin and death, He is alive forevermore. Christ, the same, yesterday and today and forever, gathers us about Him—as He gathered the first disciples—to live with Him, to learn of Him, to put conquering, risen life into daily action.
FORWARD Movement means acting with the Living Christ. It means His Easter Life applied to every relationship. It means Christ-imparted energy overcoming the dead weight of disaster.
READ the Scripture for the day slowly—thereby turning your mind to the Living Christ. LET His promise and power grip your faith and will as you meditate. PRAY in your own words, asking how you may put Christ's will into personal action. WRITE down your resolve to carry out.
This manual is commended for daily use during Eastertide and Ascensiontide. It will prepare the hearts and minds of many for their Communion on Whitsunday.

The "new commandment" is still new. Few Christians today can say with Paul, "The love of Christ constraineth me".—Rev. K. F. Dodson.

"Whatever weakens your reason, impairs the tenderness of your conscience, obscures your sense of God, or takes off the relish of spiritual things; whatsoever increases the authority of your body over your mind, that thing to you, is sin."—From a letter written to John Wesley by his mother.

You say, "Where goest thou", I cannot tell,
And still go on. If but the way be straight
I cannot go amiss; before me lies
Dawn and the day: the night behind me; that Suffices me: I break the bounds; I see,
And nothing more; believe, and nothing less.
My future is not one of my concerns.

How much better it is to dedicate mind and heart to Christ in the days of youth than to give Him just the last few years of age, when vitality and ambition are low?—Selected.

"We are the mariners, and God the Sea,
And though we make false reckonings, and run
Wide of a righteous course, and are undone,
Out of His deeps of love we cannot be."

Jesus' prayer was a battlefield, where He fought His doubts, His fears and His temptations, where He fought them with the encouragement and assistance of One who understood it all. Persistent, repeated prayer is essential to the mastery of our selfish impulses and our joyous surrender to the Divine will. —W. W. MacKinney.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., APRIL 13, 1935. No. 15.

Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee:

As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him.

And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

From an Evangelical Catholic.

Mr. Editor:

If I were of the "Modernist", or "Liberal", party in the Protestant Episcopal Church, zealous for organic church unity, I would feel that there is no further need for this Church in the Christian world, and advocate its complete extinction at the earliest possible date. I would argue thus:

"Half a century ago, our Church was conspicuous among Protestants for its beautiful ritual and churchly customs, its liberal attitude toward so-called worldly amusements, its comprehensiveness, tolerance of beliefs and denials, opinions and practices, which would have produced schism among other Protestant bodies—but it no longer occupies this unique position.

The majority of Protestants now accept and practice many of the things called Romish against which their forefathers fought with word and sword, and they have taken over most of the "special features" of the Episcopal Church of fifty years ago. Large portions of the Book of Common Prayer are now extensively used, and if one desires ornate ceremonial, High Church Lutherans can furnish it with candles, crucifixes, incense, eucharistic vestments and use of the so-called seven sacraments. The late Dr. Frederick Lynch said that the most ritualistic service he ever attended was a "high mass" conducted by a Congregationalist minister.

As to doctrine, surely our Church is no more tolerant than other Protestant bodies, especially in the North and outside of the "Bible Belt". Many of their members reject all of the miraculous or supernatural elements of Christianity, and concerning the Person of Christ are tacitly Unitarian, or even more radical.

The via media idea of the Church has been abandoned by most of our party as valueless and impractical. One must be definitely a Protestant or a Catholic, and ours is fundamentally a Protestant Church; let the so-called Anglo-Catholics get out of it and go where they belong. We have proved that apostolic succession, once called the "spinal column" of this Church, is a myth, that even laymen may celebrate the Communion, and that both congregational and presbyterial ordinations were practiced until the end of the second century. Methodist Episcopalians at least have an order of ministers specifically ordained as elders (Presbyters); they also possess the primitive and apostolic form of episcopacy, if one desires such nuisances as Bishops.

To the average layman matters of Church history and traditions are boring; phrases such as 'The Long Life of the Church—Its Romance', 'Heritage of American Christians', etc., make no appeal to him, and the present generation is not at all interested in the church connections of signers of the Declaration of Independence or the Constitution of the U. S. A.

As to our Foreign Missions, they are being rethought and could easily be transferred to other Protestant churches. At enormous expense we are maintaining a church which has no worth-while reason for existence as a separated entity in the Christian world."

Instead of working for rubrical and canonical changes needed for merger of our Church into a future Pan-Protestant Church, I would urge the institution of proceedings for its dissolution as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made.

As an Evangelical Catholic, I would vigorously dispute the main proposition and several other of the above statements, especially that regarding the ministry, and counter with the assertion that all organized Protestantism is destined for extinction, and so is Christianity itself, unless it adheres to some definite form of Catholicism; that while the Anglican Communion possesses all that is true and best in Catholicism, Liberalism and Protestantism, it is fundamentally Catholic, and will remain as an indispensible element in the reformed and united Catholic Church of the future.

James Solomon Russell.

Archdeacon Russell had lived long enough to become one of those traditional characters that even folklore gathers about. To his race, to whom he devoted his whole life and to whom his own people owe more than they can ever pay enough tribute to, he stands out as a mighty leader and giant of men, as indeed he was. To say that he will be missed is foolish, for his work goes on for the future years and he would not want to feel that he was missed. But in the Church certainly we can say that the greatest Negro clergyman of our age no longer dwells in this world.

Dr. Russell was much more than a great Negro leader, for he was one of the truly great statesmenlike men we have had in the Church. He stands out as Henry Codman Potter stood out, or Phillips Brooks stood out. Handicapped by belonging to a race that is a minority with minority privileges, he never was known as well as a white man would have been known who had done as much. But the thousands who came under his influence and his associates on the board of his school know that he was of the truly great.

Many have heard the story about the boy at Hampton Institute, who found the loose page from the Book of Common Prayer and would not rest until he learned where that book could be found and what religious group used it. Many have known how that fine old Confederate veteran, Giles B. Cooke, led him on in his preparation for Holy Orders. Many have read of the first little schoolhouse and church which he built up in Brunswick County, until finally it became the largest school in the Protestant Episcopal Church. Fewer know that under his great leadership and inspiration he showed that a church school really could be superior to a secular school if devotion to religious ideals was faithfully practiced. It was due to him and to his example that no pupil of St. Paul Normal and Industrial School ever was arrested or accused of crime. If only some of our privileged white schools for boys and girls could have such a record!

So his school lives on and he will live in it, because he founded it upon the Life of Him who lives forever. Our tribute as a Church should be to guarantee that this school never again be harassed as it has been at times with lack of funds. God gave Archdeacon Russell and we should give God our support.

Trade Unionism and Clergy.

We have no quarrel with those ministers who wish to join a union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. In a religion founded by One Who was a Carpenter, it would be unjust to condemn anything that might link our clergy with laboring men and women. And yet, before this movement grows, it might be well to think over the situation seriously and with due regard to all of the facts.

In the first place Episcopal clergymen have a union that is about as tight as any we know in its requirements. It limits the number of men who can be ordained, says they may never be thrown out of the job that is theirs and sees that they get a pension for disability and old age. Vacation rights are well protected. If anything is to be gained beyond these privileges we can't for the moment think what it is.

So evidently the well intentioned men who have formed local number one mean to be an affiliated group for sympathy. But we can't help but wonder if sympathy cannot better be expressed and cordial relations established better between labor unions and the employer class if the minister is a member of neither one.

Understanding hearts are much needed today. If one becomes a member of an organization, we fear the understanding heart is replaced by the propaganda heart. At any rate, admirable as the motives may be in the minds of those who have started this union, at the risk of being considered reactionary, we doubt very much if it will be the wisest thing to "join up."

If, on the other hand, a union could be established that demanded of its members a little thought about regular hours and decent organization of work, we might be in favor one hundred per cent. If clergymen could realize either through a union or otherwise that the day of the pleasant tea drinking parson is over, if it ever had a place, the union might have a great work to perform. In the ministry today, the ranks are filled with those who overwork, doing what those who seldom work ought to do. Modern methods are sadly lacking and the apprenticeship of seminary training in many cases seems to be out of date for those who have to work in a modern world. A union might improve such things, but a deeper devotion would be better.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

By Harry Elmer Barnes, in New York World-Telegram.

By Harry Elmer Barnes, in New York World-Telegram

No sensible historian expects history to repeat itself with any exactness. But the analogies between the present European situation and that which existed in the spring and early sumer of 1914 are so striking that they can hardly fail to be both interesting and illuminating.

In the years before 1914, as in the last decade, the European nations were building up great armies with the ostensible purpose of attaining national security and thereby promoting peace. "Arming for peace" was the popular slogan then, as now. The relative size of armies in 1907 and 1914 stood as follows:

	1907	1914
Russia	848,600	18,000,000
France	559,000	818,000
Germany	629,000	806,000
Austria	382,000	370,000
Italy	284,000	305,000

Today, the armies and reservists of these countries rate as follows:

	Active Army.	Trained Res.
Russia	846,800	18,000,000
France	607,000	6,975,000
Germany	105,000	None
Austria	21,200	None
Italy	457,000	6,017,000

In spite of the "war to end war and great armaments," the world is spending much more for armaments today than it was in 1913, the last year of peace before the World War. By calling 500,000 men to the colors, Hitler is following the example of France in 1914, but he is merely seeking military equality instead of the military ascendency which France sought in 1914 and enjoys today.

As in 1914, national self-interest is now blocking fundamental aspirations which may provoke war. England from 1908 to 1914 stood like a dog in the manger, keeping Russia from gaining an outlet through the straits leading from the Black Sea, while Austria stood in the way of Serbian national aspirations. Germany refused to cede back Alsace and Lorraine to France.

Today Poland insists upon the Corridor which the Germans wish to erase. Italy and France object to the natural union of Germany and Austria. Some great powers, and more lesser ones, oppose the restoration of Hungary. Jugoslavia, backed by France, blocks Italian aspirations in the Adriatic and on the Dalmatian coast. "Sore spots" abound in 1935 as they did in 1914. In fact, they are even more numerous.

The current announcement of a conference of Great Britain, France and Italy over the German policy reminds one specifically of 1914. Then, Lord Grey proposed a conference which would invoke the old Concert of Europe which had handled the Balkan crisis of 1913. But it was to be held under conditions in which the dice were loaded against Germany and Austria. So the latter naturally declined. In 1935, the conference is being held without even inviting them.

War talk and warnings were as rife in the spring of 1914 as they are today. In 1914, the Russian minister of war, General Sukhominlov, announced "Russia is ready, France must be ready also." Soviet Russia has used identical language within the last few days in proclaiming Russian readiness. But this time it is a defensive rather than an aggressive Russia which is talking.

Finally, if we may judge at all by developments to date, Germany will once more be more frank in her actions, and hence more stupid in her diplomacy. While German diplomacy in 1914 was far more honest and pacific than that of Russia, France or Serbia, Germany foolishly talked of "scraps of paper."

Today, Hitler has only suggested doing what France and others have been doing for the last seventeen years. But he has done it in so blatant a way as to make Germany appear an aggressor and to give the anti-German press almost a "natural" in reviving its anti-German propaganda.

Germany Re-arms.

The Living Church, March 23, 1935.

Hitler's decision to scrap the Versailles Treaty and adopt a policy of compulsory military service with an army that may soon reach a total of 500,000 definitely marks the end of the post-war era in European relations. Disarmament, so long moribund, is now as dead as feudalism or slavery.

There is no doubt that Germany's action is the gravest menace to world peace that has occurred in the past decade. It is not, of course, Germany herself that is immediately to be feared since the building up of a large standing army and the necessary navy to defend the exposed Baltic seacoast as well as the further development of the air force already in existence will require a considerable amount of time. The immediate threat to peace is that France and the other European powers that fear Germany may not wait for this eventuality but may instead embark upon a "preventive war" against the Reich.

But there is no use calling names. Germany is not the only villain in the scene, nor perhaps the greatest one. The Versailles Treaty was manifestly unfair in its placing of the sole war guilt upon the Central powers, as subsequent historical research and the publication of state archives has clearly shown. Moreover, the disarmament demanded of Germany by the Versailles Treaty was declared definitely to be the first step in a general European reduction of armaments. The former Allied powers have not kept their promise to Germany and their indignation when Germany openly announces that she will not keep her promise therefore sounds a little hollow.

The newly-announced German policy follows in logical sequence the Italian compulsory military service decree, the French army program, and the British "White Paper." Nor is our own country free of blame. Our whole post-war policy, dictated by a Senate more interested in its own precious rights and privileges than in world peace, has been to let Europe stew in its own juice, in blissful disregard of the obvious fact that when the European pot boils over America is bound to be scalded. Every President since the World War, regardless of party, has urged the United States to participate in the World Court and take her fair share in the peaceful government of the world, only to have his efforts nullified by a group of rugged individualists on Capitol Hill.

Europe today is in the situation of a group of small boys who have decided to play "cops and robbers" and have armed themselves with sticks. There remains only the choosing of sides and the game is ready to begin. The tragic part of it is that the sticks with which the small boys are so carefully playing are sticks of dynamite that will blow up both the cops and the robbers if the game starts.

And America? America is the boy from the next block looking on at the preliminary skirmishes in the game and so far not making any move, either to take part in it or to prevent it.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

Why a Thousandfold?

It may be asked: "Why not be content with tenfold, or a hundredfold, as the utmost limit? A thousandfold seems to be asking too much." It must be remembered, however, that one object of the Order of the Thousandfold is to demonstrate to the Church the fact that our usefulness can be increased even to that extent, because the divine resources are more than adequate to bring about such a result, however wonderful it may seem to be.

A Way to Honor Christ.

In fact the promises of Christ seem to invite us to make great ventures of faith, and we are doing Him honor when we show that we believe He can do wonderful things through us as His instruments. Then, too, it is a time above all others when the power of Christianity should be manifested to the world in such a way as to give men new hope, and make them realize that there is a power in the world which is greater than the power of evil; and that a new and better order of things is not only possible but near at hand. Even during the few years that the Order has been in existence, plenty of evidence has accumulated to show that it has been a great blessing and inspiration to those who have entered into the spirit of it.

If all praying people would earnestly seek, day by day, to be made a thousandfold more useful than ever before, a great wave of enthusiasm would sweep through the Church and nothing would seem impossible.

Enthusiasm Based on God's Promises.

Such enthusiasm would not be based upon mere emotion for it would rest upon a firm foundation, even the promise of God Himself, given to us by His Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, He will give it you. Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name: ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." Whatever restrictions there may be with regard to material blessings, the blessings of the spiritual world are certainly made available to us as a result of what Christ has done for us. "All things are yours," says St. Paul. And again, "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?"

The Purpose of the Order.

The purpose of the Order of the Thousandfold is to awaken in the minds of Christian people the tremendous possibilities which lie open to us as the sons of God. Early in the history of the Order the following statement was made, which clearly showed what an enlargement of the mind and soul was awaiting us, if we would only make the necessary venture of faith. "The Church stands now pretty much where the world stood before the great sources of physical energy were developed. She has scarcely touched as yet the illimitable stores of spiritual energy which God has placed at her disposal."

The Adequacy of the Divine Resources.

It is perfectly evident from the Christian revelation, that the resources of the spiritual world are adequate and far more than adequate, to meet the needs of mankind and to raise men to a higher level, far above the crying evils which now beset us on every side. To use a simple illustration, it is as if we were living in a house with its temperature at zero with plenty of coal to heat the furnace, so that the house would be comfortable. Or to use another illustration, we may compare the present situation to an engine capable of pulling a train of cars along a railroad track, but failing to do so, because the engineer in charge keeps such a low fire that no steam is being generated, in spite of the fact that he has a plentiful supply of fuel on hand. The trouble with the world is, that we Christians are not using the resources placed at our disposal for bringing in the Kingdom of God upon earth, at any rate to the extent, in any way, necessary for the purpose.

What Is Needed.

We must first of all awaken to the realization that God is behind the Christian movement and that all His resources are pledged to its successful consummation. And, secondly, that the Church and her members must fully believe that by linking themselves up with the Power of God, all things in accordance with His will become possible; and that we should no longer remain impotent in dealing with the problem of war and other great evils which threaten our civilization. If, as Christ said, "Faith as a grain of mustard seed," can remove mountains, how can we expect to remove the mountains of difficulty which confront Christianity at the present time, till we have reached that minimum of faith which He speaks of? It is time we were all learning the secret of power which can make us "more than conquerors through Him that loved us." And it is well to remember that "the prayer of faith may begin with the puny grasp of a little child, but with earnest endeavor it will grow till it becomes the grasp of a giant."

The Challenge.

We should be Titans, but we are afraid
To grasp the lightning with bare hands and smite
The hosts of darkness which too long have stayed
The coming day—the passing of the night.

We must be Titans, for He did entrust
To us a mighty task, too great for men,
Who merely live as brothers to the dust,
And to the dust shall soon return again.

We can be Titans, for He came to share
With us His power divine, when He was born
A child at Bethlehem; and we may dare
Go forth and save from death a world forlorn.

Let us be Titans! then the world shall know
Winter has passed into perpetual Spring;
That evil hath been dealt a deadly blow;
That Christ no longer shall be, but is King.

Frederick W. Neve.

Is the Creed Necessary?

By

JOHN MOORE WALKER,

Rector St. Luke's Church, Atlanta, Ga.

FROM time to time we encounter people who not only question the necessity to religion of a Creed but actually prophesy the day when the Christian Church will cast aside as outworn and useless our venerable formularies. And that there is somewhat to be said by way of justifying this contention cannot be denied. The word, "Orthodoxy," does not always have pleasing associations. It sometimes suggests hardness, uncharitableness, even cruelty. Sometimes it appears as hostile to a free quest for the truth. Sometimes an easy going subscription to a Creed is taken to be a substitute for the exacting requirements of good morals. Sometimes again orthodox folk repeat the Creed with but scant knowledge of what it means. And so our critic is impatient with the whole idea of a Creed. Why not dispense with this needless and even mischievous feature of religion as it has come down to us. After all—so he asserts—it is not what a man believes but what he does that counts.

Now there is so much truth in this complaint against our all too common misuse of the Creedal and nonuse of it as a living element of worship and religion that it becomes us in all earnestness to examine our position. In the first place, then, a creed of some sort is inevitable not only to religion, but to the conduct of secular pursuits. The man engaged in business approaches his task with a body of principles in mind. These principles may be revised or changed as experience seems to dictate; but he never dispenses with principles of some sort. And these comprise his business Creed. Likewise the professional man, the house wife, the statesman, the ditch-digger, the scientist—all have a body of guiding principles or creed. In fact, none is exempt from this necessity except an infant child and an idiot. It also follows, as a moment's consideration makes clear, that success or failure in our various pursuits depends to a great extent upon how nearly our body of principles or creed is true—erroneous principles will lead to disaster, and, vice versa; true principles will bear the fruit of success, in so far as one's material success or failure are in one's own keeping.

TURNING, then, to the specifically religious, we find the same laws operative. A Creed is a necessary component of religion, for one thing, because conduct sooner or later reflects one's beliefs. Furthermore, right beliefs, true beliefs furnish the only permanent foundation for admirable conduct. And, although a man may be honest because it is the best policy, he will cease to be honest when he once suspects that it is not the best policy. That man's creed is one dealing with policy rather than with honesty: he believes in the policy of honesty rather than in the virtue of honesty. Sir Robert Peel once said: "Take my word for it, it is not prudent as a rule to trust yourself to any man who tells you that he does not believe in God or in a future life after death." Perhaps this is too extreme a statement, yet it most certainly contains a modicum of truth. The man who sincerely believes in the Christian verities undoubtedly has an outlook on life that the man who does not so believe, has not and cannot have.

It is also of interest to note how in the last few generations the thesis that morals depend upon belief has been strikingly vindicated. In a day not far gone by Matthew Arnold, John Stuart Mill, and Thomas H. Huxley were leaders in the attack upon revealed religion. These men frankly repudiated certain cardinal doctrines of Christianity, branding them as outworn and untenable. But they one and all expressed staunch allegiance to the accepted principles of Christian morals. In our generation, the same type of man as these have also cast aside belief in Christian morals! Could there be any more convincing demonstration of the fact that morals and belief in spiritual verities stand or fall together? It indeed matters what a man believes, because how he lives depends finally thereupon. (Contrariwise it is, of course, also true that our mode of life will profoundly affect our beliefs.)

WE ARE all pretty busy these days. We lead exacting lives that do often tax our bodily, moral, and spiritual resources to the utmost. We are well meaning folk, too, for the most part honestly desirous of living uprightly. But in our experience of the world, what happens? Not only is it the case that, preoccupied with our so-called secular pursuits, our standards are likely to conform to those with whom we have intercourse (the maxims and motives of business and social life are by no means always those of the Kingdom of Heaven) and we run the risk of becoming spiritually deadened, superficial, insensitive to the appeal of the highest. But it is likewise also apparent that one in actually doing his duty can lose his soul! The welfare worker, the judge on the bench, the physician, the minister—all, be they never so high-minded, may under the grind of daily toil become the victims of that day by day routine, may become dehumanized, may hazard their souls. Thus even in the conduct of services humanitarian and religious, we sorely need as an offset and refuge a Creed strong, lofty, true, compelling. It is a life-saving experience to such a man, let his vocation be the worthiest, to be steadied as he proclaims to himself, "I believe in God!"

And to those whose hearts are sad and anxious, whose lives have been battered and bruised, what does it not mean that religion includes belief?

What we need, however, is something more than the formal reiteration of the familiar words of the Creed. It must be interpreted. Every article of it should bring before the mind's eye precious truth, satisfying and practical. These realities, digested through the intelligence and so built into the souls of men, should impart a massive quality to our religion. And it is just this quality, so one is forced to observe, which is conspicuously lacking in the case of large numbers of our people today.

REMORSE.

By B. S. Ayres.

As Peter sat and warmed his trembling hands,
Before the few remaining, burnt-out brands,
His face now cold, and now with crimson dyed,
As he remembered thrice his Lord denied,
He knew that down through all the coming years,
In spite of shame and penitential tears,
That every time he heard a cock's shrill crow,
Remorse, and bitter sadness he would know.

Forgiveness

By

JOSEPH THAYER ADDISON,

Professor, Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Massachusetts.

THE other day I read in a book by that most stimulating Scot, Herbert Gray, a very striking sentence. He said, "One thing alone can deliver the world and usher in a new day for mankind. And that one thing is forgiveness." That seemed so large a claim to make for what we ordinary call "forgiveness" that it moved me to think again more carefully about what forgiveness means.

We so often misunderstand forgiveness that we sometimes think of it as a kind of yielding, a soft-hearted relaxing, an amiable way of slurring things over. Indeed it often seems to come most easily to people who don't care very intensely about the difference between right and wrong.

Yet, all the while we cannot forget that Christ was a great Forgiver and a great Teacher of forgiveness. He taught us to pray, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." He said, "Whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of man it shall be forgiven him." He declared that we should keep on forgiving until seventy times seven. And even on the Cross He prayed, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." If a person like our Lord of supreme moral vigor so preached and practiced forgiveness, it can only be a sign of strength. More than that, we are bold to believe that in Him we see God's own attitude and activity in forgiveness.

If, then, we are to share that strength and reproduce on our own small scale that divine attitude and activity, we need to study God's forgiveness more closely; and that study, I think, will reveal to us two great facts. So far from being weakly, one-sided forgiveness is cooperative, and so far from being feebly negative, it is creative. True forgiveness has in it infinite possibilities for good, becaause it is both cooperative and creative.

Jesus was in line with the best Jewish teaching when He left no doubt in the minds of His hearers that forgiveness was a two-sided affair. It is not something that God or anyone else can do to a man against his will. The need for forgiveness springs from injury of man to man or from sin of man against God, and what it achieves is the restoration of the relation—fraternal or filial—that has been broken by injury or sin. And since it is the restoration of a relationship it cannot be one-sided. It is a mutual affair. It demands cooperation. That is the clear reason why it involves repentance on the side of the sinner and a forgiving spirit in him who would ask forgiveness. That is no arbitrary requirement. It is implied in the very nature of the process. It simply means that to be forgiven you must be forgivable. You must let down the barriers to that renewed fellowship and communion which God so eagerly desires. The yearning initiative is surely God's, but for perfect restoration of relationship there must be a genuine answering movement on the part of man.

But cooperation is merely the condition of forgiveness. The really wonderful thing about forgiveness itself is that it is not slurring or forgetting: it is creating—the inevitable method of a creative God. Forgiveness is not a sign of yielding: it is a sign of determination. It is not God relaxing: it is God persistent. It is not God giving up the struggle with sin: it is God refusing to give up the sinner.

For God's forgiveness springs from two things—His intense hatred of sin and His intense love of us. If He cared little about sin, there would be no need of forgiveness. If He cared little about us, again there would be no need. But He hates evil so much and He loves us so much that He cannot turn us over to evil. His love will not let us go. If God were not to forgive, it would mean for Him surrender. It would mean admitting defeat, giving up the Father's task of redeeming and saving. But as a Redeemer who has set Himself to win us, His method always is to see the best in us—the best that He put there—to see us as we were meant to be and as we are going to be, to hold that best self before us by believing in it; and by believing in it to make it real. So forgiveness is God's refusal to accept our worst self as our real self. It is God's unresting effort to accept only our best self and to make our best self come true.

And that method of God as we see it in Christ He means to be our method. He summons us to join Him in His saving task and to learn from Him how to use forgiveness—that divine remedy for healing, restoring, and re-creating. It is the supreme remedy for the world's ills, for whenever we forgive, we both cleanse and stimulate. We cleanse the past of its sting and pain and we stimulate to new hope and endeavor. Only so can we share in the creative work of a Saviour God.

O God Father, whose love will not let us go; Grant that we may stray no more from Thee. Though we have sinned against Heaven and in Thy Light, yet let the promise of Thy welcome draw us home, that we, Thy sons, once dead, may live again, and long lost, may be found.

GOOD FRIDAY.

Throned upon the awful tree,
King of grief, I watch with Thee;
Darkness veils Thine anguished face,
None its lines of woe can trace.
None can tell what pangs unknown
Hold Thee silent and alone.

Silent through those three dread hours
Wrestling with the evil powers,
Left alone with human sin,
Gloom around Thee and within,
Till the appointed time is nigh,
Till the Lamb of God may die.

Hark that cry that peals aloud
Upward through the whelming cloud!
Thou, the Father's only Son,
Thou, His own Anointed One,
Thou dost ask Him—can it be?—
"Why hast Thou forsaken Me?"

Lord, should fear and anguish roll
Darkly o'er my sinful soul,
Thou, who once was thus bereft
That Thine own might ne'er be left,
Teach me by that bitter cry
In the gloom to know Thee nigh.
Amen.

Lost Footsteps

By

JAMES E. FREEMAN, BISHOP OF WASHINGTON.

Bishop Freeman

A distinguished lawyer wrote me recently saying that he had reached the conclusion that what our modern world needed was less talk and more of contemplation. He even suggested that it would be a fine experiment to have a moratorium on sermons and speeches for a given period. Studdert Kennedy, the forceful English preacher, has a book entitled: "Food for the Fed-up," in which he appeals for more of fixity of belief and less of unnecessary discussion concerning it. If any one of us attempted to write down all the things we hear over a given period it would make a volume of incalculable proportions, and if we were credulous enough to believe the half of what we hear, our beliefs would be as confused as were the colors of Joseph's coat.

The latter years more than any that have gone before have witnessed the greatest output of speeches, sermons, addresses, etc., etc., so many and so various that they have well-nigh robbed us of the capacity to think. Apart from what we normally hear day by day, we have super-added the radio with its mighty outpouring of speeches, good, bad and indifferent, chiefly the latter, until we have almost lost our capacity for quiet reflection. The old maxim: "Take heed what ye hear," has become increasingly difficult to follow. Little time is left for the imagination and still less for that kind of reflection that issues in strong convictions. Along with this, the swift currents of modern life, the multiplied and varied forms of social occupation and entertainment, the passion for something new and novel, and the pressure of bread-winning cares fill our days so full that we have little time for the consideration of life's deeper and finer values. No more valid reason for observing the quiet, the mental and spiritual refreshment afforded by Lent could be submitted than that it gives opportunity for winnowing out much that we have read and heard, beyond our capacity to assimilate it. We need a place of retreat to which we can resort, away from the confusions and discords of the hectic world in which we live. This is not a costly thing to accomplish, as a matter of fact, it is the most economical pursuit in which we may indulge. There are some people who cannot survive unless in the crowded streets of life, there are others who seem to have lost the capacity to think. Even such may recover some of their mental poise by well-spent periods of detachment, reading and reflection.

There is a beautiful building in Paris, formerly used as a Church, that is now a place of resort for men and women seeking legal advice. Here they bring their troubles and unsolved problems to find, through attorneys, if possible, a way out of their difficulties; it bears the striking name, the "Court of Lost Footsteps." We all need such a place; David said he found it in the temple, where he said concerning his confusions that they were too hard for him "until I went into the house of God, then understood I." There is something refreshing about the quiet of a Church, even when we are the only one to occupy it. The great spaces, the silence, the very shadows and the hallowed associations all conspire to induce reflection. "Be still, and know that I am God," the very walls seem to say. What better place is afforded for inducing serenity of mind, self-examination and a right appraisal of life's real values! There are times when we get more of satisfaction in such a period of uninterrupted quiet thus alone than when we are a part of the great congregation. Time was when Church doors were closed except on Sunday; this is uncommon now. In our downtown district there are several Churches that afford admirable places for such a quiet time. To step from the noisy street into one of these affords an opportunity for rest, reflection and prayer and does much to give that kind of refreshment of mind and body that serves as a tonic to the tired, confused worker.

Find such a "court of lost footsteps" and use it frequently and gain a better outlook upon life and your place in the complex scheme of things. This is to imitate the unfailing practice of Him who repeatedly withdrew from the crowded ways of life that He might the better fit Himself for the vast work to which He was committed.

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

Speaking about that great picture of Holman Hunt, it may interest your readers to know that it was first given to Keble College, Oxford, where it now hangs, and there is a replica, painted fifty years after, by the artist himself in St. Paul's Cathedral, London. I would like to mention two facts that some of your readers may possibly not have known.

The first is that when the picture was first displayed for exhibition, I think at the Royal Academy, very few people paid any attention to it. But one day Ruskin wrote an account of the picture to The Times, explaining its beauty and power, and they say that for the next few days and until the close of the exhibition such crowds gathered around it that many did not have a chance of seeing it.

The other story is that before the exhibition Holman Hunt showed the picture of the thorn-crowned King standing outside the door, knocking. His friend looked at it. He was profoundly impressed by the kingly figure of Christ, the rough and rugged door, and the clinging tendrils of the weeds which had spread themselves over it. Suddenly he said: "Hunt, you have made a terrible mistake here." "What mistake have I made?" said the artist. "Why, you have painted a door without a handle. There is no handle on the door." "That is not a mistake," replied Hunt. "That door has no handle on the outside, the handle is inside."

Yes. That is a wonderful truth. Christ will never force open the heart door. We must open it to the Voice of Love, and then: "If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."

Do Not Be a Deserter!

By

THOMAS F. OPIE,

Rector of St. Bartholomew's Parish, Olney, Md.

HAVE you ever been entirely forgotten or deserted by friends in a crisis—in time of bereavement and deep sorrow—or in some intensely searching hour of vicissitude and profound personal loss? It was in the great crisis of impending death, when His enemies and the mob and the soldiers were plotting to take Him—that the trusted disciples of Jesus slept in unconcern!

This attitude may have been due to indifference; it may have been due to ignorance of the facts; it may have been due to human infirmity and the habit of sleep. Possibly the disciples were thinking only of their own welfare and comfort. That is typical of many today. Possibly they did not know of the approaching tragedy and the danger and sorrow of soul that engulfed their Saviour. That, too, is doubtless the case with many today. They do not know that God is threatened! That the very life of the Church of Christ is at stake! There are many today who have the habit of sleep when there is work to be done and battles to be won and crises to be overcome. "Could you not watch with me one hour?" Can people not spare a brief space for worship and for the duties of the Christian life? Or are they mostly concerned with self?

Arrayed against Christ were the Pharisees, the Sadduccess, the Herodians, the mob and the soldiers. So today, these classes are typified—and even groups that are antagonistic to one another, form a coalition against the Christ and against His Church. Those who represent mob-violence and those who represent armed force and the mailed fist—the will to power and the determination to conquer—these are abroad in the land today. And they all make it imperative that the followers of the Nazarene should rally to His banner—and should stand by the Church and all that represents God in the world.

The Jews and the Romans actually murdered their Saviour—they would destroy in their crazy frenzy the one agency of racial and world redemption! So it is today. Men would destroy the Church—they would kill the deity of Christ. They would blindly destroy the one agency that can bring peace and brotherhood and happiness and spiritual calm in this most disquieting day. A busy man was once twitted for so religiously going to Church. He replied, "I'd go crazy if I did not have some place to go, to restore my spiritual and mental poise." The world in its frenzy and unrest must recognize the power of Christ, working in and through His Church, to restore calm and quiet and peace—even as in the storm on Galilee.

AS THERE were enemies within and without that little group on that fateful day of Christ's supreme tragedy, so there are enemies today within and without His Church. Within are Socialists, Anarchists, Nihilists, Bolsheviki—and there is Dowieism, Russellism, Eddyism, Mormanism—there is New Theology and Old Heresy—and there is bigotry and intolerance, and denominationalism and hypocrisy. There are enemies in the camp of Christ today, sufficient to undermine, disrupt and defeat His cause—except it were divine and unconquerable—"The gates of hell shall not prevail against the church!" There is divisiveness, jealousy, petty competition, rivalry and sordid, selfish interest! The call comes to every follower of the Christ to come to the help of the Lord. "Could you not watch with me one hour? Watch and pray lest you enter into temptation"—even temptation to deny and to betray your Saviour!

Then there are enemies without. There is out-and-out sin, selfish interests, immorality, intemperance, dishonesty, greed, vicious meanness—then there is the infidel—and there is the agnostic. The whole world of materialism, selfism and pessimism surges around the Church, seeking for a vulnerable spot at which to attack. This condition calls for a united front on the part of all Christian people, of whatever name. They should compromise on non-essentials, and recognizing the supremacy of Christ and the need of the hour for cooperation and for devoted loyalty, should join their denominational forces and give battle. It is high time to awake out of sleep—to shake off the habit of lethargy and indifference—and to carry the banner of the Saviour to victory.

Because of His divine nature and power, the Christ wrested His cause from apparent defeat—and so it will ever be—but the time of triumph and of the coming of the Kingdom of God Universal, may be indefinitely postponed, unless the whole body of Christ, His Church, hears and answers the challenge of the day and goes forth in the power of love and good-will and world-betterment. Victory is assured in the name and power of God and His Christ.

"Speak, History—who are life's victors?
Unroll thy long annals and say—
Are they those whom the world calls victors—
Who won the successes of a day?
The martyrs or Nero? The Spartans
Who fell at Thermopylae's tryst,
Or the Persians and Xerxes?
His judges or Socrates? Pilate or Christ?

A BOOK REVIEW.

THE CHURCH AND SOCIETY: By F. Ernest Johnson. Published by The Abingdon Press. Pp. 224. Price, $1.50.

It often seems difficult for writers on this subject to avoid extremes, yet here is a book that steers clear of reefs of radicalism and the shoals of conservatism. It is conspicuous for its comprehensiveness and balance. In the sector of Christianity to which it is directed, namely, Protestantism, the ground is covered thoroughly. Here Dr. Johnson distinguishes two types of religion, which he designates as "sect" and "church." The failures of the Church are thrown against the background of opportunities in such a way as to make the reader ask with the disciples of old, "Lord, is it I?"

Christianity, to be worthy of the name, must be both individual and social. "Misled by this teaching of the privacy of salvation, countless people are justifying an exceedingly selfish experience" (p. 52); for, "A man finds his neighbor spiritually when, so to speak, he finds God in his neighbor, and one who thinks that he has found God independently of his neighbor has been trying to steal some of the fruits of the spirit" (p. 56-57). The writer's idea of the Church is stated in these words: "The church is, potentially, a culture-center for motive and conviction upon which the nation may depend for a spiritual undergirding of its social programs" (p. 142). For, again, "It is the function of the church par excellence to keep itself sufficiently free from machinery to maintain a spiritual fire which will burn its way into every social institution and every social process" (p. 147). Yet, "the church can exercise a sustained, wholesome, and effectual influence only as it builds up a rounded social conscience in its own people" (p. 134). To do this, the Church should redouble its efforts along educational lines, especially adult education, for her responsibility here "will not be discharged by any other agency" (p. 204).

Our Debt to the Holy Land

By

THE REV. CANON CHARLES THORLEY BRIDGEMAN,

St. George's Close, Jerusalem.

AS HOLY WEEK, Good Friday and Easter approach, we cannot but be conscious of the debt of gratitude the whole world owes for what took place in Jerusalem nearly two thousand years ago. And as we contemplate our Blessed Lord on the Cross, our interest in the ancient land, hallowed by His Incarnate Life, is inevitably quickened. We reflect on the unfathomable Providence of God which chose this rocky, infertile land-bridge between the continents for the self-revelation of Himself, and we study with interest its peculiar geography, the story of God's gradual revelation in the history of its people, and, above all, the earthly scene wherein our Lord brought to a culmination the drama of our Redemption. No country in all the world enjoys the loving study of so many peoples as does the Promised Land. We can indeed apply to ourselves St. Paul's words to the Romans, that "the Gentiles have been made partakers of their spiritual things": that is, of those saints in the Holy Land who received and treasured a personal knowledge of our Lord.

But our interest in the Holy Land should not stop with the close of the Apostolic Age. All through the centuries, and still more today, the Holy Land lays us under a debt of gratitude. For here where the Gospel was first preached, it has been continuously witnessed by succeeding generations of our fellow Christians. The places consecrated by our Lord's feet have been preserved as witnesses to the Incarnation. Ways have been kept open whereby faithful pilgrims from afar might come to study and to pray in the familiar setting of the Gospel narratives, and to return home with a clearer understanding of the Bible and of the meaning of God-with-Us.

The pilgrim may follow on Psalm Sunday afternoon the historic path from Bethany over the Mount of Olives to the Holy City. On Maundy Thursday evening under the brilliant Paschal moon, he may trace the Master's footprints from the place of the Last Supper, out of the city, across the Kidron Valley and into the solemn shadows of the olive trees of the Garden of Gethsemane, there to meditate on the Agony and the Betrayal. On Good Friday, he may go with painful steps and slow along the Way of the Cross from Pilate's Judgment Hall to Calvary. There the pilgrim may kneel before the place of the Crucifixion in humble penitence for his share in the suffering of the Beloved Lord, and then visit the sealed tomb where His body lay. On Easter morning he may run with joyful steps to the Sepulchre to relive the ageless wonder of the Resurrection, and in the Sacrament of the Last Supper, meet face to face his Risen Lord. Bethlehem, Nazareth, and the blue depths of hill-encircled Galilee each bring vividly to mind the central event of all history: God's supreme self-revelation of Himself.

As we enjoy these "spiritual things," we ought to recognize our responsibility for helping to uphold the Faith in the Holy Land. Palestine is predominantly a Moslem country today, inhabited by the heirs of those Arabs who conquered it in the Seventh Century. Their chief shine is placed on the spot where stood Solomon's Temple. Though monotheists they know not the gracious Gospel of the Incarnation, nor the true character of their Father in Heaven as revealed in His Son. The Jews who are returning hither in such numbers at this time to rebuild their ancient homeland come with only the light that Moses could give them. Both these non-Christian groups challenge us as Christians to witness our Lord so effectively that they may be won to Him. In no place is it more of a duty than in the place where He lived and died and rose again to redeem them as well as us.

Then there are our fellow Christians of the ancient Apostolic Church of Palestine, who have borne the burden and heat of a long day of labor under alien rulers, and are now exhausted and spent. To them we must offer the help and sympathy which will revive their former vigor and put them in the forefront of the struggle to win the world for Christ.

Here you have the task which lies before all Christians in the Holy Land, and especially before us as Episcopalians. Through our cooperation with the rest of the Anglican Bishopric in Jerusalem we have a share in the work of our Church in the Holy Land. To Jews and Moslems we seek to show the truth that is in Jesus. To our brothers of the Eastern Churches we offer loving help. For our own people, both residents and pilgrims, we strive to provide the spiritual guidance they need.

Schools, hospitals and churches are the instruments you help to maintain.

Seven Christian high schools, among the best in the country, and fifteen elementary schools, lay the foundation of enlightened Christian citizenship, and prove a contact with Jews, Moslems and Christians alike.

Seven hospitals and many dispensaries bring to suffering bodies and souls the tender mercies of our Lord's healing hands.

Two dozen churches and clergy shepherd our part of the Christian flock.

In addition to this, the American Church has had for the last ten years a special interest in the Eastern Christian Churches. Cooperation in the important theological school of the Armenians and in the Orthodox Academy, where prospective clergy are being trained, give us an opportunity to be of immediate help to those who first evangelized us. Further help to some half dozen elementary schools of the Orthodox Church carries our assistance to the lonely Christian villages of Trans-Jordan, on the borderland of the desert and the town.

When you kneel before our Crucified Lord on Good Friday, remember that His own people in His own land are still for the most part ignorant of His love because of our indifference. Upon us rests the responsibility to hold the saving Cross before their eyes, that they may know the joy of the Resurrection that Easter proclaims. That responsibility we can discharge by ministering of our "carnal things" to those whose debtors we shall ever be for the priceless "spiritual things" which have come from the Holy Land.

News from the Front

(The Southern Churchman believing that missions constitute the life of the Church hereby invites the missionaries of our Church to write letters to this paper describing the work they are doing in an interesting way, so that our people may know more of what is going on in the mission field.)

St. Luke's International Medical Center.

Tokyo, February 21, 1935.

My dear Bishop Tucker:

Since entering upon my duties as Acting Director of St. Luke's International Medical Center, at the request of Bishop McKim, my courage has been sustained by the knowledge that thousands of friends in America and Japan have the interest of this great institution at heart, and are determined, as I, to see that the glorious vision which Doctor Teusler had for its future development is not dimmed, but is kept before us as the goal to be attained, as with resolute determination, we set ourselves to the task of realizing his high ideals for the Medical Center as a house of healing, a concrete expression of international goodwill and cooperation and an interpretation in terms easy to understand of the Master's doctrine of the Brotherhood of man.

Saddened as we were by the death of Doctor Teusler last August, our sorrow in the succeeding months has been somewhat mitigated by the realization that his unconquerable spirit remains the guiding force back of all our activities. Stirring messages have come to us from the American Council, the American Church, and individual friends throughout the world, reassuring us of their continued loyal support and cooperation, while here in Japan the Staff of the Medical Center courageously carry on their work, ministering to an ever-increasing number of sick and afflicted, supported at all times by the Japanese Advisory Council, a splendid body of distinguished statesmen and business leaders, organized to assist Doctor Teusler in his work.

Such support has enabled us to continue the work without interruption, realizing that by so doing we can best express our deep affection for our fallen leader, and keep faith with him who sacrificed his life in the creation of this work. The Hospital, during the past few months, has cared for patients to the limit of its capacity. More than one hundred thousand house visits were made by our public health nurses during the past year, and this same group of nurses recently responded to a call for service to help fight a dysentery epidemic in a neighboring city. A corps of nurses has been trained by St. Luke's in cooperation with the Government authorities, which will be transferred to the city to take charge of a public health demonstration center conducted jointly by the Public Health Institute and the City Sanitary Bureau.

The College of Nursing, with the approval of the Department of Education, has just revised its curriculum, bringing it more in line with similar schools in America, and increasing its efficiency as a training center for leaders in the nursing profession.

Through its predominant leadership in hospitalization, in nursing education, as well as its pioneer work in the fields of public health and hospital social service, St. Luke's International Medical Center continues to command the respect and support of influential persons both in America and Japan.

At the time of Doctor Teusler's death, plans were being drawn for a beautiful Chapel which will rise on the north side of the present buildings. The work will be begun on this unit of the Medical Center as soon as the architect's drawings have been approved by the Japan Building Committee. It is hoped that the Chapel may be ready for consecration by Easter, 1936.

A group of three residences for American doctors together with uptown offices, is under construction and due to be completed by October 1 of this year.

The architect, Mr. J. Van Wie Bergamini, is perfecting plans for the west wing, in which will be housed the out-patients and X-rays departments. While estimates have not yet been submitted for this unit, it is expected that the funds in hand will cover most of the cost of construction. The administration unit is the only portion of the new buildings for which funds are not yet available.

In order to put the institution on a sound financial basis, which will at the same time relieve the American Church of all financial responsibility, I am convinced that all those who are interested in maintaining the high efficiency of St. Luke's, and its leadership as a Christian Medical Center, should join forces in an effort to realize Doctor Teusler's dream for an endowment of five million dollars. The creation of such an adequate endowment would be the finest memorial we could possible erect to the memory of the man whose achievements are unparalleled in modern missionary annals. The future financial support of the Medical Center was one of the chief causes of Doctor Teusler's anxiety at the time of his death, and will continue to be a source of worry to those in charge of the work until an endowment is raised.

The American Council of St. Luke's International Medical Center has undertaken to conduct a campaign for funds, the first objective of an endeavor to reach the ultimate goal of five million dollars. The realization of this first objective, we hope would relieve the American Church of the burden of paying the annual subsidy of $25,000 promised for ten years in lieu of endowment. Due to curtailed income, the Church was reluctantly compelled to reduce its subsidy for 1935 to ten thousand dollars. Such a sudden and unexpected reduction in our income, while unavoidable, imperils the work of the Medical Center, and emphasizes the urgent necessity for taking immediate steps to raise an endowment. Therefore I sincerely hope that the efforts of the American Council will receive a generous response from all our friends, especially those who through their contributions to the Building Fund have a very real share in this great Christian humanitarian work.

With deep appreciation of your generous assistance in the past, and asking for your continued loyal support to all those who have set themselves the task of fulfilling Doctor Teusler's plans for the Medical Center, believe me,

Faithfully yours,

N. S. Binsted,
Acting Director.

The next General Convention in the Anglican Communion is in Japan, where the triennial General Synod of the Nippon Sei Kokwai convenes in Sendai on May 7.

Sendai is in Bishop Binsted's diocese of the Tohoku or Northeast, where there is a combined diocesan office, parish house for Christ Church, and diocesan training school for women workers. The building was provided partly by undesignated legacies and partly by a gift from the Woman's Auxiliary United Thank Offering of 1931. Christ Church is a self-supporting parish.

People whose interest in Japan has been awakened or increased by recent mission study classes will find in The Living Age for March three unusual articles about that country.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Miss Lindley Speaks to Seminary Students.

Alexandria, Va.—That the Woman's Auxiliary is increasingly tending to become really The Women of the Church, was the opinion voiced by Miss Grace A. Lindley, executive secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council, in addressing the senior class of the Virginia Seminary.

In her presentation of the Auxiliary, its history, work and organization, Miss Lindley showed how, through membership on its volunteer executive board, the Woman's Auxiliary represents the Church Periodical Club, the Church Mission of Help, the Girls' Friendly Society, and the women in almost every parish or mission of the American Episcopal Church throughout the world. By its not being a society but literally an auxiliary of the women of the Church to the National Council, by its great deal of freedom, its lack of a constitution, badge, motto, etc., and its efforts to avoid building up another organization, the Auxiliary has more and more, since 1919, become the paramount means by which the women are able to carry out their share of the work binding upon all Church-members.

Miss Lindley said there is now a branch of the Auxiliary in every diocese of the Church and that one hundred and thirteen branches answered the roll call at the triennial meeting at Atlantic City this past fall.

Especially since the reorganization of the National Council in 1919, and by virtue of its intimate connection with it, the Auxiliary has been able always to keep a view of the Church's work as a whole.

Miss Lindley impressed upon the theological students their opportunity to furnish to the women of the Church the leadership they want and wait for.

Missions today, personal relationships and citizenship, and the inner life are the three subjects foremost in the Auxiliary's program at present. It is by increased enrichment of the inner life of Church folk that Christian progress is going to be made.

Miss Lindley showed herself especially pleased with work the Auxiliary has done among Negroes. Forty-two Negro women have been trained in the last nine years to work among Church women and one of four women who travel about the country on behalf of the United Thank Offering, a most able worker, is a Negro woman.

Annual All-Day Missionary Meeting.

The Annual All-Day Missionary Meeting was held under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary on February 6, and it was the forty-seventh year in which this meeting for women has been conducted during each Epiphany season of the Church year. The meetings were held in the Church of the Holy Trinity, Philadelphia, beginning with the celebration of the Holy Communion, at which Bishop Taitt was the celebrant, assisted by the Rev. Howard R. Weir, rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity; the Rev. Dr. Franklin Joiner, rector of St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia, and the Rev. Dr. John H. Mockridge, rector of St. James' Church, Philadelphia. Noon Intercessions were conducted by the Rev. Thomas L. Harris, rector of the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany, Philadelphia.

Special speakers included the Rev. Spence Burton, of Cambridge, Mass., Superior of the Society of Mission Priests of St. John the Evangelist, the American branch of the widely known Cowley Fathers of the Church of England; and Dr. Francis C. Wei, President of the new Central China College, Wuchang, the latter representing a merger of denominational colleges, comprising the famous Boone College, Wesley College, Griffiths-John Institute, and the Reformed Church College.

Other special speakers also included the Hon. George Wharton Pepper, former United States Senator from Pennsylvania, and the Rev. Dr. Robert W. Patton, of New York, head of the American Church Institute for Negroes, which conducts a large number of Normal and Industrial schools for Negroes in eight Southern States. Dr. Patton brought with him a group of trained singers from the Fort Valley Normal and Industrial School at Fort Valley, Georgia, and the Voorhees Normal and Industrial School at Denmark, South Carolina, who rendered a program of spirituals.

Father Burton, who preached the sermon at the morning service of Holy Communion, has recently returned from a trip around the world visiting Mission stations in all lands. Dr. Wei, although only about forty-three years old, is recognized as one of the leading educators of China. He has crossed swords in strategy with Borodin, the late Russian Bolshevist Commisar in China, and was instrumental in the days when Communism held the upper hand in China, in saving hundreds of lives. Through his skillful maneuvering, he managed to save the students and buildings of Central China College from the Communist ravages. Later Dr. Wei was hunted by Bolshevists and escaped them, only to be beaten and imprisoned by Nationalist guards in Shanghai. Dr. Wei is a master of the English language, and in loyalty to his own nation, which he points out, is more than one-fifth of the world's population, he wears Chinese dress, the simple blue gown of the scholar.

A Bishop's Luncheon.

(May be adapted for several kinds of informal Gatherings.)

The Daughters of the King were holding a State Assembly. The committee for luncheon speeches devised the following program which proved to be so entertaining that it is presented here for further use.

There were fifty women present. Each woman before entering the dining room received a slip of paper on which was written a description of the name of the Bishop she was to present at the luncheon. Examples: Part of a bird; Ruler of the Kitchen; A piece of furniture; A human being; A typewriter; Pranks; etc., etc. Fifty of them. On entering the dining room each sought for a place bearing a card with name to answer the description received as, Bishop Wing, Southern Florida; Bishop Cook, Delaware; Bishop Davenport, Easton; Bishop Mann, Pittsburgh; Bishop Remington, Eastern Oregon; etc.

After luncheon reminiscences of bishops were asked for. There were several dioceses represented, so there were many speeches, some humorous, some sad, all sympathetic.

The above might be used with a charge for the luncheon and a free will offering for one of the Bishop's funds. Special stories might be prepared beforehand.

Erie: "Every parish has a branch of the Woman's Auxiliary."

Delaware: "An increased interest is manifested in educational work. Let us face the future with confidence that the Woman's Auxiliary will meet whatever comes as an opportunity for greater service, with a loyal determination to advance 'God's Kingdom on this earth'."

Harrisburg: "A self-denial fund for the past three years has helped to pay the salaries of two colored clergymen in this diocese." "A magazine is sent to each prayer-partner."

Maryland: "The Woman's Auxiliary helped the parish to pay its quota. There is no sense of discouragement but a greater desire and obligation to meet the General Church Program."

THE SEMINOLE MISSION.

Leader: The story is told that every time that Alexander the Great, as a boy, heard of one of his father's victories, he wept. For he thought that there would not be anything left for him to conquer. Sometimes when we hear of the great missions that have been founded, and the great progress of the missionaries, we are apt to think that every possible field is occupied, so that there are no more worlds to be conquered for Christ. Thus it comes as somewhat of a surprise to us to learn that in the southernmost part of the United States we have a group of people, a tribe of Indians, in which there is not one baptized member of any Christian Church.

They live in two groups scattered through the swamps and everglades of the Diocese of South Florida. The settlements seldom have more than a couple of dozen people in them, and often not half that many. They are the Seminole Indians.

The Story of the Seminoles.

The Seminole has been the "forgotten man" as far as the Church is concerned. Yet, they have a most interesting history. When the White Man first came to Florida, the Indians, then resident, strenuously resisted, but they were eventually "pacified" and "missionized." But revolt after revolt broke out that was put down with blood and iron. The Spaniards eventually succeeded in directing their warlike spirit against the English in South Carolina. In 1702, the English retaliated with an expedition that either killed or carried away captive all the Indians. Some of these were kept as slaves by them, and many were distributed to the English allies, the Creek Indians. But the captives, even at that date, were true Florida boosters and soon persuaded a number of their captors to forsake their own land for the "Land of Sunshine." The Creeks called these Seminoles, which is the Indian word for Runaways.

By the time of the American Revolution the Seminoles had grown to be a great tribe with their own peculiar customs, many of which they still keep. Thus they live on platforms with thatched roofs overhead. They are also most independent, refusing the civilization of the Whites, especially in the matter of clothing. It is only recently that the men have been persuaded to cover their legs, preferring them to be entirely bare. The picturesque skirt, the men now wear, made up of highly colored cloth strips sewed together, is a compromise between bare legs and trousers. It cannot but remind us of why our ladies now wear skirts. We remember that when the Barbarians in Europe overran the Roman Empire, they found all, men and women dressing in skirts. But in token of submission they demanded that all should wear trousers. The men obeyed. But the ladies refused and have never worn trousers until quite modern times when someone was rash enough to say that they should not. Today, true to form, they show their independence by wearing them.

At the time of which we are speaking the Seminoles had many cattle and prosperous farms. But the Whites stole their cattle and spoiled the farms. Under Oceola, their great chieftain, they rose and warred against the United States. It was a long and costly war. Eventually they were subdued as a tribe, and most of them were herded out to Oklahoma. But true to their name, many "ran away" to the everglades, where they still refuse to mix with the Whites. There for a time they were free in the villages on land that no White man wanted. So they fished and hunted and raised small crops on the highland. But today the Whites' hunting laws forbide them to hunt out of season. What does an Indian know of "hunting seasons?" So many are reduced to beggary or starvation. Their show places, or villages along the Tamiami Trail, where they sell souvenirs, are even being invaded by Indians from other sections of the country.

Religiously, they are even worse off, for their old religion, through contact with the white man has been forgotten, and they have nothing to take its place.

What Has the Church Done to Help Them.

Our Church started work among them under Bishop Gray, and under such leaders as the Rev. Messrs. Trout, Gibbs and Spencer, and Drs. Godden and Brecht. Though no work for the Master is ever completely lost, the visible results were very few. Today the last baptized member of the Church has died. A few years ago there was but one Christian among them and he was an Indian from Oklahoma, who was a Baptist missionary.

When the news came to Deaconess Bedell in Alaska that her school there must close for lack of funds, she came to New York. But her eyes were fixed on the Seminoles. When the opportunity presented itself, she came down and presented the subject to Bishop Wing. An interdenominational group wanted her to represent them in working among the Seminoles. Her reply was that she would go under her own Church or not at all. At the Diocesan Convention two years ago she made her plea, and the Woman's Auxiliary decided to give a certain amount to her work. This with the pension allowed her by the United Thank Offering allowed her to start. So the work at Immokalee and Everglades, which had been closed for several years, was reopened.

People asked her if she would not be frightfully lonely with no White people about her. Her reply was simply: "In Alaska I was more than eighty miles from any Whites, and I had a wonderful time. I must live somewhere, and I love Indians."

The original plans for her work have had to be changed from time to time, and it has now developed into a four-fold plan.

Visiting among them is the first part of it. This seems to the casual visitor to be almost impossible as they are so suspicious of us. Anyone who has tried to engage them in conversation can bear witness to this. But through the knowledge of their race gained by long contact in other sections of the country the Deaconess has gradually made friends with them until those that do not know her and wave a greeting as she passes in her car are few and far between.

Sometimes the visiting is not easy. They live in such out of the way places. As one of them expressed it, "White man take away our hunting ground, and push us down and down, by and by we go into the water." But where they are she will go; especially if there are any sick or needy that send for her. On one such trip, she rode a way in her car, then she got in one of their dug-out canoes and had an Indian paddle her for some distance. Then she got out and had to wade. Paddling in an eighteen-inch wide dugout is not the mildest of experiences either. But she reached the sick person and ministered to her.

Then there is her plan of having them visit her. She hopes to be able to persuade two of the girls to live with her. But they are so shy, she has not yet been able to accomplish this. She does have whole families come in to see her sometimes, and she has had their village at the little town of Everglades, where she lives, reconstructed so that they may feel at home. At times their visits have been almost too much of a good thing. But she gives up everything, correspondence, study, anything, in order to be able to win their confidence. Progress has been marvelous. On several occasions girls have all but spent the night with her. They insisted on going home at the last minute. Such queer things as knives, forks, spoons and napkins are a never-ending source of delight to them. For in their own homes such luxuries are never dreamed of. They go according to the old adage: "Fingers were made before forks, you know, my dear."

Last Christmas they had a wonderful celebration with such delicacies as meat, macaroni, rice, coffee, oranges and candy. It was held at the Indian village at Everglades, which is very close to the tip end of Florida. The time was the Wednesday after Christmas. The Rev. Mr. Bache of Fort Lauderdale conducted the service and told the Christmas story. The interpreter was Brown Tiger, one of their Medicine Men. About one hundred and thirty came. At its conclusion one of them said: "Next time more Indians come."

The third plan is the industrial one. The Seminoles are all desperately poor, and the Deaconess is trying to develop their native art and industry. But because she cannot control the output, she is at times at a loss to know how to help them.

The fourth plan is one that must be mentioned only with bated breath. It is an educational one. They hate schools and would never think of going into one. So the public school has had a terrible time doing anything for them. But she does not call it school. She makes a kind of game of teaching them to read, and quite a few have mastered the accomplishment. This seems to many to be one of the most remarkable things that she has done.

Behind, in and through all of these plans, there is the one great motive of bringing them to know and to love God through knowledge of the Christ. When she first came a most pertinent question was asked her. She was in the company of the Government Agent. The question was, "You work for Government?" Her reply was: "No, I work for God, same as Dr. Brecht." The response was immediately a warming smile, for the influence of those men and women of God is still great among them.

They just do not yet understand. At times they will decline prayer. But at other times they welcome it. The Deaconess is confidently expecting that soon there will be some baptisms among the Indians, as there have already been among the few Whites that live in that territory from her influence. Let us hope that these firstfruits may not be far off.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

RELATIVE FUNCTIONS OF FORWARD MOVEMENT AND NATIONAL COUNCIL DISCUSSED.

In compliance with a resolution adopted at the last meeting of the Forward Movement Commission, the Rt. Rev. Henry W. Hobson, D. D., chairman, and the Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, D. D., held an all-day conference at Church Missions House on Wednesday, April 3, with the Presiding Bishop, the president and officers of the National Council, and Miss Grace Lindley, executive secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary. The group discussed the relative functions of the Forward Movement Commission and the National Council, and the possibilities of further cooperation in carrying out the following resolution adopted by the Commission:

"Resolved: That the Commission on the Forward Movement, realizing the importance of clarifying its relationship to the diocesan authorities and to the Presiding Bishop and the National Council, desires to emphasize its sense of the importance of the missionary cause of the Church in the parish, in the diocese, and in the general Church, and its desire to cooperate with the authorities of each in their respective spheres."

Under the resolution of General Convention, the Commission is charged first with the duty of reinvigorating the life of the Church, anad second with the rehabilitation of its parochial, diocesan and general work. As a result of conferences held with Bishops and others throughout the Church the Commission believes that its immediate task should be confined to seeking ways and means to enrich the spiritual life of the individual communicant in his relation to God and to the society of his fellow men, in order to that it may ultimately strengthen the efforts of the Church more completely to fulfill its missionary responsibility in parish, diocese and the whole Church.

Following the meeting Bishop Hobson reported that there was entire accord between the program being promoted by the Forward Movement Commission and the plans and objectives of the National Council, and further that as a result of the many conferences held throughout the Church by members of the Forward Movement Commission, there is a very evident new interest and rising tide of loyalty in the success of the united program of the whole Church.

DEDICATED TO CHURCH ARMY IN U. S. A.: OBSERVING THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY.

On Palm Sunday, Captain B. Frank Mountford, National Director of Church Army, observes the thirtieth anniversary of his being commissioned an Evangelist in Church Army by the Bishop of London.

His first appointment was to a horse-drawn caravan which he made his home for most of three years, preaching missions, usually of two or three weeks' duration, in Lancashire, England. Following that work, he was placed in charge of the Church Army Training College at Marble Arch, London. For fifteen years he was on the staff of special missioners to His Majesty's Prisons in Great Britain.

Captain Mountford has twice been offered ordination by the Bishop of London, but declined these offers, desiring to continue to serve the Church as a Layman.

During the War he served three years in the Artillery, being twice mentioned in dispatches and receiving a commission for special work as an Observer.

During the past ten years America has been his home and to Church Army in U. S. A. he has dedicated his remaining years of service.

In recognition of these thirty years of Lay-Evangelistic leadership, a special fund is being raised to assist in the training of more Church Army rural missionaries. Gifts for this purpose may be sent to the Treasurer, Mr. S. Van B. Nichols, at Church Army National Headquarters, 414 East Fourteenth Street, New York City.

The class of trainees now being got together, can receive five or six more men or women. Candidates must be under thirty and afire for souls.

FRIENDLY CONTACTS TO PROVIDE BASIS FOR UNITY: EPISCOPAL AND RUSSIAN ORTHODOX CHURCHES.

Plans for fellowship between members of the Protestant Episcopal Church and of the Russian Orthodox Church have been started by a group of General Theological Seminary students under the leadership of the Rev. Dr. Edward Rochie Hardy, Jr., lecturer and tutor at the seminary.

The purpose of the fellowship, according to Dr. Hardy, is to facilitate friendly contacts between the two groups and in this manner to provide a basis for unity. The fellowship, which will undertake a regular program during the coming year will be modeled somewhat after the Fellowship of SS. Sergius and Alban in England, and one of its projects will be the support of the Russian Orthodox Seminary in Paris.

Cooperating with the General Seminary students and Dr. Hardy in the move is a group of the Federation of Russian Orthodox Clubs of New York, under the leadership of Paul Fekula. At a recent meeting of the group at the Twenty-third Street Y. M. C. A., New York, the fellowship was addressed by Dr. Hardy, Mr. Fekula and Prof. C. A. Manning of the Columbia University Department of Slavonic Languages.

JERUSALEM BROADCAST ON EASTER DAY.

I hear that the B. B. C. in conjunction with the Columbia Broadcasting System of America, is arranging a broadcast program from Jerusalem on Easter Day. As we had the bells of Bethlehem at Christmas it is fitting that we should have an Easter Day message from the city of the Empty Tomb. I understand that the Ven. W. H. Stewart, Archdeacon in Palestine, will give a "talk".—Exc.

OFFICIAL LIST OF PERSONNEL.

The membership list of the Department of the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council of Churches, just released by its Executive Secretary, the Rev. Worth M. Tippy, D. D., reveals the names of several members of the Episcopal Church serving thereon.

The Vice-Chairman of the Department is the Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, Junior Suffragan Bishop of New York. The other Churchmen included are Edward R. Case, General Secretary of the American Prison Association; John M. Glenn, former Director of the Russell Sage Foundation; Miss Mabel B. Jenkins, of Corona, N. Y.; Miss Marguerite Marsh, Executive Secretary of the Church Mission of Help in the Diocese of New York; Miss Mary C. Smith of Minneapolis; the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, Executive Secretary, Department of Christian Social Service of the National Council; the Rev. William B. Spofford, Secretary of the Church League for Industrial Democracy.

WORK IN NORTHERN INDIANA.

(Extract from Bishop Gray's report to National Council.)

This year we have divided the diocese into three rural deaneries with the rectors of the larger parishes as deans: the Very Rev. Earl R. Hart of Trinity Church, Michigan City, for the Gary Deanery; the Very Rev. Lawrence C. Ferguson, St. James' Church, South Bend, for the South Bend Deanery; the Very Rev. James McN. Wheatley, Trinity Church, Fort Wayne, for the Fort Wayne Deanery. These men are serving of course without any missionary stipends, being supported entirely by the salaries that they receive from their respective parishes. They are directly responsible under the Bishop for all missionary work in their respective deaneries.

The money we are receiving this year from national headquarters goes to priests who are doing missionary work. The missionary money which is given within the diocese itself, after paying each month one-twelfth of what we told National Council to expect on our apportionment and after reserving a certain amount for regular expenses, is used by the deaneries for the carrying on of the other missionary work in their respective deaneries, which is not provided for by the appropriation from National Council.

Each dean has set as his goal, first, that there shall be a Sunday school and a Sunday morning service every Sunday in every mission now existing. In order to do this they are using the volunteer services of some of the other parish clergy and the volunteer services of lay readers. These volunteer workers, priests and laymen, receive nothing except their travel expense. This part of the plan is almost an accomplished fact now.

The next step is to reach out and establish Sunday schools and Sunday morning services in the towns in which now the Church is unknown. Half of the county seats in this diocese, ranging from 3,000 to 10,000 inhabitants, do not know what the Episcopal Church is, and there are other small towns and rural communities where the Church should be established.

We have two distinct types of work in this diocese—one in the great industrial center of the country, which is largely the pulse of the nation's business, situated in the northwest corner of the diocese, which is called the Calumet District, South Bend and Fort Wayne also being industrial centers—and the other type of work is rural throughout the rest of the diocese, which presents a tremendous challenge.

NO BETTER THAN USUAL!

Receipts from the dioceses to April first are no better than last year, in spite of the strong emphasis placed by General Convention upon preserving the integrity of missionary funds and the practice of the partnership principle. Even allowing a full month for collections, the amount remitted is only 57 per cent of what was due upon the "Expectations." As a result more money has been borrowed. The dioceses remitting nothing in the first three months are in the main the ones found in the same list last year.

The report of five Diocesan Treasurers, picked at random, indicate where the trouble lies. For the first two months of the year the reports show:

	Diocese "A"	Diocese "B"	Diocese "C"	Diocese "D"	Diocese "E"
Number of congregations to whom quotas assigned or pledges received	58	28	170	62	89
Number of congregations from whom remittances were received	18	11	58 (a)	11	42
Percentage of congregations remitting in two months	31%	39%	34%	18%	47%

(a) Not including small remittances from Church Schools and Woman's Auxiliary.

It is hardly conceivable that 66 per cent of the 407 congregations collected no money specifically designated for the Church's Program in the first two months of the year. Where is that money?

General Convention of 1934 adopted a resolution stating that "money contributed for the Missionary Work of a diocese and of the Church at large constituted a trust fund." Without implying the misuse of such funds, a faithful trusteeship would seem to require reasonably prompt remittances.

Let us all work for a fine report on May first!

Faithfully yours,
Lewis B. Franklin,
Treasurer.

ABSTRACT OF ADDRESS ON LABOR'S CONCERN WITH SOCIAL SECURITY.

By Spencer Miller, Jr.

Mr. Spencer Miller, is the Consultant on Industrial Relations of the Social Service Department of the National Council. The address was delivered at the Regional Conference on The Church and Social Security, Monday, April 8, in St. George's Church, New York. Mr. Miller said:

Work, wages, and the good life—these three—are the things which labor seeks today. In our modern industrialism, with the dependence of the worker on his job, where there is no work there are no wages, and where there are no wages there is but a meager living. Such in a sentence is the problem of labor today. Such is the center of labor's demand for social security legislation.

But modern industrialism has brought with it grave industrial hazards. Today all over America labor is seeking for some type of social security against these four hazards of accident, unemployment, illness, and old age.

(1) Three million workers are injured each year in carrying out their industrial occupations; 20,000 of them are killed outright and 150,000 are injured permanently. Labor seeks some security against this serious toll to life and limb in the course of industrial occupation.

(2) Eleven million workers are today unemployed; one-half of these men may never again be reemployed in American industry. This means a vast pressure of idle men and women on available jobs. Furthermore, increased productive capacity will still further add to the elimination of workers in industry, in addition to the more usual causes of seasonality, cynical, and technological unemployment. Labor seeks security in work and wages through unemployment insurance.

(3) Three million people in America are sick every day in the year. Upwards of one billion dollars is expended by people in the low income group for patent medicines of one kind or another, to cope with the problem of ill health so frequently the result of poverty and undernourishment. Labor, that receives the smallest share of the national income, is called upon to bear the largest proportional share of medical care. Labor seeks some more intelligent manner for the distribution of medical services to all who are in need.

(4) One out of every two workers who come to the age of sixty-five are dependent for support on relatives or the state. This means that 3,000,000 or more of our population are among the dependent age. In an era when the loss of skill and the increased pace have made workers old at the age of forty-five, labor seeks some security against a dependent old age through old age pensions.

Service Commemorating the Evacuation of Richmond.

A unique service was held in St. Paul's Church, Richmond, April 3, commemorating the evacuation of the city seventy years ago by the Confederate Government, prior to the entrance of the Union troops.

This old church, in which most of the civic celebrations and commemorations of similar nature are held, was filled to capacity as the choir entered singing the great hymn so closely associated with the Lost Cause, "How Firm a Foundation." After the choir came the clergymen of the city, visiting ministers from other denominations, including Rabbi Calisch, Bishop Denny of the Methodist Church, and Bishop St. G. Tucker of the Diocese of Virginia, with Bishop W. T. Rogers of the Diocese of Ohio. The guests of honor included the Governor of the State with his staff, the Mayor with representatives of the city government and detachments from the State militia, a few old Confederate soldiers, Daughters of the Confederacy and three ladies who were present at the service in this church seventy years ago, when President Davis received notice from General Lee that the city could no longer be defended. After short addresses by the Governor and Mayor, Dr. D. S. Freeman, editor of the News Leader, in simple, yet graphic language, described the events of April 2 and 3, when the city was exacuated and left to the advancing army of General Weitzel. The congregation was deeply impressed, as was evidenced by their hushed voices as they left the church. Bishop Rogers, who had been preaching at the midday services held in St. Paul's, not knowing how Richmond links her past with the present, suggested that the midday service be omitted, as another congregation could not be expected half an hour after the first service. He expressed his astonishment when he faced a packed church at one o'clock. He had been so deeply moved by the preceding service, with its spirit of devotion and liberality, free from all bitterness and vituperation, that his short address took the form of a spontaneous tribute to the people who had built again their city from the smouldering ruins that were left to them seventy years ago. The spirit which enabled them to rear a greater city had also guided them to build up a spiritual life which in the present world crisis has made a distinct contribution of strength and faith. He took as his theme the words of St. Paul, "Be ye therefore steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord," and pointed out the essential continuity of a city whose people are possessed with this steadfastness. In conclusion, he stressed the fact that in life there are found "personalities that belong to the infinite," and added "we give thanks to God for them, we remember such today. What of the city after all? it is the souls of men that count."

St. Luke's Church Assumes Pastoral Care of St. John Baptist.

Beginning April 7, the Church of St. John Baptist, one of the oldest parishes in the Germantown section of Philadelphia, came under the pastoral care of the Rev. Wallace E. Conkling, rector of historic St. Luke's Church, Germantown, the parish from which St. John Baptist had its origin eighty years ago, when it was started as a new work in a section of Germantown, then largely undeveloped.

St. Luke's Church, which was the first parish to be organized in Germantown, antedates its daughter parish by more than forty years. The arrangement by which the rector of the mother parish will assume pastoral care of the daughter parish after a lapse of four score years, it was explained yesterday, does not contemplate any merger of the two parishes. St. John Baptist, it was explained, will continue its status as an independent parish, the only difference being that instead of having a rector of its own, the rector of St. Luke's will give the parish his pastoral care.

The Rev. C. Sydney Goodman, who has been rector of St. John Baptist since February, 1931, tendered his resignation some time ago to devote his entire time to the development of the new St. John's Mission, which was started by him in the West Oak Lane district, and which is rapidly developing. The vestry of St. John Baptist was loathe to accept Mr. Goodman's resignation and held it in abeyance until after a congregational meeting, when the congregation voted to request the rector of St. Luke's Church to take over the pastoral care. With the approval of Bishop Taitt, Father Conkling agreed to accept the responsibility and Mr. Goodman's resignation was finally accepted and became effective last week.

The invitation to Father Conkling to accept pastoral oversight of St. John Baptist, it was explained yesterday, is based upon the belief that under this arrangement the parish will be considerably strengthened in having the leadership of St. Luke's rector and the other members of the clergy staff of the older parish.

Some time ago after the West Oak Lane work was planted under the direction of the Rev. C. Sydney Goodman and given the name of St. John's Mission, the vestry of St. John Baptist considered the advisability of disposing of its property and moving to the West Oak Lane site. There was considerable opposition to this on the part of many communicants of St. John Baptist, finally it was submitted to a congregational meeting. The vote was against moving and the opinion gained ground that the more desirable result would be to continue St. John Baptist at its present location. The decision to request the rector of St. Luke's to give the parish his pastoral oversight followed. It is understood that Father Conkling and the clergy staff of St. Luke's will serve St. John Baptist without remuneration.

St. John Baptist was founded in 1855 by the Rev. William M. Deihl, rector of St. Luke's Church. For many years it was a successful parish. One of its former rectors, the Rev. Dr. C. K. Nelson, subsequently became the Bishop of Georgia, and when a second diocese, that of Atlanta, was erected in Georgia, Bishop Nelson became its Diocesan. The body of the Rev. Dr. Diehl, the founder and first rector of St. John Baptist, now rests in St. Luke's churchyard.

Commemoration Service of the Order of Daughters of the King.

Clergy and communicants of the diocese participated in a service of commemoration in Philadelphia of the fiftieth anniversary of the foundation of the Order of the Daughters of the King, a national organization for woman. The commemoration service was held in St. Matthew's Church, and was one of scores of other commemorations being held in other dioceses and missionary districts of the Episcopal communion. The Rev. N. B. Groton, rector of St. Thomas' Church, Whitemarsh, made the anniversary address.

The Order had its beginning in a Bible Class in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, New York City, now the Church of the Resurrection. Other Bible Classes held in various parts of the country joined in the movement to establish the Order and on Easter Even, April 4, 1885, the National Order was effected and it spread rapidly over the United States, into Canada and across the seas to England.

The Diocese of Pennsylvania was among those in which the early Chapters were organized. The first chapter in Philadelphia was in Old St. Andrew's Church, which remained in active service until St. Andrew's was merged into the present St. Andrew's Collegiate Chapel of the Philadelphia Divinity School about thirteen years ago. The second chapter was organized in Christ Church, Germantown, now Christ Church and St. Michael's, and this chapter has been in continuous service for forty-seven years.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman D. D. Bishop.

Edgar Priest, Beloved Director of Cathedral Music.

Edgar Priest, organist and choirmaster of Washington Cathedral for more than a quarter of a century, who had served in that post under the three Bishops of Washington, the Rt. Rev. Henry Yates Satterlee, the Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding and the present Bishop, the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, died after a brief illness on March 31. The body of the beloved director of the Cathedral music was removed to the Chapel of the Resurrection in the Cathedral on Sunday, and on Tuesday after the office for the Burial of the Dead was said in the Great Choir and Sanctuary before a large congregation of his associates and friends, he was buried in the Cathedral crypt vaults.

At the funeral service the unique tribute of musical silence was paid to Mr. Priest. More than fifty choir boys and men, clad in purple and white vestments, occupied the choir stalls, which were banked with flowers. But not a note was sung and the organ console was closed. The Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Washington; the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, D. D., Dean of Washington, and the Rev. William L. DeVries, Ph. D., S. T. D., Canon and Precentor of Washington, conducted the service. Many beautiful floral offerings adorned the Sanctuary, including wreaths from the Cathedral Chapter, the Choir, the American Guild of Organists, and the Cathedral staff.

The honorary pallbearers were: Merritt O. Chance, Warren Grimes, Robert D. Heinl, Sr., Van H. Manning, George R. P. Shackelford and Ernest M. Skinner.

The favorite hymn of the musician, "In the Cross of Christ I Glory," was read as part of the impressive service.

Mr. Priest was the son of Hannah Burns of Scotland and Charles Priest, owner and headmaster of a private school at Saddleworth, Yorkshire, England. He began his musical education at an early age, studying piano and organ, later going to the Royal Manchester College of Music, from which he received the degree of A. R. M. C. M. While at Manchester College he studied with Dr. J. Kendrick Pyne, organist of Manchester Cathedral. Dr. Pyne is renowned for his knowledge of the boy voice and his organ playing.

In 1901 Mr. Priest came to America where he was organist at St. John's Church, Kingston, New York, under the Rev. Dr. Octavius Applegate, Jr. Afterwards he played in churches in New Haven and Saratoga Springs, New York, where one of his choir men was Louis

McHenry Howe, secretary to President Roosevelt, who is seriously ill here.

In May, 1906, Mr. Priest came to Washington to become organist and choirmaster at St. Paul's Church, Washington Circle. At the invitation of Bishop Satterlee, he arranged and conducted the open-air services at the Peace Cross in Washington Cathedral Close, and officiated in the same manner at special Cathedral services. On October 1, 1909, at the recommendation of Bishop Harding, Mr. Priest received his first appointment as organist and choirmaster of the Cathedral, to train the boys of the National Cathedral School to form a Cathedral Choir. On June 14, 1911, prior to the opening of the Bethlehem Chapel, Mr. Priest was officially reappointed first organist and choirmaster of the Cathedral, a position he held for more than a quarter of a century.

He was the Cathedral's first and only organist and choirmaster. He was greatly beloved by all the choir boys and men. His training of boys' voices and the beauty of the music at the Cathedral services under him were noted throughout the country. Speaking of Mr. Priest, Bishop Freeman declared: "His memory will be precious always here, and every effort will be made to see that the foundations of Cathedral music he laid remain strong and stable. He was a manly man, an exemplar of the best things of character, a Christian gentleman and a great musician. His going from us is an irreparable loss."

The interment in the Cathedral was private. Mr. Priest is survived by his widow, Mrs. Edith Priest, whom he married in Washington; a brother, Robbert Priest of Vancouver, British Columbia, and a sister, Mrs. Fred Thorpe, of Alton, Illinois.

Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Bishop.

New Burlington Mills Church is Opened.

Sunday, April 7, at 11 A. M., the new Episcopal Church, Calvary Chapel, on Piedmont Heights, Burlington, was opened for public worship by the Rt. Rev. Edwin Anderson Penick, D. D., Bishop of North Carolina. This is the first church edifice to be erected by the Lawrence S. Holt trust fund for missionary purposes in Alamance County. As such it marks one stage in the fulfillment of a vision first conceived over ten years ago.

Inspired by the example of his friend, Mr. Samuel Nash of Tarboro, and others in extending the ministrations of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Edgecombe County, Mr. Holt in 1923 set aside a considerable part of his modest fortune, "For the establishment of mission stations of the Protestant Episcopal Church," in his native county of Alamance, which had been the scene of his conspicuous business success. To insure the proper carrying out of his purpose, he made the rector, wardens and vestry of the local Episcopal Church in Burlington co-trustees of this fund. Consequently this church inaugurated work in the spring of 1931, in the rapidly growing Burlington Mills section at Piedmont Heights. Although handicapped by poor physical equipment, the work progressed so well that a resident minister took charge in 1932, and by the fall of 1934 plans were formulated for the erection of a modest church building.

Calvary Chapel is built in the best Gothic tradition of the Episcopal Church. The building committee was composed of Hobart Steele, chairman; Roger Gant, E. C. Holt, R. A. Williams and F. L. Williamson. The cornerstone was laid with appropriate ceremonies by Bishop Penick on All Saints' Day, November 1, 1934. The building, situated on a high rise of ground, is cruciform in shape, and surmounded by a striking metal cross covered with gold leaf and inlaid with grass crystals. Set in the centre of the mill community the church presents an imposing appearance from a considerable distance. The walls are constructed throughout of brick veneer with cement trim.

Memorials.

The central feature of the interior is the altar, presented by the women of the Church of the Holy Comforter, in memory of Margaret Erwin Holt, late beloved wife of Lawrence S. Holt. Under the direction of R. A. Williams, of the Alamance Lumber Company, it has been constructed of highly polished, fine-grained red gum. On the face of the altar are three Gothic panels, ornamented by carved ecclesiastical symbols, the dove, which is the symbol of the mother church of the Holy Comforter, the cross and the crown. Elevated above the altar is a narrow shelf bearing the words, 'Holy, Holy, Holy," carved upon the face. On this shelf rests the altar cross of wrought gold, designed and executed in the studios of the International Silver Company, of New York. This cross is the gift of the children of the Holy Comforter Sunday school in memory of four departed members, Atticus Haygood, Jr., John Hinsdale, Alfred Ireland and Wylie Steinbach. Accompanying the cross are twin gold candlesticks, the gift of Sally and David Eaton, Jr., children of the Rev. and Mrs. David T. Eaton, in memory of their paternal grandparents. Also a pair of altar vases, the gift of Mrs. George T. Williamson, in memory of her husband, a pioneer cotton manufacturer in this county. The altar linens were designed in the Cathedral Studios of Washington, and are the handiwork of Mrs. George Attmore of Graham.

Other memorials include a pair of alms basins given by Mrs. Hobart Steele, in memory of her late parents. Mr. Hobart Steele personally made and presented the illuminated cross on the exterior.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

The Cross the Center of Our Faith.

Put the Cross back into religion, urged the Rev. Dr. John Gass of Charleston, W. Va., in his series of Lenten noonday addresses in Chicago this past week.

"We have been so busy trying to dress our religious doctrines up in intellectually respectable clothes that we have thought far more of the outward and visible form than of the inner structure of reality," said Dr. Gass. "We have quoted poetry and sounded the heights and depths of philosophy and science, but in the end we have left people wondering and confused.

"We have in a real sense been trying to make religion too easy. We have on many occasions forgotten that a Cross is at the center of our faith. The Cross was no figure of speech to Jesus; it was a grim reality. The Cross for men today is not merely an emblem to be worn: it represents a task to be done."

Only by putting the Cross back in its proper place in religion and the world can peace and brotherhood, integrity and humaneness be brought about, asserted Dr. Gass.

COLLECT FOR MONDAY BEFORE EASTER.

Almighty God, Whose most dear Son went not up to joy but first He suffered pain, and entered not into glory before He was crucified; Mercifully grant that we, walking in the way of the cross, may find it none other than the way of life and peace; through the same, Thy Son Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

COLLECTS FOR GOOD FRIDAY.

Almighty God, we beseech Thee graciously to behold This Thy family, for which Our Lord Jesus Christ was contented to be betrayed, and given up into the hands of wicked men and to suffer death upon the cross; Who now liveth and reigneth with Thee, and the Holy Ghost ever one God, world without end. Amen.

Almighty and everlasting God, by Whose Spirit the whole body of the Church is governed and sanctified: Receive our supplications and prayers, which we offer before Thee for all estates of men in Thy Holy Church, that every member of the same in his vocation and ministry, may truly and godly serve Thee; through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

O Merciful God, Who hast made all men, and hatest nothing that Thou hast made, nor desireth the death of a sinner, but rather that he should be converted and live; have mercy upon all Jews, Turks, Infidels and heretics; and take from them all ignorance, hardness of heart, and contempt of Thy Word; and so fetch them home, blessed Lord, to Thy flock, that they may be saved among the remnant of the true Israelites, and be made one fold under one Shephrd Jesus Christ Our Lord, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

COLLECT FOR EASTER EVEN.

Grant, O Lord, that as we are baptized into the death of Thy blessed Son, Our Saviour Jesus Christ, so by continually mortifying our corrupt affections we may be buried with Him; and that through the grave, and gate of death, we may pass to our joyful resurrection; for His merits, Who died and was buried, and rose again for us Thy Son Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

BALLAD OF THE BRAVE CAPTAIN.

Upon the hard highway
Where I did walk alone
I met a Brave Captain
Methought that I had known:
Wounded he was and weary,
Yet made he no moan.

"What is your quarrel, Captain,
And who hath done you wrong?
For they shall suffer in their pride
Who war against the Strong."
"They war against themselves," he said,
"And they have suffered long."

"Who are your foes, Captain,
For whosoe'er they be
Black wrath hath mingled with my blood
This piteous thing to see."
"Then you are of their fellowship,
And not of mine," said he.

"Where are your comrades, Captain,
Who plighted troth with you:
Of all that brave army
Here are left but few."
"They turned again homeward."
(He looked me through and through.)

"Captain, what are these thorns,
What is this cross you bear?"
"This is my standard, brother,
And this the crown I wear;
We storm the heights at Calvary . . .
Will you be with me there?"

Our Opportunity in the Holy Land.

The extraordinary opportunity which the Anglican Communion has in the Holy Land to exert a quiet but powerful influence through Christian education, is shown by the fact that with Palestine under British mandate, complete freedom exists for Christian schools. This situation, as Bishop Graham-Brown points out, "forms a striking contrast with the increasing tendency in surrounding countries to use education for nationalistic ends and to place limitations on other than government schools." In Turkey and Persia and Egypt mission education has been considerably hampered.

The principal secondary schools in the Holy Land, both for boys and girls, are Anglican. Some of them are forced to refuse pupils for lack of space. There is a demand, especially among Moslems, for education that is Christian in standard and quality.

"While the main function of our schools," the Bishop writes, "must be the building up of the Christian Church, a second function, that of witness to Jew and Moslem of the Christian way of life, is ours today in increasing degree, and must not be disregarded."

All of which adds to one's appreciation of the Good Friday Offering which helps to support the Church's work in the Holy Land.

THE TAPESTRY WEAVERS.

The following poem, by Dr. A. G. Chester, has as wonderful a history as the man who wrote it. It has been published in all of the modern languages, including Hindustan, Chinese and Japanese. It appeared first in the Century Magazine. Dr. Williamson of London (Lit. D., Oxford), has issued hundreds of thousands of copies of it in leaflets, having gone to press with it four times last year. The University of Tokyo gave it out for interpretation to four hundred students who were asked to send Dr. Chester their interpretations.

Let us take to our hearts a lesson—no lesson could braver be—
From the ways of the tapestry weavers on the other side of the sea.

Above their heads the pattern hangs, they study it with care,
And while their fingers deftly move, their eyes are fastened there.

They tell this curious thing besides of the patient, plodding weaver;
He works on the wrong side evermore,
but works for the right side ever.

It is only when the weaving stops, and the web is loosed and turned,
That he sees his real handiwork, that his marvelous skill is learned.

Ah, the sight of its delicate beauty, how it pays for all his cost;
None rarer, daintier work than his was ever done by the frost.

Then the master bringeth him golden hire,
and giveth him praise as well,
And how happy the heart of the weaver is, no tongue but his own can tell.

The years of man are the looms of God,
let down from the place of the sun,
Wherein we are weaving ever, till the mystic web is done.

Weaving blindly, but surely, each for himself his fate—
We may not see how the right side looks,
we can only weave and wait.

But, looking above for the pattern, no
weaver hath need to fear,
Only let him look into Heaven, the Perfect Pattern is there.

If he keeps the face of The Saviour forever and always in sight,
His toil may be sweeter than honey, his weaving is sure to be right.

And when the work is ended, and the web is turned and shown,
He shall hear the voice of The Master, it shall say unto him, "Well done!"

And the white winged angels of Heaven,
to bear him thence shall come down;
And God shall give him gold for hire—not coin, but a glowing crown.

A Prayer for Holy Week.

Blessed Lord, Who for our sakes was content to bear sorrow and want and death, grant unto us such a measure of Thy Spirit that we may follow Thee in all self-denial and tenderness of soul. Help us by Thy great love to succour the afflicted, to relieve the needy and destitute, to comfort the feeble-minded, to share the burdens of the heavy-laden, and ever to see Thee in all that are poor and desolate; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen. —Bishop Westcott, 1825.

HYMN.

"He was wounded for transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities."—Isaiah 53:5.

I have come to Thee my Saviour,
Jaded, weary, sick and worn;
Knowing Thou would'st not forsake me,
Feeling sanguine, unforlorn.

With my eyes fixed on Golgotha,
See Thee hanging on that tree,
With Thy pierced sides ableeding,
With the blood Thou shedd'st for me!

Still I come to Thee my Saviour,
Plodding, plodding wear'ly on;
Asking grace to ever serve Thee,
For that grace Thy cross has won.

When I leave this world of sorrows,
To await Thy just decree;
All my hope's on Thee Redeemer,
For 'twas built on Calvary.

For the Southern Churchman.

GOOD FRIDAY.

Rev. Upton H. Gibbs.

Humanity's Atonement.

On Good Friday, we thankfully commemorate the death of Our Lord, whereby He made atonement for the sins of all mankind. The idea of an atonement in order that sins may be forgiven, especially one of a vicarious nature, is sharply criticized by some, as unnecessary, unreasonable and unjust.

We who hold to this belief of a vicarious atonement, should consider whether we can give a reason for the faith that is in, and whether it can be justified.

Let us test it by Scripture and human experience. That the Scriptures are emphatic that "Christ died for our sins," and thereby effected an atonement for them cannot be denied. This atonement was predicted in and foreshadowed by solemn and sacred rites in the Old Testament and consummated in the New.

Its record runs like a scarlet cord throughout the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation. It is the heart of the early Christian liturgies and the inspiration of the first and all subsequent heralds of the Cross. Those who object to it, must account for this fact. Somehow it has appealed to the universal consciousness of mankind with a tremendous regenerating force.

Then, when it comes to human experience, we find it falls in line with it. For forgiveness is no arbitrary matter, but is governed by certain principles or law. The correlative to forgiveness is forgiveableness. The latter on the part of the offender, involves repentance, acknowledgments, conversion and atonement. Then, given these, forgiveness is the natural response, and at-one-ment follows on atonement.

So the mother withholds open forgiveness to her child until he says he is sorry and tries to make amends for his fault. And so on up to the gravest offenses before there can be pardon and reconciliation, confessions, restitution and amendment are requisite conditions. It is to be noticed, however, that the atonement is in proportion to the gravity of the offense, and that when restitution and atonement are beyond the ability of the offender to make, such can be done for him by those who by their relationship to him, can act for him, as a parent for a child and vice versa.

The vicarious atonement made by Jesus Christ for us men and our salvation, is in strict accordance with this law. Why it involved His Precious Death, and how it can be rightly accepted for and by the human race are other and profound questions, that we do not now consider.

Those of us who believe and trust in it, need not feel disturbed by criticism, and shaken in our faith. What else can take its place? It is the hope and assurance of our plea for forgiveness on earth, and the theme for the thanksgivings of the redeemed in heaven.

The Authority of Conscience.

We live completely according as we live in harmony with conscience. The authority of conscience is the supreme authority throughout life, transcending the authority of convention, of institutional religion and of reason. It is the Voice of God within the soul, the direct inspiration of the Holy Spirit, and, as such, many challenge the pronouncements of social morals, of church traditions and of rational thought. And it is always in conflict with inclination. The path of duty, so clearly indicated by conscience, is ever the path of difficulty, socially and personally, and, although it is not generally the path of glory, it is certainly the path of inner peace. Those who have contributed most towards the moral and spiritual progress of mankind are those who have uncompromisingly carried out their duties as revealed to them by conscience. Had Jeremiah, for example, gratified his inclinations, he would have declined the role of prophet and lived in pleasant obscurity. But conscience effectively prevented him from ignoring duty: "I said, I will not make mention of Him, nor speak any more in His Name. But His Word was in my heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing and could not stay." St. Paul also experienced this inner drive: "Necessity is laid upon me: woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel!" And how often did Jesus use the word "must": "I must preach the Gospel"; "I must be about my Father's business"; "I must work the works of Him that sent Me." Duty, then, is more than a personal code of ethics; it is the divine necessity laid upon the soul of man through conscience, and the peace and happiness of that soul are utterly dependent upon the manner in which duty is fulfilled. —Rev. R. A. Hunt, in Canadian Churchman.

The Precious Pearl.

A wholesale pearl merchant visits a famous pearl fishery, in search of a distinctive "find." His search is finally realized by discovering a pearl, pure, precious and perfect; nothing like it ever before had been seen by the eye of the expert. He resolves to have it, even though he must sell everything he has to obtain it; which he does and carries off the coveted prize. Now, as to the intepretation: By some the "pearl" is said to symbolize Christ, whom the sinner buys by selling all that he has. But as pearls are taken out of seas, which is a symbol of the Gentile nation, the type is not that of Christ, at all, but of the Church which He "loved and gave Himself for." What a superlative estimate Christ here as elsewhere places upon the Church! What a perfect picture we have in this parable of the Merchant Prince who set himself the task of transmuting the pearl into an unearthly magnificence and an immortal glory!—Methodist Protestant Recorder.

Oh, World, would you go forth today,
All nations, lands from rim to rim,
Go forth and follow in His Way:

Then would there be no One-man-wealth

No greed—from need snatched as by stealth;
Earth's misery would find release.

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter XV.

M. L. G.

"Good, Winnie, very good! You have a fine eye for color."

Winnie and Miss Sarah sat on camp-stools on the slope of a pasture about a quarter mile back of the house at Ivanhoe. A rocky ledge lent support for stools and materials. Miss Sarah had made outlines for each of the scenes before the, the brook a few feet below, with its thin line of aspens, the rising land across, and a distant flock of sheep on the hillside beyond.

"I love it!" Winnie said, her cheeks flushed with the cool spring air and the praise together. "It seems as if I just can't paint it in quick enough—you don't put in each sheep, do you, Miss Sarah?"

"No, it's your imagination that helps the eye to distinguish the sheep. Now, if you'll put in just what the eye sees, and get your effect of distance, the one who sees the picture will be able, with his imagination, to see the flock for himself."

"I don't know why I should want to use purple," Winnie said, after a busy silence; "I know it's really green, and a few gray rocks—and that color of water—but I keep wanting to put purple, or this violet—"

"Put it in! Put it in! Don't mistrust your eye, child."

Miss Sarah was still at work when Winnie looked up from her sketch.

"I think I'll stop now, Miss Sarah—the real trees are so soft and indistinct—and if I do more to mine they'll look too old, or stiffened someway."

"Let me see. Put it against the rock there, not too close. Well, child, you have caught it. I declare! Here, give me five minutes—" she stopped, going back to her own sketch.

"All right now, that's the best I can make of it. Put this alongside. Now we'll step back—cup your hands around your eyes, child. We're in a picture gallery. To the right, ladies and gentlemen, a landscape in oils by Miss Winifred Duncan, the rising young artist of The Rectory. To the left, the same scene by a doddering old lady, Miss Sarah Trent of Ivanhoe."

"Don't call yourself such a thing, Miss Sarah!"

"Well, child, I'm delighted you've eclipsed your teacher. And that you have. There's life and motion in your sketch—the shadows just right, and the water seems alive."

"But yours is smoother, Miss Sarah."

"And the worse for it. Well, let's gather up our traps and get back, Alice'll be wondering what's gone with us."

"Miss Sarah," Winnie said as they went back to the house, "you really made lots of my picture, too, you drew it for me. I only colored it."

"To tell the truth, Winnie, we have hold of this thing by the wrong end. You should have a course in drawing—proportion, scale, line, that sort of thing. Here you're taking a finishing course when you haven't had the elementary work! After dinner, we'll do a bit with just pencils, shall we?"

"Oh, yes, if it won't tire you."

"Well, I'll have my nap and you can play about as you like; then at four we'll be ready for the next lesson. You mustn't start back till after tea. I won't give up my girl until I have to!"

Winnie skipped along at Miss Sarah's side, wondering how she had ever been afraid of so delightful a person. How pleasant life was again! Claire growing better daily—soon to come home, and with a real hope of being strong and well some day; Kent recovering as well as could be hoped; Aunt Mollie so kind and so cheerful, turning out spring dresses for her—and one or two for Claire, who had worn only wrappers since babyhood. Philip well and happy and no more than usual full of mischief; David—but there Winnie's face clouded. Something was wrong with David. He was the most steady and least "fussy" person in the world; what could have happened to David to make him restless and cross?

"I wish I knew," thought Winnie, as she and Miss Sarah crossed the kitchen garden, with its rows of winter vegetables, "but the thing to do is not to let little things happen to bother him. Then Father'll come and make it right for David.

Dinner was a more stately meal than Winnie was used to at home; she had spent many days at Ivanhoe before, but always with some of the others of her family, and she felt a sense of relief when Miss Alice rose.

"We'll have coffee in the sitting-room, 'Gustus You won't have a tiny cup, Winnie? Then let's find a book, and you can have the sun-room to yourself. Have you read 'Waterbabies'? Here it is—poor little Tom, he was a chimney-sweep, you know."

Winnie spent a pleasant hour in the sun-room, which was really the glassed-in south end of the broad verandah. It was filled with great ferns that spilled of their long fronds in green water falls. There was a scent of fresh earth and growing plants. Fuchsias and geraniums pressed rosy blossoms to the windows; two bright parrakeets gossiped together in their cage.

"Here, climb on the couch here. Put plenty of pillows under your head—mustn't lie flat to read. I'll just throw this rug over you, honey, and open a window or two."

Winnie found Tom's sorrows interesting enough; but they presently began to mingle with the chatter of the parrakeets, the green cascades of fern, the slowly moving shaft of sunlight along the wall. When Miss Sarah came back she had had an hour of sound sleep.

"That's right! Just what you needed. It's too cool to go out for our lesson. We'll just sit here. Let me see—this cracked pitcher Alice potters about with in here, and a trowell. I'll place them, so, on this low table. That's enough for one lesson."

They worked until darkness overtook them. Winnie found it harder than painting, but just as absorbing, and she had the reward of feeling that she had made real progress.

"But you surely have the better drawing this time, Miss Sarah!" she said warmly.

"Yours looks smudgy, to be sure, but you've improved, that's the point!" Miss Sarah answered, much pleased with her pupil. "Now, every day, copy some simple object—a book, or two at different angles, a lamp with simple lines, a jar or crock. And save them all for me."

"I will—I'll have fun doing them!"

"I hope so. Ah, here's 'Gustus with supper. I had it brought in here, for Alice was out to Ladies' Aid, and went on to Miss Parmenter's."

Supper was good after the work and Winnie enjoyed sitting at the little wicker table, munching cinnamon toast and listening to Miss Sarah's talk of painting and artists.

"I fell back on china-painting, myself," she ended, "but I see something bigger ahead for you. Now bundle up, honey, for I promised to have you back by seven. There'll be other days of smudges for us."

"Oh, I do hope so, Miss Sarah!" Winnie answered, and the compact was sealed with a quick little kiss on Miss Sarah's hand, that spoke all the thanks Winnie could not express, for the happiest day she had known since Mother had gone.

MITE OR MIGHTY BOX?

Dorothea L. Bussingham.

Oh, Lenten Box! so weak, so small;
What good are you? Can you help at all?
You're really only a tiny mite,
Can you ease burdens, or make things right?

'Tis not my shape or width or height;
But what's in me; why even the tiny mite
When given in faith with a little prayer
Makes me mighty! Won't you do your share?

A Leaf Tells the Story of Its Life.

I was a small leaf. I had hundreds and millions of brothers and sisters; I had so many that I did not know them all. My mother was a great oak tree. I made my first appearance in March; a thin transparent veil of green. Every small vein seemed to push outward from my thin body. A tiny straw could have ruined me for life. I could not understand speech at first, but as I grew older, and became stronger, I began to understand mother's whispering language.

When I was very young she sang sweet, caressing melodies as the warm, spring wind blew past. I loved the wind; it made its warm-cool flight over the earth knowing or caring not where it next would travel because it promised all the same. I loved the sun; I loved to dance and play in the sunlight. I loved to hear my mother whisper and sing to us. She sang and whispered not only to us, but to all the world, and those who cared to listen heard. Later in the summer she became quieter; she told us little or nothing; she seemed to rest and enjoy the peacefulness of the forest. She did not sleep. The sun sent hot rays upon us and scorched our leaves. We turned from a soft green to a dark brownish green. Two birds made their nesting near to the place where I lived. Sometimes I helped to keep the hot rays of the sun from reaching the little birds.

My life was not all happiness. I had many worries and troubles. During the summer a great hailstorm came. For months I thought the wind would carry me from the tree. I fluttered wildly in the terrible storm. Then suddenly a great lump of hail tore through my body. This was my first scar. How I hated it! But after it healed up I was happy again although now I was afraid of the clouds.

Fall came slowly on. Across the great fields were farmers harvesting their crops. The earth was turning in its color to a soft brown. One cool night mother tree said: "Dear leaves, you're going to be separated from me. Jack Frost will be here tonight. He'll dab your coats up with colors of gold and red and brown paint. The earth will turn white, but this soon will melt and go away. Your coats will never turn back to green. The wind will grow cold; your stems will turn brown and weaken. The north wind will soon call you, and you must go and follow it. Do not fear or refuse, for if you stay with me you'll not be beautiful and will accomplish nothing."

I wondered what I could accomplish. I immediately made up my mind to go, but you may be sure I hated to leave my mother tree. The next morning I had the most beautiful coat. I thought I was the handsomest of all the leaves. Now I did not even hate that awful scar. I knew the time would soon come when I'd leave. I wondered what I should do when I would reach the earth. The beautiful birds were gone. I was glad because I knew they had gone to warmer regions.

The wind came. It was cold and blew from the North. Mother tree whispered as the wind blew through her branches, "Go, go, go!" I, after some time, went gaily flying into the frosty air. I went high above the trees, twirling about, and fluttering as I went. At last I dropped close at mother tree's side. Many other leaves dropped with me to the ground, and I knew that I had settled where I would probably rest for life.

The days began to get cold and bitter. Mother tree stood bare. For a while she still talked to us, and then, she went to sleep. After a long year of hard work why shouldn't she rest? I could not sleep until a great sheet of snow covered me.

Now I am a different thing. I'll live throughout the ages to come. My coat again has changed, until I am the color of earth. Every year I will watch my mother and listen to her until I am buried under other leaves under the depths of soil. But this makes me happier than all. I help to form the foundation that my great mother oak tree rests upon.—Martha Eubank, in Western Recorder.

The Little Girl With the Crooked Back.

Inez whimpered when she came in sight of the new schoolhouse, and clasped her mother's fingers tightly. She dreaded facing a room of strange children. The boys and girls in the other school had made fun of her crooked back. Of course these boys and girls would do the same. Inez cried softly to herself.

But no one stared at her as she passed through the playground, and the teacher in the second-grade room was sweet and kind.

A little girl with heavy brown curls hung up her hat for her. Another girl showed her where the bubbler was, and how to turn the knob so as to get a good drink of water.

At recess Inez had usually sat alone in her seat, but today Rose and Ethel —she had heard the teacher call their names—helped her down the steps and chose her to be the first one to throw the bean bags. At noon Ethel held her coat for her, while Phylis, a little red-headed girl, tied her shoestring, which had become loosened.

And instead of walking home alone, hippity-hop, hippity-hop, five or six girls came along with her, and they walked slowly, so that Inez did not get out of breath once.

"Oh, mother, I love school!" shouted the little girl with the crooked back.

"I thought you didn't like to go to school, dear?" asked Aunt Anne.

The little girl with the crooked back looked up from a large piece of bread and butter.

"Every girl in the school was kind to me," she smiled, "and Ethel and Rose say they are going to call for me every morning. Oh, yes; I love school."

And the happy little girl with the crooked back took another bite of the bread and butter.—Selected.

Fiery Eyes.

Lewis Marshall was walking along from school with the other children. All at once he stopped. Ahead of the children was a big black creature. Lewis scrambled over the wall and started toward home across lots. The other children began to shout and laugh.

"Scared cat! Scared cat!" they called after him.

But Lewis did not stop. He was ashamed of himself, but he kept on running. A long time before when Lewis had lived in town he had been bitten by a cross dog. Now, every time he saw a dog he ran. He did not blame the other children for laughing at him. He knew that he was the only one of his playmates who was afraid of Farmer Smith's big Newfoundland dog, Rover.

"Rover won't hurt you, Lewis," Rosy Smith had told him over and over. "He just comes out in the road and waits for the children because he likes to be petted, and because they save cookies for him."

And now as he scampered across lots, Lewis could hear the funny little sharp barks Rover always made when the children coaxed him to "speak" for the cookies and crusts of bread they brought him in their lunch boxes. Rover had no idea that Lewis was afraid of him. He would open his great red mouth and bark as joyful a welcome to Lewis as to any of the other children.

Another thing Lewis was afraid of was the dark. Sometimes it worried his father and mother to see how timid he was. He would not go out into the dark kitchen after a drink of water when the family had gone to bed, and he disliked to go down in the cellar after vegetables for his mother because the corners of the big cellar were always dark and shadowy. Every evening he hurried into the house just as soon as it was twilight.

Tonight he hurried in as usual and left the wood box only half filled because he did not want to go out again. His mother was putting supper on the table. In a few moments she lighted the big lamp, and the family sat down to supper. Lewis had just finished when there came a queer, muffled squawk from the barnyard. Some of the hens had a bad habit of going to roost in the wagon shed and in a big tree near the shed. Every night Lewis' father had to go and put them in the henhouse.

"O dear, something is after my chickens!" said Mrs. Marshall. "Do go and see what it is, Lewis. Maybe it's a stray dog or cat."

Lewis' heart began to pound. He did not want to say he was afraid, but he was. "O mother, I—I don't want to go out tonight," he faltered.

Mr. Marshall looked at him sternly. "Lewis, it is time you were getting over being such a baby," he said firmly. "Some time something really bad might happen, and you would be needed. I don't want you to prove a coward in a time of emergency. You must learn to conquer your fear of the dark and of other foolish things now. Go and drive away whatever is anoying the chickens."

Lewis did not dare to disobey. He knew his father was right. Opening the door he went swiftly across the yard. He could see the outlines of the barn and the wagon shed and the big tree. Perched high up on one of the limbs of the tree was a little huddle of white forms. Lewis knew that this little white bunch must be several of his mother's Leghorn chickens. But he could see nothing else. No stray dog or cat was in sight anywhere. He was just about to turn around and go back to the house when his heart almost seemed to stop beating. On the barnyard gate was a big, dark form. As he stared at it it turned its head. A pair of great round, fiery eyes looked at him. With a wild yell of terror, Lewis whirled and rushed back toward the house.

"O, father, father, come quick!" he shouted. "There's something with great, dreadful eyes on the barnyard gate. I think it must be a mountain lion."

"Nonsense!" exclaimed Mr. Marshall as he hurried out. "There hasn't been a mountain lion around here in years. Where is it?"

'There," quavered Lewis, pointing. "See its terrible eyes?"

Mr. Marshall began to laugh. "Come here, Lewis," he said. "Come and take a closer look at your mountain lion."

As he spoke the big form rose. As silently as a snowflake a great, brown bird drifted over Lewis' head and disappeared in the direction of the woods.

"Why, it's an owl!" exclaimed Lewis in amazement. "A great brown owl!"

"He probably flew into the tree near the chickens and disturbed them," said Mr. Marshall. "He was only out house hunting a little early. He is a good friend, and we need him to destroy the field mice. There's a good deal of difference between a mountain lion and an owl, isn't there, Lewis?"

Lewis swallowed hard. "I'm sorry I made such a racket," he said honestly. "The next time I'm frightened I guess I'll stop and see what I'm running from. And tomorrow I'm going to ask mother for an extra cookie for Farmer Smith's big black dog. Rover always comes out to meet us when we're coming home from school, and the children save things for him."

The next morning Lewis' mother gave him two cookies instead of one. "A dog as big as Rover can eat two cookies easily," she told Lewis.

And Rover proved that she was right. He gave two gulps, and the cookies were gone. Then he licked Lewis' cheek with his big tongue.

"Rover's saying, 'Thank you'," laughed Rosy Smith gayly. "I think he's glad that you aren't afraid of him any more."

And from the way Rover wagged his tail Lewis thought so too.—The Christian Advocate.

THE DAYS.

Maude F. Mumma.

The days tumble over themselves to show
The months and the years just where to go,
They have no thought of time nor space,
And tarry not in any place.

But run along and beck and call,
First to summer, then to fall;
Then at winter's bold behest,
Springtime asks the days to rest.

"No such thing," they quickly say,
And lightly dance along their way;
But where they're going. I do not know,
The days don't either—isn't it so?

DEATHS

HOLMAN: MRS. ANNA GALT HOLMAN, eighty-five, widow of the late William H. Holman, died March 10, 1935. She was one of the oldest members of Grace Church, Bremo Bluff, Va., and was actively interested in the erection of both the old and new Church buildings there.

MRS. MARTHA VIRGINIA BELL.

In Waynesboro, Virginia, on February third, after a long period of ill health, the beautiful spirit of MARTHA VIRGINIA BELL went home to its Maker.

For months her brave, patient spirit struggled with pain and suffering. No murmur escaped her—only love and consideration for those who ministered to her. Then came her happy release and rest.

Through a long life of loving kindness to others she endeared to herself a large circle of devoted relatives and friends. Earth is sadder for her going, but Heaven has gained a bright and beautiful spirit.

The widow of Major H. M. Bell of Staunton, she rests by his side in Thornrose Cemetery, that city.

Peace to her soul.

REV. FREDERICK H. STEENSTRA.

THE REV. FREDERICK HENRY STEENSTRA, rector of St. Mark's Church, of Mauch Chunk, Pa., passed quietly and peacefully into life eternal on Tuesday, April 2, at 4:30 P. M. at the entrance to the chantry of the church.

An honored and beloved citizen has left the community that sorely needed him. His connection with Mauch Chunk has been for twenty-five years—first as a visitor and for the past eight years as a resident.

Mr. Steenstra was born at Cambridge, Mass., the son of Peter Henry Steenstra and Susan Brown Steenstra.

He was graduated from Harvard University in 1900 with the degree of A. B. and in 1904 with the degree of A. M.

In 1905 he received the degree of Bachelor of Divinty from Episcopal Theological School.

Surviving are his widow, Elsie V. Steenstra, two sons, Edward F. Steenstra, Westbrook, Conn.; and Walter H. Steenstra, of Austin, Texas, two sisters, Misses Mary and Isabel Steenstra, of Cambridge, Mass., now visiting in California.

Funeral services were held in the church Friday morning, April 5 at 11:00 o'clock.

MRS. MARY BYRD DIMMOCK.

Entered into Life Eternal, on March 20th, in her eighty-eighth year, MARY BYRD (SELDEN) DIMMOCK, widow of the late William Courtney Dimmock. She was the daughter of the late Robert Colgate Selden and Courtnay Warner (Brooke) Seldon. Burial was in Greenmount Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland, beside her husband. A charming personality, unselfish almost to a fault, she was controlled entirely by her Christian Faith. A devoted mother, an earnest (Churchwoman), Christian with her whole life woven around her home and her Church, she was an inspiration and a blessing to all who knew her.

Father, in Thy gracious keeping,
Leave we now Thy servant sleeping.

AN APPRECIATION OF

The Ven. James Solomon Russell, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L.

by

Thomas J. Powers, Jr., Peekskill, N. Y., Member of the Board of Trustees of St. Paul Normal and Industrial School, Lawrenceville, Va.

A great and good man has entered Paradise. JAMES SOLOMON RUSSELL was born in Mecklenburg County, Virginia, December 20, 1857. He was, therefore, in his seventy-eighth year.

Mr. Russell was the first student and graduate of the Bishop Payne Divinity School at Petersbug, Va. In fact, as I understand it, the school was started to educate him for the ministry of the Episcopal Church.

After young Russell was graduated, completed his deaconate and was priested, he settled at Lawrenceville, Va., fifty-three years ago last month. Being energetic and progressive and not satisfied as some of the young clergy are today with doing ordinary missionary work, this man wanted to do more. So in a small way he started a school for the children of his race. His only assets were faith in God, energy and nerve. I use nerve in its best sense.

Those who have known St. Paul's School from its infancy know how well its first principal accomplished his intentions. Nearly a half century ago there was only one small building. Today there are a large brick chapel, the gift of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Long Island; substantial dormitories; a hospital; administration buildings; school buildings and residences for those of the faculty who are married. There is also a farm of 1,500 acres which produces much of the necessary food for the boarding students.

It was a privilege and an honor for the writer of this article to be elected a member of the Board of Trustees of the school in 1924.

To know Dr. Russell was to love him. He was a man of personal magnetism, quiet disposition and of keen intellect. He loved the school which he started to such an extent that when he twice had an opportunity of being a bishop of the Church of God, he declined, preferring to remain for life with the work he had commenced many years before, with nothing but faith as an asset.

The Virginia Theological Seminary conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Divinity. He was the only one of his race who received a degree from this institution. LL. D. and D. C. L. came to him from the College of Liberia.

Seven years ago the Harmon Foundation awarded him the Harmon Medal for achievement and leadership of his race.

The County of his birth (Mecklenburg) and that of his adoption (Brunswick), together with the entire Commonwealth of Virginia, owe to this Godly man, born of slave parents, a debt of gratitude for the education and advancement of many thousands of the Negro race.

It was not my privilege to have known Mrs. Russell, as she departed from this life in early 1920, but I do know that she was a real helpmate for her husband.

As honorable old age approached, Dr. Russell was made, in 1929, principal emeritus by the Board of Trustees. His eldest son, the Reverend J. Alvin Russell, a worthy son of a worthy father, was made principal.

Few men, regardless of race, have achieved so much as this one. For nearly five decades he watched over this school and has seen it as an infant grow into a youth and then achieve manhood.

Well done, thou good and faithful servant. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.

Luncheon Graced by Three Bishops.

Three Bishops graced the luncheon on Thursday, April 4, in Detroit, at which the host was the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D. The guests of honor were Bishop George Craig Stewart of Chicago, and Hayward S. Ablewhite of Marquette, and thirty of the clergy of the diocese attended. Bishop Stewart was in Detroit as the noon-day speaker for the Detroit Council of Churches, and Bishop Ablewhite had been spending a week or two in assisting Bishop Page in conducting his numerous Lenten Confirmations.

Round Table Fellowship: Six Other Denominations Represented.

The annual Lenten Round Table Fellowship, sponsored by the Department of Religious Education of the Diocese of Michigan, held in Detroit, closed on Monday evening, April 8, after a successful season. More than 200 men and women attended, including not only Episcopalians, but representatives of six other Christian denominations. The weekly program was composed of a brief chapel service followed by dinner, an after-dinner address, and two class periods in each of which were offered two courses. The leaders included clergy of the diocese, clergy of other denominations, Bishops, College professors and religious education experts.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop

Musical Rectors Are Fine.

We often hear of parsons exchanging pulpits, but we hear more rarely of choirs cooperating in the way that some are doing in this diocese. The Rev. Warren A. Seager, rector of Emmanuel Church, Covington, directs his own choir and also takes a prominent part in various concerts, etc., in Covington.

Especially interesting at present is the announcement that the choir of Emmanuel Church, Covington, will join with that of St. John's, Roanoke, of which Mr. Donald McKibben is organist and director, in the rendition of Gounod's "Redemption" at St. John's on Palm Sunday night, and on Good Friday night the two choirs will render the same oratorio at Covington.

Mr. McKibben, with his boys' choir from St. John's, has recently taken the choir to sing at a CCC Camp about thirty miles from Roanoke, and at Christ Church in Blacksburg.

Personal Notes

Bishop Strider of West Virginia was the Lenten preacher at the Chapel of the Good Shepherd at the General Theological Seminary, New York, last week.

The Rev. Frederick W. Leech, for the past seventeen months assistant to the vicar at the Chapel, 415 East Thirteenth Street, New York, has resigned to take effect April 7. Mr. Leech is leaving to take new work as assistant to the rector of St. Andrew's Church, Ann Arbor, Michigan. Mr. Leech is a native of Philadelphia and a graduate of the Philadelphia Divinity School.

Clerical Changes.

The Rev. Lee W. Heaton, who for the past few years has been rector of two mission churches in St. Louis, Mt. Calvary and Holy Innocents, has accepted a call to St. Stephen's Church, Grand Island, Nebraska, and has left with his family for their new home.

The Rev. Henry J. Simpson was restored to the ministry on March 30; he had been deposed in 1922 at his own request. Mr. Simpson is serving in the Diocese of Michigan as missionary-in-charge of St. Andrew's, Flint, and St. John's, Otter Lake, and as rector of Grace Church, Lapeer. He is living in Flint.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

"If we worry we do not trust; if we trust we do not worry."

A man's troubles begin when he is free to do as he likes.—Huxley.

God who is unintelligible when thought of in a room or a library, will become known when one loves people. —Kagawa.

"Of all that shouting multitude
I feel that I am one;
And in that din of voices rude
I recognize my own."

Don't think that we're put here to overcome the world; but we are to be of good cheer, because He has overcome it.—Bishop Collins.

In the shadow of the Cross there is no such thing as defeat; what seems so is only cowardice.—Sherer.

In face of the many needs of a sick and weary world, it is not for the Church to mark time.—Bishop Schofield.

Such only do we know and see;
Starlight and evening mystery,
Sunlight on peaks and dust-red plain,
Thunder, and the quick breath of rain,
Stirring of fields and all the love things
That season after season brings;
Young dawn and quiet night
And the earth's might.
But all our wisdom and our wisdom's plan
End in the lonely figure of a Man.
—Maxwell S. Burt.

The mind, which is immortal, makes itself
Requital for its good and evil thoughts.
—Byron.

Happiness is the flower of duty.—Phillips Brooks.

"The first stage of morality is," said Canon Streeter, "not to reform the world, but to do one's duty."

The best work is generally done without any thought of recognition or applause.—Bishop Johnson.

Not in soft speech is told the earthly story,
Love of all loves! that showed Thee for an hour;
Shame was Thy kingdom, and reproach Thy glory,
Death Thine eternity, the Cross Thy power.
Yea, He arose, yet first He had descended,
Plunged like a man into the deep of birth;
Have not we also with our glory blended
Night and dishonour and a weight of earth?

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

EASTER SUNDAY.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Fair Play to the Student Christian Movement.

Mr. Editor:

By some unfortunate mistake there appears in the frontispiece of the April "Spirit of Missions," a mis-statement sufficiently serious to call to general attention.

Under the photograph of the Archbishop of York it is stated that he "will visit the United States next December upon the invitation of the Presiding Bishop. While in America he will also visit some university centres."

In the early summer of 1934, one of the officers of the Student Christian Movement, the Rev. Dr. Van Dusen of the Union Theological Seminary, New York, waited upon the Archbishop and invited him to attend and to address their quadrennial meeting, to be held in December, 1935, at Toronto, and also to visit several universities in Canada and in the United States. After His Grace accepted this invitation, the officers of the S. C. M. notified the authorities at "281", intimating that if it were desired he would be available for Sunday preaching engagements. This was done chiefly as an act of courtesy to his fellow-Churchmen. A secondary motive was that such engagements might help defray the expenses of his trip. Naturally, our national office jumped at this chance and immediately began scheduling appointments—so many more of them, in fact, that the S. C. M. people expected as to jeopardize their plans seriously.

The inference drawn from the caption under the Archbishop's photograph is that the original invitation for a visit to this country came from the Presiding Bishop, and that subsequently His Grace was, as it were, loaned to a few universities. This is so obviously wide of the facts, and so unfair to the Student Christian Movement officers, to whose courtesy we shall owe any engagements he may fill in our pulpits, as to call for correction.

Archdeacon Russell.

Mr. Editor:

Among the thousands who have been saddened by the news of the death of Archdeacon Russell, I count myself as one. And yet, why should we be saddened? This noble servant of God has had a new introduction to his Maker, by reason of what we call "death." Indeed, he is now new-born. May light and love shine upon his way.

Of two eminent representatives of the Negro race whom I have personally known, who were in my opinion the very greatest of the Negroes I have had the honor to call my friends, I believe Archdeacon Russell was the greater. I have often thought of the opportunity which came to him some years back to become the very first Negro Bishop in the Episcopal Church in this land—no mean honor, assuredly. And yet he declined, in order further to develop St. Paul's School for the youth of his race.

Combined with his sparkling and brilliant mind, and his deep and never-to-be-questioned sincerity of consecration, was his keen, clean humor. Yes, the suave Archdeacon had a nice sense of humor. How well do I recall a display of it at a diocesan convention in Southern Virginia. It was at a great missionary service, held in a conservative old Virginia church—which, by the way, was filled to capacity. We had just listened to one of the most tedious addresses this writer has ever heard, one hour long, and very slow—by a layman, who afterwards told the writer that it was the first address he had made since leaving college (a good many years previous). Then Archdeacon Russell mounted the pulpit. His first words were the old story of Zacchaeus and the young theologue. But it was the manner in which he told it and the "point" which the situation gave it which won us all and which brought applause in that conservative atmosphere. He said that the young theologue was handed a paper, as he entered the pulpit for a "trial" sermon, on which, so he was informed, was the text from which he was to preach an extempore sermon. The one word on the paper was, Zacchaeus. "Well," said he, "Zacchaeus was a short man—and so am I. Zacchaeus found himself 'up a tree'—and so do I. Zacchaeus made haste and came down—and so shall I." It was so spontaneous and so apropos, for it was then ten o'clock at night, in a small town—that it aroused every listener and gained for the speaker close attention, which needless to say, he held to the end of his graphic message. And now this radiant soul has gone up higher to be with the Master whom he served so heroically—and with all the saints who have gone on before. May God raise up others like him.

Bishop Whittle's Men.

April 4, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

The passing of Archdeacon James Solomon Rusell into life eternal recalls the great contribution the late Bishop Whittle made in Church extension among the colored race of this country.

Bishop Whittle was the cause of the first colored clergyman coming to Virginia. While rector of a church in Louisville, Ky., he united in holy wedlock the Rev. Joseph S. Atwell and Miss Cordelia Jennings. Miss Jennings was a native of Lunenburg County, Virginia, but was educated in Philadelphia, and had gone to Louisville to teach in the Mission School of Rev. Mr. Atwell. Shortly afterwards Dr. Whittle was consecrated Assistant Bishop of Virginia. Soon thereafter he influenced Rev. Mr. Atwell to come to Virginia and assume the charge of St. Stephen's Church, Petersburg, lately organized.

Bishop Whittle ordained both deacon and priest six colored men. His was the first ordination, to the diaconate, a colored man, the Rev. J. H. M. Pollard, at the Virginia Seminary in June, 1878. Mr. Pollard had been teaching in northern Virginia, and was privately prepared for the ministry by the Rev. Dr. William M. Dame, at that time rector of Christ Church, Alexandria. Mr. Pollard, upon leaving Virginia, became rector of St. Mark's Church, Charleston, S. C. Later, he became Archdeacon of the Colored Work in North Carolina.

The Rev. Thomas W. Cain, who wrought in Virginia, and in Texas, was the second man ordained by Bishop Whittle. The Rev. Mr. Cain, in two General Conventions, was a deputy from the Diocese of Texas. The late Archdeacon Russell was the third man thus ordained. His contribution is too well and universally known for repetition here. The writer of this article was the fourth person ordained by Bishop Whittle to the priesthood. The Rev Wm. P. Burke, of Alexandria, Va., was the fifth. The last man thus ordained by Bishop Whittle, both deacon and priest, was the Rev. Dr. John Wesley Johnson. Dr. Johnson wrought in Virginia as rector of St. Philip's Church, Richmond, and also as a professor in the Bishop Payne Divinity School, Petersburg, before his removal to New York, where he died. The writer is the last one of the six men ordained by Bishop Whittle, surviving.

Archdeacon Russell was a great and good man. When I was a youth, and he a young man, he came to Petersburg to study for the ministry and boarded at my father's house. I remember distinctly that he had a little prayer book, with hymns, given him by the late Mrs. Pattie Buford. It was my privilege, as well as pleasure, to make many explanations as to its use; and I stood by, the night of his Confirmation, and witnessed the laying on of hands by Bishop Whittle, and, ever since we have remained the dearest of friends.

Service League Programs.

April 10, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

I am writing in commendation of the Fellowship Service League Program, by the Rev. R. F. Blackford, which appeared in your issue for April 6. The idea is a good one, and should, I believe, be more widely used in teaching the history of our Church to both young and old. I am especially interested, because I have recently been doing the same sort of thing, in more extended fashion, for the Episcopal Church Series of Sunday School Lessons, published by George W. Jacobs, Company. The series will be published in June.

While I approve, thoroughly, of the thing Mr. Blackford has done, and like the way in which he has done it, I must enter my protest about one thing. A reading of Irenaeus will show that not by any stretch of the imagination could he have seen John the Beloved Disciple. I know that in a brief Program such as Mr. Blackford has given us some foreshortening is allowable, but not that much. This sort of thing loses its value when we become careless in our presentation of fact.

Easter.

The choirs will sing. Probably too many will sing music that is a bit "screechy" and even badly rendered. But the flowers and the efforts will again register man's great thanksgiving that Christ is Risen and that this life is only the beginning of an Eternal Life.

Possibly there is no subject as much neglected in our Church's teaching today as the whole subject of Immortality. It almost seems sad in a day when there is really more reason to believe in Immortality than ever before, we should have more people than ever before who have weak and hazy ideas on the whole subject. In many circles there is a hesitancy to even bring the subject up, for faith is weak and weak faith does not like to discuss or try to grow.

Certainly in the physical sciences we have had tremendous advances in what could be called spiritual ways. We no longer believe in the perishibility of matter, for we know that matter exists as long as the world exists. Hence to deny Immortality is to say that everything in this world except the most important thing of Human Personality will live forever!

To the Christian there is always the assurance of Easter. To him it is not just a day, but rather a Day that lives in itself. For no matter how feeble his faith may be, he has experienced in some small way the Immortality of Our Lord Jesus Christ. He has experienced a new birth of conscience or he has, better still, experienced a new inspiration for life and living. If any of us have played fair with our religious lives, Christ can never be just a good man who lived many years ago, but will appear more and more as the Living Christ Who yet lives and inspires.

Certainly we are glad that Easter comes in the Spring of the year. Nature herself seems intent upon teaching us the Power of His Resurrection. The drab brown of Winter gives place to the Green of new beauty and new life. The vitality of new and resurrected inspirations makes the heart glad. We don't wonder that Spring has ever been an especial favorite of poets, for poetry is the only method that can be used to explain our feelings at this time of year.

And so, no matter how badly we express it, we still know that men long for the Power of His Resurrection and are glad when Easter proclaims Him.

A Changing World and Changing Leadership.

To men used to older ways of doing things, new methods and new means seem at times appallingly strange and even destructive. In the nation as well as in the Church this is true. Protests are frequently heard from all sources more or less saying, "What are the younger leaders trying to do?"

Possibly there is a confusion of ideas. As one person has put it, the same old underlying principles are still needed, but they are needed in much the same way in which we need an overcoat for winter use. We still need the overcoat, but hardly the same one that we had twenty years ago—for that one is outworn.

It is doubtful if ever again government can be carried on entirely by the legislative bodies alone. More and more, no matter what political party is in control, commissions will have to be formed and surveys taken, and the real governments in states today are no longer in the capitols—which have almost become museums in the older states—but the real government is found in office buildings where are located departments of health, public welfare, etc.

Just as truly is this trend to be found in the Church. The Forward Movement has recognized that the old individualism, rugged as it might have been, has lacked real leadership for the present world. The best of pastoral care must be given as much as ever, but it must be given with an eye on the present ways in which people live. Suburban developments, quick transportation and new types of recreation have made a changed world whether we like it or not. Those who cry that we should go back to something of old are right in principle, but often so very wrong in application of principle.

Consequently before any Forward Movement can be undertaken in the greatest and best way, we will need a lot of deep thinking and inquiry about where we are and whether our present methods are right or wrong. It is probably in the hope that we might have proper information that clergy especially, and we hope also laity, will be called together to study technique in the various methods of pastoral care and church management. Honest inquiry into methods of spiritual living will also be surveyed, and there is no need to condemn the new leadership, for surely the old has not kept pace and the very fact that we need a Forward Movement at all shows that we need new leadership.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

The Evangel of Hope.

The Record, March 22, 1935.

Without being unduly critical of modern religious literature, we are compelled to note one curious and significant fact in relation to the Person of our Lord Jesus Christ. We refer to the strange way in which the title of Saviour is dropped out of current theological speech. We are urged to accept Him as our Example; we are counselled to trust Him as our Teacher; indeed, we are asked in these days to do almost everything save accept Him as our Saviour. In many quarters the Gospel of Service has taken the place of the Gospel of Salvation, and the old controversy between salvation by works or salvation by grace is taking unto itself a new and somewhat subtle form. Now this calls for very careful consideration, in view of the fact that if men and women are to think about Jesus Christ to any purpose at all, they are bound sooner or later to give Him some kind of a title. So far as we can judge, the world is prepared to give Jesus, almost any kind of name save that Name which is above every name—"that in the Name of Jesus every knee should bow, and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father."

* * * *

What we have to say in all such cases is that we proclaim Jesus, not as Teacher, Example, Leader or Philanthropist; but as Saviour. The Evangel we have to declare announces that He can deliver us from every kind of fear. Perfect love casteth out fear, and when Jesus completes His perfect work in the life of a man, He casts out every form of fear, just as the coming of the sunshine casts out every form of darkness. Any man who has been delivered from the tyranny of fear cannot help rejoicing in the salvation that Christ has brought.

C. H. Spurgeon was once entertained in a Christian home, where in his bedroom the text was hanging: "Such time as I am afraid, I will trust in the Lord." At the breakfast table the following morning, the great preacher commented on the text hanging in his bedroom, and said, with a merry twinkle in his eye, "I will give you a better text than that—'I will trust and not be afraid'." But only Jesus, the Saviour, can make it possible for men to talk like that, and for this reason when we fail to declare the Evangel of Salvation, we fail to give men the one message for which their souls are longing.

II.

But Jesus does more than this. He saves men from despair. It is quite easy for those who are young and happy, or who are in the midst of what the poet calls the halcyon days of life to say emphatically "there is surely little despair in the world." But if they say that, they cannot be very exact students of the daily papers. An eminent preacher confessed the other day that one feature of his ministry which caused him endless heart-searching, was that within ten years he had buried five suicides. He felt that if he had been a more faithful preacher of the Gospel, those tragedies might have been averted. It is natural that any earnest servant of Christ should feel like that, but, at the same time, we cannot get away from the stubborn fact that there is far too much depair in the hearts of men and women in these modern days.

This in itself would be enough to show how urgently necessary is Christ's great salvation. We know how it was in the first century. One historian has pointed out that the outstanding characteristic of first-century believers was their abounding happiness; and, certainly, that would appear to be true. The early Christians were gay and almost hilarious. In the presence of the most difficult situations they would sing a hymn of praise to Jesus. If one thing is more certain than another, it is that He saved them completely from everything approaching despair.

And that is where we see the Saviourhood of Jesus Christ. He saves us from despair, and He tells us that despair is abnormal. The whole of nature is hopeful in the Springtime as it contemplates renewal and resurrection; and when Jesus comes into a human life, and is accepted as Saviour and crowned King, our hearts and souls are quickened with hope and love that casteth out fear.

Taboos.

Canadian Churchman, April 4, 1935.

The Nineteenth Century in their March issue gave the following list of abusive terms which may not be used in the House of Commons, London:—

Dodge, jockeying, windbag, hooligan, blackguard, traitor, slanderer, hynocrite, cowardly, offensive, scurrilous, dishonest, vicious and vulgar, insulting, shabbily, a dirty trick, criminal, disgraceful, wicked, corrupt, impudence and impertinence. This long list of taboos must certainly cramp the style of members who get really angry.

It must, however, be understood that a member of Parliament can abuse ladies and gentlemen who are not members of Parliament as heartily as he chooses. For example, years ago, John Burns, attacking Joseph Chamberlain, described the newspapers which supported the South African war as "owned by blackguards, edited by ruffians, and read by fools." The Speaker made no protest; but when Burns went on to say that Chamberlain's speech on the war was "couched in the language of the pot-house and in the spirit of the prize-ring," he was promptly called to order.

Just recently the Speaker in the Ontario House called the Premier to task for using the word "brazen." Mr. Hepburn referred the decision to the members of the House, who supported him in its use.

Bulletin of the Mayo Clinic.

Southern Christian Advocate, February 14, 1935.

"As doctors we must begin to think of promoting the cause of temperance. How often do we hear when we are speaking of a certain man, 'A very bright man, but he drinks.' Of my classmates in college, so far as I know, none of those who drank steadily is now living, and of those who were addicts to even a very mild degree, from the time the addiction became manifest, none progressed or maintained his position. One of the greatest surgeons in the world, talking to me, said he had never known a surgeon of the first rank who was in the habit of using alcoholic drink."—Dr. W. J. Mayo.

Temperance pays, even from a standpoint of enlightened self-interest. In the race of life, liquor can outrun the strongest and swiftest. It is a chain that effectively binds the most brilliant and promising.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

The Victory of Faith

The Resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ was the greatest victory that has ever been won in the history of mankind, because it overcame death which had hitherto been regarded as man's invincible enemy from whom there was no escape. It seemed, on Good Friday, as if He who had come to save mankind was powerless to accomplish the mighty task which He had undertaken to carry out. Even His nearest and dearest friends thought that His Cause was lost as they saw Him die, like any other man, the death of the Cross. But He, by His resurrection from the dead, completely reversed the decision which His enemies and friends alike had come to, only two days before. As St. Paul wrote, years later, He was "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." Rom. 1:4. As the great champion of mankind, He proved that He had all sufficient power to conquer and overcome every evil force that might stand in the way of man's redemption.

The Victory Ours Through Him.

He won the victory, not for Himself but for us, and He has admitted us, who believe in Him, to a share in it, that we too may enter into and share the glory which was His from all Eternity. St. John, in his first Epistle (5:4-5), said, "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" The fact that we believe Jesus Christ to be the Son of God gives assurance to our faith, because if He were not the Son of God then no matter how much faith we might have in Him as a man, such faith could not possibly enable us to overcome the world. St. Paul, like St. John, believed that Jesus Christ was the Son of God and that faith enabled him to say with confidence, "We are more than conquerors through Him that loved us."

A Convincing Demonstration.

There could not possibly be a more convincing demonstration of the truth of St. Paul's words than the fact that the early Christians, entirely without the aid of material weapons, conquered the Roman Empire because they were strong in faith, believing that what Christ had promised He was able also to perform. Napoleon was reported to have said, "God is on the side of the biggest batallions," or words to that effect. But this was certainly not the case when Rome brought her legions into array against Christianity and used every device then known to destroy it, but in vain. Faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God was proved to be the supreme power then, and it can be proved to be the supreme power now, if His followers will only manifest the same faith in Him now as they did then. But we must use the same weapons that they did, for St. Paul says:—"The weapons of our warfare are not carnal but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong-holds; casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." 2 Cor. 10:4-5.

What Do We Know About These Spiritual Weapons?

These words clearly reveal to us how little we really understand the secret of the power which possessed those early Christians and enabled them to remove mountains of difficulty, otherwise impassable. Have we so completely lost touch with the spiritual world that we do not even know what St. Paul is talking about? We have come to rely so completely upon intellectual weapons that we fail to realize that they are, after all, a very insufficient substitute for the spiritual weapons he is referring to here. What do we know from actual experience about the pulling down of strong-holds and casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalteth itself against God and which can bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ? Was St. Paul speaking in an unknown tongue here? Or is it that we are ignorant of the very first principles of Christian warfare? The power which could do such tremendous things referred to by St. Paul in this passage, is said by him to have been the power of God and not that of man, though men were used by Him as the instruments of His power.

Is the Church in Her Second Childhood.

Perhaps the following words from the Epistle to the Hebrews are appropriate to our present situation:—"For when for the time, ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again, which be the first principles of the oracles of God, and are become such as have need of milk and not of strong meat." Has the Church of Christ gotten into her second childhood and therefore cannot produce men capable of wielding the titanic weapons which alone are suitable for the spiritual warfare in which we are supposed to be engaged? "The whole armour of God," was considered essential to victory at the beginning, and "the whole armour of God" is essential now, if we are "to stand in the evil day and having done all to stand." There is no lack of words spoken and written about Christianity, both for and against it. In fact, the amount is so great as to rival the great dust storms which are now raging in the South and Middle West. But its vast extent is confusing to the mind, and with its numberless side issues, it hides and obscures the main issue, that which really matters, namely, "WHO IS HE THAT OVERCOMETH THE WORLD BUT HE THAT BELIEVETH THAT JESUS CHRIST IS THE SON OF GOD?"

EASTER.

A Great Hope came to light
Out of the darkness of the night
And from a great Despair
There came a vision bright and fair.

Life used to be shut in
By walls of darkness, Death and Sin;
Man's feeble strength had failed
To break his doom, and naught availed.

But now Life conquers Death
And man e'en with his parting breath
May shout of victory
And claim that death will set him free.

For Death has come to be,
Through what Christ did for you and me,
A door that leads to life,
Above this world of sin and strife.

The resurrection morn
Saw for mankind a new hope born.
That Christ has set us free,
To share His immortality.

The Meaning of the Resurrection

By

ROBERT E. L. STRIDER,

Bishop Coadjutor of West Virginia.

Now is Christ risen from the dead.—1 Cor. 15:20.

ALTHOUGH many scientific theories, like the conservation of energy, the electronic structure of matter, and Einstein's doctrine of relativity, involve grave difficulties, yet scientists accept them on the broad ground that it is more rational to believe than to deny them. In somewhat the same way we modern Christians accept the Resurrection. If we are honest we cannot but admit its difficulties, difficulties which so far as we can tell are insurmountable by the human mind. Nevertheless we believe it. That the most stupendous spiritual happening in human history, explain it in detail as you will, actually took place during the early hours of the first Easter Day in the peaceful garden of Joseph of Arimathea, we Christians find it impossible to doubt. Moreover, that that event almost in a single day revolutionized and remade the lives of the Apostles, sent them forth to the achievement of the impossible, and gave to the Church an impetus sufficient to carry it through nineteen centuries, is as certain as any item in our historic faith. Indeed, someone has said that the Resurrection of Jesus, regarded as a historical fact, is as well attested as many of the events considered by historians to be indisputable, which have come down to us from the ancient world.

We, therefore, accept the Resurrection as men accept Mount Everest. Granted that it is unscalable, that it presents problems which are unanswerable, that it is unique and utterly baffling as it towers in grim, mysterious grandeur. Nevertheless there it stands. No rational mind can ignore it. And, having accepted the Resurrection as an undeniable fact, we find that life viewed in the light of its truth is more intelligible, more coherent, and more gloriously worth living than life without belief in a Resurrection could ever be. Perhaps, then, it will be helpful to consider what enormous practical difference the Resurrection makes; how infinitely poorer life would be, and thought would be, without it.

IF THERE BE NO RESURRECTION, matter is the master of spirit, things alone possess reality, and persons are but shadows. Not many of us can bring ourselves to believe that. If matter actually be the master of spirit, earth, iron and rocks are more real than personality, chemistry is more true than philosophy, poetry and music, and decay is a more universal principle than love. If matter be the master of spirit, the chemical elements which compose the body of a man, into which scientific analysis resolves him, and which have been estimated to be worth in the commercial market just eighty-seven cents, represent the real man, whereas his hope, his thought, his vision, his soul are but the "baseless fabric of a dream," but the thinnest of thin air, and the most pitiful of all illusions. Only think what that means! The basic and essential being of my Mother, Father, or dearest friend, is a few pounds of physical matter; all else is nothing. Jesus Christ is not the Saviour of Mankind, nor the Great Teacher, nor the Lamb of God; that is but sentimental nonsense. Jesus is eighty-seven cents worth of chemicals! God, as one of our modern writers has actually said, is nothing but a "sensation in the pit of the stomach" which has somehow become personified! How many of us find it possible to believe that?

If, on the other hand, the Resurrection indubitably took place the case is far different. Spirit, then, must be the master of matter. Man incidentally and on his physical side does consist of eighty-seven cents worth of chemicals, but that estimate of him concerns only the temporary house in which he dwells. The real man lives within, spiritual, immortal, forever above and superior to the dance of physical particles of which mere matter is composed. Personality alone is finally real, alone possesses inviolable worth. Personality takes precedence in the scheme of the universe. It is the crown of creation, the goal of evolution; and because man in a measure possesses it, we believe that he is made in the image of the divine. The roots of reality are in the spiritual. Matter is servant, not master, in the many-mansioned house of God's creation.

I adopt this view of life rather than that which involves a denial of the Resurrection, because I feel I must accept the more coherent and the more rational view instead of the less coherent and the less rational. To approve the hypothesis which offers on the whole the most satisfactory explanation of the problem under investigation is a procedure as valid in religion as it is in science. In a word, it is in the Resurrection of our Lord that we find substantiation of that which most of us feel compelled by the sheer necessities of existence to believe, that man is of higher worth than physical matter, that the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal. Life is mightier than death. Spirit is Lord.

IF, AGAIN, THERE BE NO RESURRECTION, all the struggle and fret of life are vain, and defeat at last is man's inevitable doom. Yet, every instinct of reason and of our higher nature rebels at such a conclusion. It cannot be that men are born, reared, matured for no purpose whatsoever; that men strive, achieve, hope, suffer, sacrifice only in order that finally the infinite abyss of nothingness shall swallow them forever; that the course of evolution, notwithstanding all our thought and talk of progress, is ever tending downward.

Bertrand Russell, the well-known skeptical philosopher, has said: "That man is the product of causes which had no prevision of the end they were achieving; that his origin, his growth, his hopes and fears, his loves and his beliefs, are but the outcome of accidental collocations of atoms; that no fire, no heroism, no intensity of thought and feeling, can preserve an individual life beyond the grave; that all the labors of the ages, all the devotion, all the inspiration, all the noonday brightness of human genius, are destined to extinction in the vast death of the solar system, and that the whole temple of Man's achievement must inevitably be buried beneath the debris of a universe in ruins—all these things, if not quite beyond dispute, are yet so nearly certain, that no philosophy which rejects them can hope to stand. Only within the scaffolding of these truths, only on the firm foundation of unyielding despair, can the soul's habitation henceforth be safely built."

So Bertrand Russell believes, but most of us find such a philosophy beyond the limits of utmost pessimism. The Resurrection of Jesus is an indispensable aid to those who would think in more hopeful and more living terms. Life is worth while, because all along it is engaged in building up something so precious and lasting that the collapse of the physical frame of the universe can never destroy it, any more than an earthquake or a tornado can annihilate truth. My own life is worth while, because my victories, my feeble faith, my struggles, my sacrifices, even my defeats, are contributing all the while to values in myself and in my fellows which cannot but survive the shocks and storms of time. The end of life, unless I am determined to make it otherwise, is not defeat but triumph: triumph over self, pain, failure, all the "changes and chances of this mortal life." It is worth while to try to be masters of our environment and captains of our souls, because we who believe have seen the vision of a shattered tomb surmounted by the figure of a radiant and risen Christ. That can have but one meaning. The master key to life is hope, not despair. Even death shall be finally swallowed up in victory.

IF, ONCE MORE, THERE BE NO RESURRECTION, insanity and not reason rules the universe. Again we find it impossible to believe that that can be the case. All experience and all scientific knowledge point in another direction. The universe is orderly. Eclipses are predicted centuries ahead of time. The assumption on which scientific investigation rests is that which affirms the uniformity of all the processes of the material order. Natural law is consistent. This means that a principle of mathematical orderliness operates in nature, that essentially and at bottom the world is reasonable, not irrational. One cannot easily understand how life and thought would be possible if it were not so.

If there had been no Resurrection, it would be difficult indeed to believe in a universe which has rationality at the heart of it. Consider the present state of humanity. How many eons of struggle and effort have been expended upon the making of man. How much ingenuity, how much trial and error, how much pain. Only with the utmost of travail has nature brought about his survival, and set him where he is as her last and finest product. But why? We cannot help asking. In order that having scaled the peaks of existence he may leap off into the bottomless chasm? In order that having lived and loved, hoped and achieved, he may at the end be extinguished like a candle flame in a blast of wind? In order that having seen the light he may be plunged one day into rayless and eternal gloom? If so, then nature is insane, and not reasonable as we had supposed.

Imagine a potter who labors for a lifetime on a beautiful vase until at last it stands complete, exquisite, perfect in every detail, the fully adequate realization of his dreams, and imagine him in the moment of the triumph of his genius taking a hammer and smashing the lovely vase to bits. What except insanity could explain his act?

Or imagine a man, having built a beautiful and spacious house, having furnished it, having laid the tables as if for many guests, lit the fires, illuminated the house from top to bottom, then setting a match to it in order that he might see it go up in flame and smoke. Who save a crazy man would be capable of such a deed?

We are somehow inhibited from believing that life, and personality, and the upward march of man end at the grave; that the final issue of all beauty, all literature, all music, idealism, love, is a six-foot ridge of earth covered with faded flowers; that the solemn sentence "earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust" enshrines the ultimate goal of lives like that of Saint John, Saint Francis, John Wycliffe, Phillips Brooks, even of Jesus Christ: that it is this, a grave, for which men are born. Can life be such a dreadful nightmare as that? Is our existence on this earth but a "tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing"? No, cries the heart of man. William Dean Howells, writing to Mark Twain on the death of the latter's daughter, said, "It is all a crazy blunder, if she be not in conscious blessedness which knows and feels your love." No, says the Resurrection. Now is Christ risen from the dead. Man was born to live, not to die. The grave is not his goal. Death is not the end. There is more and better life on the other side. At the heart of existence stands One who will see to it that the most precious values in the universe are not forever lost; that somehow the essence of the noblest and best we know will be conserved for that fuller life which lies beyond the "baths of all the western stars." Loving Reason rules this universe. And He will not suffer that which is most nearly akin to Himself to be blotted out as if it had never been.

Thus the Resurrection makes more credible that which science has been telling us, that nature is consistent, and that order and reason rule it. And if the universe be reasonable, then self-conscious personality, the high point and purpose of all its processes, can never be put to permanent confusion. We accept belief in the Resurrection, because it makes our world intelligible, and because it makes life that which William E. Gladstone said it always was to him, "Not a mean and grovelling thing, but a noble and lofty destiny." Thus we frail children of dust have the faith and the courage to live like men and women who are destined for eternity.

EASTER'S AFFIRMATION.

My faith is all a doubtful thing,
Wove on a doubtful loom,
Until there comes each showery Spring,
A cherry tree in bloom.

And Christ, who died upon a tree
That death had stricken bare,
Comes beautifully back to me
In blossoms everywhere.

Probably these verses by David Morton, Amherst College poet-professor, could be written by many of us, whose faith, having been tested and tried, feels the need of the affirmation Easter brings.

We need the rich green of Spring to forget the blank, cold whitness of the long winter past, we need April's "blossoms everywhere" to remind us of the full measure of our faith, its marvelous whole content, which the Calvary season of winter may have obscured. For the days before Easter have been days like these:

Now there is snow upon the hill
And no leaf stirs within the wood;
The brook is cold, is frozen still;
Never so still has winter stood.
No bird is flying in the air,
No warbler in the garden sings;
We who dread such days, cold and bare,
Wait restlessly for what Spring brings.

——— for what Spring brings. That is resurrection, that is Easter. That is nature once again bursting into "blossoms everywhere" with winter gone and summer coming. That is joy and glory of Easter morn, the anniversary of the conquest of life over death.

Spring brings Calvary and Easter morning, not the one without the other, but both together. There cannot be the one without the other. Both reveal the sheer grandeur of God's love for man; both are but two faces of the same jewel.

The Easter Longing

By

DR. DYSON HAGUE, TORONTO.

An Easter Message

I DON'T think any one at this Eastertime could have a more exalted aspiration than that great longing of St. Paul, to know the power of His resurrection. The power of His resurrection (!) (Phil. 3:10). Think of it! To know in the reality of personal experience the dynamic energy, age-lasting, world-inspiring, of that great and incontestible Fact. Christ is risen from the dead. Well may each Christian heart re-echo, as its Easter longing: O that I may know it.

I long to know the power of His resurrection through that personal knowledge of Christ, which is the experience of every real Christian heart. "How do you know Christ is alive?" a skeptic once said to a Christian. And back came the answer splendid: "How do I know? I know He is alive because I spent an hour with Him this morning." Yes. The primary power of the resurrection is the everlasting evidence of personal experience by which those who receive Jesus Christ realize in their hearts and souls that He that hath the Son hath life.

I long to know the power of His resurrection in inspiring, reviving and vitalizing faith. This living faith is the wonder of Christianity. A Japanese gentleman one day said to one of our missionaries: "Do you know what led me to Christ? It was the thought of your God being alive. You know our gods are all dead. But when I heard of the Living God and the Living Christ it awakened my heart and led me to life." By this faith we live.

I long to know the power of His resurrection to give me power to live not only the better but the transformed life. I long to join the countless army who know the power of His love, and that Christ died for them in order that they should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto God. The slums of a thousand cities in Christendom can bring witnesses to that. You can put a diamond in the mud, but it is a diamond still. The purest, sweetest lilies blossom from the mire. Christ's resurrection is the power that enables souls to live in the heavenly places in this wicked and adulterous generation. It is a fact. It is a fact that that power today is lifting untold millions to seek those things which are above, where Christ is sitting in glory on the right hand of God.

I long to know the power of His resurrection to awaken the dead and to transform these poor mortal bodies of ours to resemble that body of Him in glory. I love those words of the epitaph of one of the greatest novelists of the last century, Charles Reade: "I hope for the resurrection—not from any power in nature, but from the will of the Lord God Omnipotent, who made nature and me. He created man out of nothing; which nature could not. He can restore man from the dust; which nature cannot. And I hope for holiness and happiness in a future life—not from anything I have said or done in the body, but from the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ." This is the victory, the victory. Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, in the power of His resurrection. I believe in the resurrection of the dead, and the life of the world to come.

I long to know the power of His resurrection to overcome these vague timidities, these haunting anxieties, these dread forebodings of the dim unknown. I long to hear the Voice of the Easter dawn: "Fear not. Dismiss your fear. Do not be afraid. I am the ever-living One. I am now alive for evermore." Oh, to be brave; to confront the future with the calm confidence of Him who knows that all things work together for good. The only cure for those cowardly fears is Christ's presence and His reassuring voice. The only one antidote to all fear, all weakness, all doubt, is the power of His resurrection. When we see the Risen One in heaven crowned with glory and honour, in His victory we triumph. Fear vanishes. Hope rallies. Faith revives. Love, joy, peace irradiate the triumphant heart. It is the power of His resurrection. So sursum corda—up with hearts! Awake you sons and daughters of sloth in selfish dreams. Awake and Christ shall give you life. Awake you sons and daughters of sorrow. He is alive. He lives. Take comfort in His Word. Triumph in His resurrection.

The Cross in High Places

By MARY F. GOODWIN.

THE incident is familiar to all of us which led to the writing of the beautiful hymn, "In the Cross of Christ I Glory," how Bowring, sailing up a river in China saw a cross surmounting a tower which stood guard over the ruins of a sixteenth century monastery built by Portuguese missionaries. Over many such high places in this old world the cross towers today. When traveling through the older countries in Europe one is struck with the number of peaks in the Alps and Pyrenees crowned with this sacred symbol of Christianity. In Bavaria, especeially in the vicinity of Oberammergau; on the peaks overlooking the valley in which Lourdes is situated, in many a lonely mountain pass there is a cross reared which may be seen for miles. At night, during fetes, they are often outlined with electricity. When the shape of the peak on which they stand is lost in darkness, the effect of the blazing cross, which seems suspended in mid-air is very wonderful.

On the silent peaks of the Andes also, these crosses stand as symbols of peace, and in many a busy mart of the world, it looks down on men as they go about their daily tasks. Perhaps Russia is the greatest territorial expanse on the globe today where man lives and the cross is not found. But the Russian Church, expelled from her native land and purged of much of the dross accumulated during centuries of lassitude and luxury, is carrying on in France, training up ministers for the day they confidently expect when the cross will again crown the gilded domes of Christian churches in the motherland.

Missionaries have from the beginning carried the cross as their banner, and wherever they have gone the cross "towers." In Tokyo an imperial edict forbids any point in the city to be higher than the top of the royal palace. One exception has been made, and the cross on the top of St. Luke's Hospital looks down on the home of the Emperor.

Not only over all lands does the cross stand high, but over the seven seas it is also found. The banner which a chaplain hoists during service on shipboard

Tenant Farming in the Cotton Country

By

JAMES M. STONEY,

Rector of Grace Church, Anniston, Alabama.

SO FEW PEOPLE KNOW what tenant farming is that it might be well to give a brief description of the system. I own and live on a farm, I have two families of tenants on my place and they run a six-mule crop. I am in daily touch with the situation as it works in this section and feel that I can say something about it.

There are three general systems of tenant farming. The first is standing rent, where the tenant pays a fixed sum yearly and beyond that, the owner has little interest. The next and most popular system is "thirds and fourths," where the tenant furnishes everything he needs and pays a third of all crops, such as hay and corn, that require little hand work, and a fourth of crops, such as cotton, that require considerable hand work. The third system that most owners try to avoid is "halves," where the tenant gives only his labor and gets half what he produces.

In all cases, the tenant is furnished a house, water, fuel, a garden patch, pasture and the right to raise chickens, pigs, cows, etc., for his personal use.

The first difficulty is the low price of farm products. In this section, cotton is the main, if not the only cash crop. The price has been held up, but the production per man is so small that his cash income is very little. Take a typical instance, that of a farmer who owns two mules and is allowed to plant twelve acres of cotton on which he may not exceed two hundred pounds of lint to the acre. The government lends him twelve cents a pound, which is more than the present market price. Allowing an additional $15 a bale for his cotton seed, that means that he has a gross possible income of $363 for his year's work. But he has to pay a fourth of this for rent, and from the rest he must buy his fertilizer, and keep up his equipment. Farm stock and equipment is costly, far beyond the service rendered, so very little cash is left to the tenant. Practically all of his corn and hay is used for his stock.

THE NEXT, and equally serious, difficulty lies in the fact that few owners live on their farms. Banks, professional and business men in the towns own the farms and want only a revenue. Few of them care for the land and are perfectly willing to let it run down, wash away and deteriorate generally, so long as they get the rent. Wells are not always satisfactory, buildings are often in miserable repair, fuel amounts to trees which have to be felled and cut up. The tenant has the right to raise his living, and many of them do, but usually they are pushed in good weather, getting in their field crops, so that little attention can be given to pigs, chickens and cows. Houses in which the people live are often in a sad plight. No rent is collected on houses, so no repairs are put in. They are usually unpainted, leaky, full of holes all around and in a general state of drab dilapidation. Those who can do so, get out, of course. The result is that many tenant farmers are shiftless and stupid. Many of them are too improvident to fix a step or mend a fence that belongs to the owner. The system is a vicious circle. Farms everywhere are being allowed to run down and the tenants are becoming poorer and poorer. Theoretically, one has little sympathy for a farmer who does not raise his living, but when one knows the system well, he realizes that little encouragement and help is given by the owner and the tenant is too often the type of person that needs constant supervision to keep him intelligently at work. One has little sympathy for the landlord who is hard on his tenant, and the cry of "merciless" and "dishonest" is freely banded about. Some are merciless and some are crooked. That's true of all people. For the most part, the owner of the farm that is run by tenants, merely has an investment on which he wants to make a profit.

ALL the fault is not on either side. Neither the tenant nor the owner is free from blame. Merely trying to ease up individual cases is not enough. The tenant system itself is one that cannot be prosperous to owner or worker. The state colleges are doing wonders to train the farmers. The public schools are educating his children beyond anything that Southern farmers ever knew before. The solution of the difficulty is not so simple as old clothes and immediate relief. Three things must be done, if the Southern farmer is to prosper: he must be given control, if not ownership, of the land; he must be given far higher prices for his products; farm machinery must be so radically reduced in price that sufficient equipment can be owned by the small farmers.

People are complaining about the cost of farm products, yet they do not know what a tiny part of the cost of the finished product it amounts to. A suit costing forty dollars will have little over a dollar's worth of raw material in it. A shirt costing $2.50 will have less than a dime as the farmer's share.

EASTER'S AFFIRMATION.

We, who have known winter days, now welcome the warmth and color of spring. We, who have known Calvary, greet the Resurrection morn. Spring has come into the world again, and with it the Easter message to be glad, to be glad and unafraid, for life is ours and there is no death.

Easter has come again. There is no reason at all why our faith should be "a doubtful thing wove on a doubtful loom." For now as in every year there comes "a cherry tree in bloom"; and the earth has cast away its winter mantle; and life is for ever gloriously ours, we are assured; and joy and gladness and the green of spring and blossoms are everywhere.

THE CROSS IN HIGH PLACES.

carrying its blue cross on a field of white, soars above the national flag. There may be more than a passing significance in the fact that Great Britain which is today the hope of civilization in Europe, and the controlling destiny of many peoples, carries four crosses on her national emblem.

We come this week to learn anew the lesson of the cross. When we consider what it has stood for as a symbol through the ages, when we remember how many people are looking on it today, we take courage that the great sacrifice made thereon will so conquer men's hearts that its message may reach many hidden depths and save the nations from another devastating war. Bowring was indeed writing of a personal experience, but it is true for peoples and nations as well as the individual, "Peace is there that knows no measure," if that peace reigns in the heart of every Christian, can there be more wars?

"And I, if I be lifted up will draw all men unto me."

Random Remarks on the Devotional Life

By

PROFESSOR ALEXANDER C. ZABRISKIE, S. T. D., and FREDERICK WARD KATES, M. A.

Virginia Theological Seminary.

IT IS advisable to write out the product of one's meditation and prayer. Bishop Brent prayed pen in hand. This gives definite shape to our thought and prayer. "There are those who toil through the whole of their life of prayer," he said, "leaning upon the prayers of others. They maintain they cannot compose prayers of their own. This is not so. Anyone of average intelligence, if he chooses to take time and pains, has ample capacity for the purpose. Let him use his pen and write down his aspirations for himself and others as concisely as he can, and he will be surprised to find, not only how much he has to say to God, but how easily it is to express what is in his heart. Such a practice greatly helps his speech. Furthermore, it is an act of reverence to present to God the best expression of our thought that we can."

We cannot pray and then go out and live entirely in disagreement with what we have prayed. Trying to do this is what makes a divided personality. Instead of all the powers and pulls and drives being focussed on one concentrated line, the personality is being torn asunder as each separate pull jerks it first in this direction and another yanks in another direction. The happy man is the perfectly integrated man; the happy man is he who keeps his life in line with his prayer. Let your prayers spring out of your life, your days, and then let your life follow on the heals of your prayer. Life has got to be brought into harmony with prayer.

We start in prayer at the stage of self-centeredness. Our problems, our needs, are what we are concerned about and in agitation go before God to have considered. But gradually we approach God-centeredness in prayer, which is the true center of prayer.

When we come to the first great divide in our life of prayer, the great shift when we seek communion with God not for what it does for us, but rather for its own sake and by it to learn of God, we have indeed climbed a high mountain and for the first time are able to survey in a majestic sweep the valley we for years walked in.

WE WONDER these days why it is we have deficient knowledge of spiritual things, why it is our prayer is often but meaningless and unsatisfying mumbling of words. Yet, no wonder should it be. For it is one of the cardinal axioms of the spiritual life that discipline is necessary for spiritual progress, and we are a generation raised without discipline. There is no possible chance for growth in spiritual maturity, unless we undergo regular discipline. The discipline need not be of any formal method at first, or necessarily for long periods of time, but it must be regular.

Another reason for our ineffectiveness in our devotions is the matter of time. We begrudge God any portion of our time, all of which is His gift. But we may be sure we shall never find out about Him unless we take time to do so. He is inscrutable indeed, except to the patient searcher. In our devotions we must give generously of our time, we must be unhurried, unpressed, and then we can have leisurely communion with God and we shall soon find our quiet intervals with God coming to have rich meaning.

The way to progress in spiritual things lies along the route of feeding oneself on a few great simple thoughts, of pondering great themes. Meditation is the art of thinking thoroughly and profoundly on the great truths of the Christian religion, until we master them or until they master us. Meditation is saturating oneself in the great and high and basic ideas of the faith. It is allowing ourselves literally to brew in the great truths of our religion. By living so closely to the great truths of the faith their significance will become unbelievably clear, and, for most of us, for the first time intelligible; and their application to the every-day problems of our lives will become instantly revealed.

Of course, the root of all progress in spiritual knowledge is the determined desire to know about spiritual truths and to live our lives in Christ-like fashion.

IF CHARACTER to a large extent is formed by what or by whom we live in frequent and intimate contact, then it follows that if we live intimately with Jesus Christ, His influence will be exerted upon us and we shall in some measure be molded like unto Him. So if we would be Christians, Christ-like persons, we need to find and to take time in which we can direct our entire attention upon Christ, so His influence can and will operate in its transforming manner upon us.

This is where worship fits in. "Worship is our concentrated attempt to expose our whole selves—imaginations, will, mind, affections—to His transforming influence."

The disciple who is earnestly seeking to become more like his Master feels the need and has the desire for intervals of prayer, conversation with God. But while he must persist in such moments of prayer, steadily, frequently, constantly and briefly done, he must also have, for his spiritual growth, longer and uninterrupted periods of communion with God, when his soul may, as it were, literally soak and saturate itself in the atmosphere and the aroma of God.

Such moments of prayer and of private worship enable us to keep alive the dynamic we need to enable us to move forward in more Christian living; such times keep our vision alive and bright. Let us remember that, "Before the commission to preach or teach comes, comes the vocation to pray."

FIRST of the four prerequisites for effective prayer is objectivity. Christ or God, not our own selves, is the center of our attention in prayer. After all, if Christ is to have any influence on us, we must pay attention to Him. Self-centeredness in prayer suffocates the influence of Christ on life. Self-centeredness, which Mrs. Herman in her "Creative Prayer" calls "the slum of the soul," defeats the very purpose of prayer. The Lord's Prayer is the model for our own personal prayer, and notice how little a portion of it is concerned with one's personal requests. God and His will is the beginning and end of that pattern prayer for the Christian.

That we be animated by the desire to know and to do God's will is the second essential for effective prayer. When we set forth in prayer, we embark upon God's way, not our own. Each day must be a renewed dedication on our part to find and to do God's will.

We all know that not the amount of our words or the beauty of them play any part in rendering our prayers heard or effective. It is immaterial whether our prayers are "uttered or unexpressed," whether they are spoken or silent. "Certain thoughts are prayers," said Victor Hugo. "There are moments when, whatever be the attitude of the body, the soul is on its knees." "Every good and holy desire, though it lack

THE SEVEN DISPENSATIONS: By Henry W. Frost, D. D. Art Paper. Pp. 59. Published by Wm. B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, Grand Rapids, Michigan. Price, 40 cents.

Those who read the recent review on "The Harmony of the Eons" will be prepared to understand the import of Dr. Frost's message.

Confessedly, the rank and file of believers in the Christian faith are densely ignorant of this most essential feature of the revelation of God to men. Once more we must return to the axiom of the early Fathers, "Distinguished the periods, and the Scriptures will harmonize." This would indicate that already in the life of the historic Church, confusion held sway in the thoughts and appropriation of truth.

And this contention is most reasonable. When the writer of the Fourth Gospel declared that "the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ," when our Lord affirmed, "Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time; but I say unto you" and when the Apostle unfolded in the third chapter of the Epistle to the Ephesians, that "the mystery in other ages" not made known unto the sons of men, is now revealed unto His holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit", the implication of dispensational dealings with mankind is clear to the intelligent students. And certainly, this method of comprehending the Holy Scriptures is not only to be commended, but urged upon the sincerely pursuing of the will of God as disclosed in His Word.

Dr. Frost has in a most simple way and in compact form treated this so-essential matter, making to the reader an easy access to the method of "distinguishing the periods." We may assume that most of our people, with their Bibles in their hands and under such teaching as this, would find the revelation of God a new book.

Some of Dr. Frost's compeers in the field which he treats may take exception to his classifying the present age as beginning with the ministry of our Lord Jesus, for they will hold that the Church period was inaugurated at Pentecost, with outpouring of the Holy Spirit for enlightenment and quickening for service. This would imply that our Lord's earthly mission was a mellowing of the sunset of the old dispensation into the ultimate sun-rising of the new, when the fulfilment of the promises of the bestowment of the Holy Spirit should materialize. This, however, is not of such significance as to mar the smoothness of Dr. Frost's approach to this needful method of Biblical understanding.

Certainly, we must commend this little manual, for it will repay in generous returns the small cost and the intelligent study which it challenges.

TINKLING CYMBALS: By Milton G. Nicola. Pp. 236. Published by Daniel Ryerson, 644 West Garfield Boulevard, Chicago, Illinois.

This story tells the problems and events of a young boy from the time he leaves high school until he discovers the secret of contentment and peace which comes to him in the middle age of his life. Ideals and ambition fighting one against the other until the events of his life and the guidance of his friends lead him to the ministry.

The problems of the ministry of the Episcopal Church are given in humor and pathos, and are realistic in every detail. Though the story deals with the Church, it is far from monotonous. Its picture of life both spiritual and worldly are adventurous and hold the reader's attention to the end.

To adopt the principles the hero of this story finally practices becomes the ambition of anyone who has given the subject any consideration. I would advise every one to read this with the idea of becoming better acquainted with human nature and learning to cope with it, as well as enjoying the interesting details of the Episcopal Church.

HISTORY OF ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA. Published by the Altar Guild of St. Paul's Church, Norfolk, Virginia, 1934. Pp. 115 and index. Price, $2.50.

The ladies of St. Paul's Guild have done a real service to the city of Norfolk, and to those elsewhere who are interested in the history of the colonial churches in Virginia in publishing this attractive volume. They have included a sketch of the history of the Church with a description of its memorials, and a sketch of the life of the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., who was rector of the church for twenty-four years before becoming bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Southern Virginia in 1906. A record is given of the inscriptions on the tombstones in the churchyard, and there are numerous excellent pictures of the church.

St. Paul's Church was erected in 1739, upon the site of an earlier building erected in 1641 as a chapel-of-ease of Elizabeth River Parish. After the establishment of Norfolk Borough in 1736, the present church was erected, and remained the Borough Church until after the Revolution. The building was then abandoned for a number of years, during which the Church life of the parish centered at Christ Church. The old building was repaired and put again into use in 1832, at which time the name of St. Paul's Church was given to it.

During its nearly two hundred years of existence, the church has shared the vicissitudes of war, fire and pestilence which the community has suffered. But perhaps no visitor ever fails to see its most interesting relic: The cannon-ball fired from a British warship in the bombardment of 1776, which struck the Church, and is now fastened in the wall.

EASTER DAY.

From Sacred Latin Poetry of the Middle Ages, Freely Translated by Mary M. Pleasants.

Let Christians offer praises to The Lamb—
The Lamb our Saviour, who redeems the sheep,
He brings the worst of sinners to their God,
Wondrous life in struggle with grim death!
The Source of peace—though seeming dead—now rules,
And gives to all, who trust, Eternal Life,
"Tell, Mary, what, on the way, you saw."
"Angelic witness and the napkin and grave clothes."
"Tell Mary, what on the way, you saw."
"The Lord is risen and, in Galilee will be,"
We give more credence to the words of Mary,
Than to all the lies of hostile Jews!
We know that Christ has risen from the dead,
Conqueror of death, the Saviour of mankind!

RANDOM REMINDERS ON THE DEVOTIONAL LIFE.

the form, hath in itself the substance and form of a prayer with God, who regardeth the very moanings, groans and sighings of the heart."

Our prayers are our soul's sincere desires—not our mind's, nor brain's desires, but our soul's. Our prayers to be real must issue from our hearts and not our mouths. God hears only when the heart speaks. We must be sincere in our prayer.

Let us always remember that "God looks not at the oratory of our prayers, how elegant they may be; nor at the geometry of our prayers, how long they may be; nor at the arithmetic of our prayers, how many they may be; nor at the logic of our prayers, how methodical they may be; but the sincerity of them He looks at."

The fourth factor in making our prayer effective is to have an attitude of expectancy or faith. After all, we must be firm in our conviction that Christ wants to remake us, and that He can change us, and that He will change us, if only we shall let Him.

"God is ever seeking man: His ear is more sensitive to the words, His heart to the desires, of men than the aspen leaf to the summer breeze, than the compass needle to the call of the poles." With such assurance from Bishop Brent, a man whose life was spent, figuratively, on his knees before God, let us confidently step forth into a more active and into a richer adventure in the life of prayer, or worship, and of devotion.

RESURRECTION MORN.

Margaret R. Watkins.

When early dawn, with roseate hues—
Unbarred the gate of day;
An angel stood beside the tomb
And rolled the stone away.

And from that sepulchre of gloom
Eternal life was born:
Salvation free, proclaimed to all—
That first glad Easter morn.

And down the centuries today,
Redemptions story swells
In a golden jubilate,
Of joyous Easter bells

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

A MEETING OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL.

In preparation for this program, the Leader should copy the list of members of the National Council from page five of Living Church Annual. To be quite up to date, this should be corrected by the April, 1935, Spirit of Missions, page 138. He then distributes slips bearing names of these members and of other speaking parts in pageant to members of the League, giving several to each. It is suggested that the Leader may elaborate this program by adding to it reports from other Secretaries.

Leader: Our pageant this evening is a meeting of the National Council. Each of you has been given the name of one or more of the members of the Council whom you represent. When your name is called on the roll you will answer "Here," and when voting will vote according to your convictions. I will now turn the meeting over to ——, who represents Bishop Perry, Presiding Bishop of the Church.

Bishop Perry (with gavel): The meeting of the National Council will now come to order. I will ask that Bishop Tucker of Virginia will lead us in prayer

Bishop Tucker: Let us pray. (He reads prayer for Conventions, p. 36, in Prayer Book.)

Bishop Perry: The Secretary will now call the roll.

Secretary (calls roll, each member answering, "Here." When he finishes he announces): Mr. President, I find that all are present.

Bishop Perry: Mr. Secretary, you will now read the minutes of the last meeting.

Secretary: The meeting of the National Council met at 10 A. M., February 19, with Bishop Perry in the Chair. The roll being called all members were found present. The Rev. Mr. Reinheimer. Secretary of the Field Department, announced that reports indicated that pledges were $190,000 below even the emergency schedule. But that counting on every available resource in sight there would still be a $143,790 shortage of the emergency schedule, Respectfully submitted, Franklin J. Clark, Secretary.

Bishop Perry: Are there any corrections or omissions? If not, the minutes stand approved as read at the sound of the gavel. (Strikes with gavel.) We will now have the report of Bishop Bartlett of North Dakota, Executive Secretary of the Department of Domestic Missions.

Bishop Bartlett: I would call the attention of the Council to the whole vast field comprehended within the words Domestic Missions. Mexicans, Orientals and Negroes are but phases, but especially the Rural Field. (He continues with small print on page 139, April, 1935, Spirit of Missions.)

Bishop Perry: Thank you, Bishop Bartlett. Are there any questions?

Bishop Sherrill: Mr. President, Bishop Sherrill of Massachusetts speaking, I would like to ask if Bishop Bartlett found the work in th emountains of Kentucky progressing or at a standstill?

Bishop Bartlett: Bishop Abbott reports that it is progressing satisfactorily.

Bishop Perry: We will now hear the Report of Dr. Wood, Executive Secretary of the Department of Foreign Missions.

Dr. Wood: I beg leave to report that in spite of the depression and the cut in salaries, the morale of our Missionary Fields is in an unusually fine condition. I would also like to report that in several of the fields in China, the higher salaried officials decided among themselves that those whose salaries were under $300 a year should not receive the ten per cent cut. So they reduced their own salaries still further in order to care for the amount necessary to keep those with the low salaries at the same figure. In the face of such self-sacrifice, we beg that there be no slackening of effort to raise the full amount for the Church's Program in 1935.

Bishop Perry: At this time, my brethren, I feel that I must insist that the item in our budget of $7,500 for the salary of the President of the Council be reduced to $2,400, in order to cover expenses, and if Bishop Cook will take the chair, I offer that as a motion. (Bishop Cook has arisen.)

Bishop Cook: Do I hear a second?

Bishop Stewart: With great regret I second it.

Bishop Cook: All in favor will please say, Aye. (Majority say Aye.) It is carried.

Bishop Perry: Ladies and Gentlemen, I thank you. We will now hear the report of Mr. Franklin, Treasurer of the Church.

Mr. Franklin: With the generous offer of our President, I take great pleasure in announcing that the emergency schedule of $2,313,115 is balanced. For the first time in four years the Church is free from the immediate necessity for further cuts. In explanation of this I feel that I should say (here is read speech of Mr. Franklin on page 137 of April, 1935, Spirit of Missions, all that is in quotations).

Mrs. Cain: Mr. President, I move the following resolutions: (from p. 138, Spirit of Missions).

Bishop Perry: All in favor of this resolution will please say, Aye. (All say, Aye.) It is unanimously carried. We will now hear the report of Mr. Hobbs, Executive Secretary of the Department of Publicity.

Mr. Hobbs: The Spirit of Missions continues to do its good work, being sent free to every clergyman, and to a large paid subscription list. In addition to this, we have cooperated with the Field Department in publishing a large number of pamphlets. We have also made good use of the radio in broadcasting sermons by famous preachers for several months. We would also offer the following resolution (read it from page 139 of April Spirit of Missions.)

Bishop Perry: Do I hear a move for the adoption of the resolution?

Mr. Patton: Mr. Patton, of Tennessee, speaking, I so move, Mr. President.

Bishop Rogers: Bishop Rogers, of Ohio, speaking, I second it.

Bishop Perry: All those in favor will please say, Aye. (Majority vote, Aye.) I declare it passed. My brethren, the hour of noon has arrived, and I bid you to prayer in the chapel. After it we will resume our work here and hear the reports of the other Departments. I have a special joy in this service, for it is to be my privilege to unveil a tablet to my valued friend and co-worker for so many years on this Council. I refer to the late Rt. Rev. Hugh Latimer Burleson, late Bishop of South Dakota and my Assessor here. Let us go into Prayer.

Richmond.

Miss Olive Meacham, principal of the Bromley School, Liberia, will be in Richmond, April 28, to speak to the Y. P. S. L. about her work in Liberia.

One of the members of the House of Bishops stated that she was one of the most interesting speakers who had ever addressed that body. The meeting is sponsored by the Richmond Council of the Y. P. S. L. The public is invited.

Our Young Men.

There is some very good vintage from these last few years, some greatish men maturning, and quite a lot of good ones. "Will they be Christian?" "How can we keep our young men?" The question has a quiet humor, when we take it to the light of the Gospel, which is all about young men led by One as young as they. I hear that you have been listening to rebels. But rebels always remind me of a boy who came to see me in 1916, and said, "I don't mind the war, but I can't stick the Army." And a few days later, a regular came to me and said, "When shall we get over this horrible war and get back to real soldiering?" So a Church that is fighting manfully against evil and sorrow will hold its men; but the best men will not turn out merely for mimic warfare.

P. B. Clayton, of Toc H.

The Call.

Remember, O Lord, what Thou has wrought in us, and not what we deserve; and as Thou hast called us to Thy service, make us worthy of Thy calling. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Sermon on the Mount makes an appeal apparently so simple, sets forth principles so obviously just, that nothing seems easier than to obey it. But let a man give it a fair trial, and he will soon find that its standard is far beyond.

"The Dial
Receives many shades, and each points to the sun;
The shadows are many, the sunlight is one,
Life's sorrows still fluctuate; God's love does not,
And His love is unchanged when it changes our lot."

"The Cross is presented not primarily to our tastes or sympathies, but to our consciences."

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

FOR EASTER.

An Easter greeting has come from Professor Sergius Bulgakoff, Dean of the Russian Orthodox Theological Institute in Paris, who will be remembered by thousands of American Churchmen as a distinguished visitor at General Convention, a welcome speaker and lecturer in many parts of the country, and a brilliant leader of the Russian Orthodox in Europe:

From the heart of the Eastern Orthodox Church I send my brethren of the Episcopal Church in America the Easter salutation. It is the custom in our Church that all present at the Easter service and throughout the whole of Easter week, salute each other with a kiss and the words, "Christ is risen!" to which the others reply, "He is risen indeed!" The midnight service which announces Easter is a supreme gift of the Holy Spirit, a miracle of joy and light, given us as the fruit of penitent observation of Lent and the majestic and tragic mystery of Passion Week. We believe that this joy will not be denied, even to the Martyr Church in Russia.

It was given me last year to visit America and to enter into contact with the Episcopal Church by participation in its Convention and in its worship. And I have brought back with me to Europe the most grateful and gracious memories of that visit. Easter is the festival of Christian love. On that occasion the sense of Christian unity is manifest in the soul with special power, and I have a vivid desire to send you our Russian Easter greeting, "Christos voskriesse". May it ring in your ears and in your own tongue, just as at Pentecost, the joyful tidings of the Resurrection were heard from the Apostles, each in his own language: Christ is risen—He is risen, indeed!

(Signed) Sergius Bulgakoff.

The Russian Church in the Past.

Speaking of the Russian Orthodox Theological Academy in Paris and of the several undertakings to which it is related, Mr. Paul B. Anderson, of the International Y. M. C. A., says:

"Before the revolution the Russian Church asked no favors; rather, it was the Russian Church that preserved the holy places in Jerusalem, supported the Bulgarian and Serbian Churches under Moslem oppression, sent missionaries to Alaska and established a permanent Church life in Japan. Now is the time when Western Christians can take a turn at helping Russia, as a sister Church, which in due time will thank us."

Situated as we are in peaceful surroundings, it is hard for us to realize the intensity of the sufferings of the heads of the Orthodox Church in Russia at the hands of the present government. . . . The inhuman, diabolical means made use of to try to destroy the Church are almost unbelievable. There are heroes today as in the early days of the Christian Church. We are at ease in Sion; beware lest we, too, are set for trial.—(Rev.) W. S. Slack.

Out of the Arctic wastes around Tigara (Point Hope), Alaska, comes word from Archdeacon Goodman that there have been plenty of whales this winter, which means oil, light, heat and some of their food, to our Eskimo Church people.

They are so keen to go to church that if there is a howling wind and the cold many degrees below zero, they walk backward, and when that becomes impossible they get down and crawl on all fours, the better part of a mile to the church.

This is Archdeacon Goodman's tenth year at Tigara.

Carrying Christ to the People of the Mountainside.

As the sun dips down behind the Muncy hills and the shadows of the evening lengthen, a lonely farm house stands silhouetted against the darkening sky. But is it lonely? No, for from within comes the sound of singing—joyous singing—and the words are those of a hymn. Thus may be found the Church for the Isolated, established by the Rev. Squire B. Schofield, rector of St. James Church, Muncy, Pa., for the purpose of "carrying Christ to the people of the mountainside". Once a month farmers from all parts of the hills gather at a farm house—there to worship God. And it matters not whether they are Episcopalians or members of any other denomination, for the Church of the Isolated is non-sectarian and everyone is welcome. Many of these sturdy tillers of the soil have not been to church for years, because the nearest church is many miles away. Many of the younger ones have never been to church at all. No collections are taken, and the Rev. Mr. Schofield carries on his work without remuneration. His son also accompanies him to these informal services to play the piano. The two take along a hymnal, and the old favorites, the ones that everyone likes to sing, are the hymns that are sung. The first service was held about six months ago at the farm of Charles Lavers. Twenty-eight persons attended. At the third service the members of his "flock", learning that the day was Mr. Shofield's birthday, showered him with gifts, most of which were products of their own labor. Thirty-four attended this service.

DR. GAVIN TO REPRESENT AMERICA IN CONVERSATIONS.

The Rev. Dr. Frank S. B. Gavin, professor of Church History at the General Theological Seminary, has been named by the Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry, D. D., presiding Bishop, to represent the American branch of the Anglican communion in conversations on "Anglican Orders" with the hierarchy of the Rumanian Orthodox Church at Bucharest, Rumania, during June.

Dr. Gavin's appointment was made by Bishop Perry, at the request of the Most Rev. Cosma Gordon Lang, D. D., Archbishop of Canterbury. The commission representing the Anglican churches of the world will be headed by the Rt. Rev. Frederick C. N. Hicks, D. D., Lord Bishop of Lincoln. The conversations are expected to lay a basis for inter-communion.

The invitation to discuss "Anglican Orders" was sent to Archbishop Lang by the Most Rev. Myron Chryston, Patriarch of the Rumanian Orthodox Church, as the result of a series of lectures delivered by Dr. Gavin at the University of Bucharest four years ago, when the tenets of Anglicanism for the first time were explained to the Rumanian branch of the Eastern Orthodox Church.

The conversations at Bucharest will begin on May 31, and will continue well into June. Following the discussions, the Anglican Commission will report to Archbishop Lang.

COUNCIL OF YOUTH ORGANIZATIONS MEETING.

The second meeting of the conference of representatives of the various youth organizations was held in New York, Tuesday, March 26, 1935. Those present were:

Rev. Ernest E. Piper, National Federation of Episcopal Young People.

Mr. Leon C. Palmer, Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

Mr. Frank Lincoln, Order of Sir Galahad.

Mr. Richard T. Viguers, Knights of SS. John.

Miss Harriet Dunn, Girls' Friendly Society.

Miss Frances Arnold, Girls' Friendly Society.

Miss Ruth Littlefield, Order of the Fleur de Lis.

Miss Edna Eastwood, Jr., Daughters of the King.

Rev. Vernon McMasters, National Secretary for Church Schools.

Rev. T. O. Wedel, National Secretary for College Work.

Rev. D. A. McGregor, Executive Secretary of the Department of Religious Education.

Miss Dorothy May Fischer, National Secretary for Young People's Work.

Reports were given from the various representatives as to the attitude of their respective boards regarding the feasibility of a council of youth organizations. The feeling was that such an organization would be of great value.

Discussion followed as to the type of organization it should be. It was the general consensus of opinion that it should be an independent group, self-constituted, meeting for consultation and projection of their own plans rather than an advisory group.

The Rev. Ernest Piper was elected chairman, and Miss Dorothy May Fischer, secretary. Two questions of major interest were brought up: Have the existing youth organizations outlived their usefulness? Or is there a field of usefulness for them which is not now being used? Has the time come when all these organizations should be abandoned in favor of a single young people's organization with a program for Christian youth which can function in any section of the country? The council recognized that there were many major complications in such a procedure, but also recognized this as a trend.

The second question that was raised was that of a closer cooperation between church and community groups.

Attention was called to National Youth Week, April 27-May 4 as an opportunity for community cooperation.

The material of the United Youth Movement, sponsored by the International Council of Religious Education, under the theme, Christian Youth Building a New World, was discussed. It was interesting to learn that many youth groups in our Church are participating in this Movement. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew is using this as the basis for their program for next year. It was felt that through this United Youth Movement there was an excellent opportunity for community cooperation. The Council went on record as approving this movement, and suggested that each representative call the attention of his constituency to the United Youth Movement and suggest it as a means of cooperation in community activities.

The Girls' Friendly Society reported that they were sponsoring a course on the Psychology of Leadership, April 5, 6 and 7, at their headquarters in New York, to which leaders of various young people's groups were invited. Members of their staff are also giving courses on the Psychology of Leadership at summer conferences, to which all leaders of young people are invited.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew reported that they are sponsoring a six weeks' study program on Personal Religions for all leaders of young people.

Dr. Sherman spoke to the group on the Forward Movement, and invited the participation of the young people in this Movement.

The question of a young people's magazine to be supported by the various youth organizations was discussed. It was suggested that this magazine might present a program for Christian youth instead of specific organizational programs. The feeling was that such a magazine would be of great value to the young people's work, but that it would not replace the material which is being put out by the individual organizations.

The Council of Youth Organizations will meet again on October 3 and 4, 1934.

BISHOP HOBSON PRESENTS FORWARD MOVEMENT TO GIRLS' FRIENDLY SOCIETY.

A challenge to the young people's organizations of the Church to help with the Forward Movement was presented by Bishop Hobson to the board of directors of the Girls' Friendly Society at its dinner meeting, April 3, at the Parkside Hotel, New York City. Following Bishop Hobson's talk, the board voted that the society should undertake as its part in the Forward Movement cooperation with the clergy and the Church schools in "a humble but sincere attempt to study and teach the principles of prayer to its girls".

A program series for young people on Peace, Race Relations and the Movies was voted by the board. This series is to be published in The Record, the magazine of the society, next fall. Miss Katherine Gardiner, of the Inter-Racial Committee of the Federal Council of Churches, addressed the board on the progress being made today in churches of all denominations along the line of educational programs to build better inter-racial understanding.

The gifts of the society to support work in the mission field were found to have been even more needed than ever during the past few years. It was reported that without the scholarships which G. F. S. groups send to All Saints' Mission for girls, Bontoc, the Philippine Islands, the school would have to close its doors; and that last year's gift of $2,000 to St. Barnabas Mission for Lepers, Kusatsu, Japan, had enabled the mission to provide much needed quarters both for the well children of lepers and for children now pronounced "symptom free". The society this year has undertaken the support for two years of a much needed assistant to Miss Bremer of St. Faith's School, Yangchow, China. Miss Florence Moore, of Philadelphia, received the appointment and sailed for China in January.

Leadership training was found to be the great need of the Girls' Friendly Society as of all organizations working with young people today. As the first step in a new series of leadership training courses, a three-day institute for the leaders of young people's groups, especially those on the faculty of summer conferences, was conducted by Mrs. Helen G. Hogue, Mental Hygiene Counsellor, Board of Education, Highland Park, Michigan, at the national office of the society immediately following the meeting of the board. The topics for discussion were: "How Personality Grows," "Personality Problems of Normal People", "Ways and Means of Helping Personality to Grow", "Working Toward Successful Marriage" and "Making Religions Real to Young People". Forty-five leaders of the Girls' Friendly Society and of other young people's organizations attended this conference.

C. L. I. D. Speaker.

Mary Van Kleeck, director of industrial studies of the Russell Sage Foundation and a vice-president of the Church League for Industrial Democracy, is to speak at a number of meetings under League auspices in the immediate future. The first is to be held in Cincinnati on April 25 at a luncheon meeting at the Y. W. C. A. On May 4 she is to address a meeting in Los Angeles in the afternoon, and on Monday, May 6, will meet with the clergy of the Diocese. Later in the week Miss Van Kleeck is to be the guest of honor at a dinner meeting of the San Francisco group of the C. L. I. D., arranged by Bishop Parsons and some of the local League members.

Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Chas. K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan

C. P. C. Speaker.

Miss Florence F. Pickard, from the mission at the Southwestern Virginia place with the satisfying name of Splashdam, is to be the speaker at the open meeting of the Church Periodical Club in the Parish House of St. Thomas' Church, New York City, 1 West Fifty-third Street, on Monday in Easter week, April 22, at 11 A. M. The Church's work has made striking progress among the primitive conditions surrounding the mission at Splashdam.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Centennial of Diocese to Be Formally Opened on April 30.

The Centennial of the Diocese of Chicago will be formally opened in Chicago, Tuesday night, April 30, with a great diocesan dinner. The Bishops of Springfield and Quincy, and the Rev. William L. Essex, rector of St. Paul's Church, Peoria, are expected to be guests of honor.

Present also will be Mrs. Charles T. Hull, wife of the Rev. Charles T. Hull, a descendant of Philander Chase, first Bishop of Illinois. A message from President Roosevelt will be presented and the history of the diocese reviewed by motion picture slides.

The occasion will mark the forty-fifth annual meeting of The Church Club of Chicago, sponsor of the dinner. Bishop Stewart will give the principal address.

The week following the dinner, the million dollar campaign, which the diocese is undertaking as part of its centennial celebration, will get under way. Deanery meetings are planned by the centennial organization to formally launch the campaign. Already organization work for the canvass has been virtually completed and some 2,500 workers and solicitors lined up. The drive will be carried on virtually simultaneously in all the parishes through the month of May.

The fund, which is sought, will go to re-finance the diocesan as well as parochial obligations, particularly the obligations of the Bishop as corporation sole.

Lenten Speaker Urges Sacrifice.

Christianity, like all other time-honored institutions, is fighting with its back to the wall, the Rev. Harry S. Longley, Jr., declared at the Lenten Noonday Services of the Church Club this week.

"It is obvious today that we are living in a time that comes once every five or six hundred years between the death of an old age and the birth of a new," said Fr. Longley. "In such a time every old institution fights with its back to the wall. In our day Christianity is no exception.

"If the age that is coming is to be aware of God and not of man only, then today is a time of battle for the Christian disciple. The Christian today must realize that he is at war with forces which threaten all that he holds dear. He will not win the battle without sacrifice. That is why it is so important to relate the Passion of Christ to modern Christian discipleship."

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Woman's Auxiliary Sponsors Silver Tea.

St. Cecelia's Chapter of the Parish Council of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Cathedral of St. Philip will sponsor a silver tea at Wisteria Hall, Thursday, April 25, at four o'clock.

This is the ancestral home of the Misses Caroline and Louise Sisson and Miss Laura Beauregard Larendon. When the original plantation house burned several years ago, the present house was built around the old furniture which has been in the Beauregard and Sisson family for generations.

Mr. Raymond Hastings, a horticultural expert, will speak, his subject being, "A Japanese Tea Garden," the setting for which will be the Sisson garden, miles of wisteria, iris, dogwood, crab-apple and other flowers, making it one of the gardens to which the people of Atlanta make annual pilgrimages.

Bishop H. J. Mikell will preach at the Annual Diocesan Convention of South Florida, to be held at Daytona Beach, on May 7.

NEW JERSEY

Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D. Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. W. Knight, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor.

Program of Sesquicentennial Celebration.

In the commemoration of the sesquicentennial of the founding of the Diocese of New Jersey, two distinguished visitors from England are to be the guests of the Diocese. They are: the Rev. Canon Stacy Waddy, D. D., Secretary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and Sir Edward Midwinter, K. B. E., who is a representative of the Society. Since the S. P. G. played such a large part in the sending of missionaries and the founding of the Church in the diocese, it is most eminently fitting that it should be representatives of the same Society who come to assist in this celebration.

The program within the diocese opens with the unveiling of a tablet in Christ Church, New Brunswick, on Saturday, May 4, commemorating the founding of the diocese at that place one hundred and fifty years ago. The distinguished guests are to be present and speak at the Diocesan Convention on Tuesday, May 7, and Wednesday, May 8. A period of pilgrimages has been arranged during two weeks to most of the colonial parishes, whose origin was under the bounty of the S. P. G.

The distinguished guests will participate in many activities outside of the Diocese of New Jersey while they are here. Canon Waddy and Sir Edward Midwinter are to speak at the Annual Court of the Society of Colonial Wars at Princeton, on Friday, May 3, on the subject of "The Colonial Parishes in New Jersey and Their Relation to the S. P. G." The unveiling of the tablet in Christ Church, New Brunswick, is to be part of the program of this Annual Court. The tablet is given by the Society of Colonial Wars.

On Sunday, May 5, at 10 A. M., Sir Edward Midwinter is to speak on the subject of "The Coming of the S. P. G. to America," over Station WABC, and fifty station. This address will be given under the auspices of the Department of the National Council. On Tuesday, May 14, the representatives of the S. P. G. are to be the guests of the Diocese of New York. At 8 P. M. Canon Waddy is to speak at a special service in the Cathedral in celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Diocese of New York. The subject is to be "The Work of the S. P. G. for the Diocese of New York," or some similar topic.

Old Friends Interested in Rev. Carl Truesdale's New Work.

"A New Englander is Transplanted," an article appearing in the current number of the American Church Monthly, written by the Rev. Carl Morrison Truesdale, formerly of Lonsdale, R. I., has attracted the attention of many of his old friends in this diocese. He was ordained a deacon in the Cathedral of St. John in this city last October, and assigned to a missionary field in Nevada, with residence at Caliente.

He describes his arrival at the mining camp, where his parish, St. Matthias' is situated; his rooms under the church were cold and barren; and "a marvelous assortment of pans, tins and buckets spread out along the floor," in the church to catch the water leaking through the roof.

He was pleased that the people "did not ply him with questions about where he came from and what he had done there." The past means very little to the Westerner; it is the present and future that count. This is a grand attitude to take.

One man greeted him by announcing that he was able to "hold more liquor than any other man in the state," and an old prospector regaled him with stories of the Old West and "Massakrees."

Passion Play is a Religious Performance to the Players and Prayer is Offered Before Each Performance.

Henry Cooper, who for the fourth season is portraying the part of "Christus" in the Passion Play, given by the Epiphany Players of the Church of the Epiphany, has given an impressive interview to the press about the effect the part has upon him.

Mr. Cooper, who played in Sock & Buskin, the Brown Dramatic Club in his freshman year, is teacher of Science and Dramatics at the West Warwick High School.

"I was reluctant," he said, "to play the role of 'Christus' when I was first approached on the subject several years years ago. I did not feel good enough to be the medium of such a sacred part, but I was persuaded to try it.

"In the first place, I turned to the New Testament and read everything in it that might throw light on Jesus' manner, His speech, His spirit. I try to have an hour for quiet thought before each performance. It is a part that one cannot play or rehearse if he is not completey composed and calm.

"It has been our thought in the Epiphany Players to lose our several identities in the parts we play. There are no leading roles; we are all alike. We look on the Passion Play as a religious performance and prayer is offered before each performance."

University of South Suffers Great Loss in Death of Dr. Wilson Lloyd Bevan.

The theological department of the University of the South has sustained an irreparable loss in the death of Dr. Wilson Lloyd Bevan, the professor of Systematic Divinity. Dr. Bevan's illness, though brief, had to some extent prepared his friends for his death, which finally came on Monday, April 8, around noon.

Surely his place cannot be taken. He was a man of wide learning and his like as a student has rarely been found in this country. His sincerity and his breadth, his true catholicity, are unmatched. He embodied a certain joyous hospitality to ideas. He moved in a world somewhat above that of his students, but they found him enthusiastic in his desire to conduct them thither. His was an attitude of tolerance toward those who found themselves unable to share his ideas, and his sense of the ridiculous prevented him from taking them or himself too seriously. There was a simplicity about him, a naturalness, a reverence for holy things, withal a love for life, that made one easy in his presence, that saved one from embarrassment in the face of such great learning. It was no uncommon thing for students to be puzzled concerning where to find some obscure fact of history, some forgotten theological theory, some fugitive idea, and always the man to whom they went as to an oracle was Dr. Bevan. His love for Sewanee was matched, I think, by no other love than by his love for Europe, where certainly he was at home.

Dr. Bevan was born in Baltimore, Md., in 1866. He was graduated from Johns-Hopkins with a B. A., from Columbia University with an M. A., from General Theological Seminary with an S. T. B. He was ordained deacon in 1889 by Bishop Potter, priested in 1891 by Bishop Doane, fellow of Columbia University in 1889. He was rector of Trinity Church, Concord, Mass., from 1894 to 96. He was Professor of History, University of the South, 1911 to 1914; associate editor of the New York Churchman, 1898-1917; professor of Ecclesiastical History, Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, 1918. Also author of historical and theological books.

Funeral services were held in All Saints' Chapel of the University of the South, by the Rev. Moultrie Guerry, chaplain, assisted by the Very Rev. Charles Luke Wells, D. D., Dean of the Seminary, the Rev. Fr. James Marvin Luke, and the Rev. Haskell M. DuBose. The Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon pronounced the benediction.

Lent.

This has been a very good season for the Church in Bethlehem. From every part of the diocese come reports of large congregations and large communions, especially at the early service.

Two successful missions were held. One by Father Dunphy at St. James' Church, Jermyn, the Rev. Arthur K. Fenton, rector, and the other by the Rev. Walter Bentley at the Church of the Mediator, Allentown, the Rev. R. N. Merriman, rector.

The Rev. Glen B. Walter of the Church of the Redeemer, Sayre, had a number of Lenten Suppers after which illustrated lectures were given on different mission fields. The meetings grew until they filled the large parish hall.

Summer School.

The programs of the Bethlehem Summer School have just been sent to the clergy. This year the conference will be held at Hawthorne Inn, Mt. Pocono, from June 23, on through the week.

Hawthorne Inn is a beautiful spot in the Poconos and affords every comfort. There is the large Inn and ten cottages, where 150 young folks can be nicely accommodated. Connected with the Inn are recreational facilities of all kinds for the delight of the pupils in the free afternoons. The faculty is as follows:

Rev. F. O. Musser, of Trinity Church, Easton, is Chaplain and will give a course on "Worship and Its Significance";

Mrs. John Loman, of the Department of Religious Education in the Diocese of Pennsylvania, will give two courses. One on "Creative Teaching" and "Teaching Techniques";

The Rev. Glen B. Walter, of the Church of the Redeemer, Sayre, will teach a course on Some of the Church's Missions;

Mrs. T. B. Smythe, of Reading, president of the Diocesan Girls' Friendly Society, will continue her course of last year on "The Girl and Her Church Life";

Mrs. C. Stanley Rogers, in charge of Religious Education and young people's work at St. Mary's, Ardmore, will give two courses. One on "Young People's Fellowships," and the "Discussion Method in the Y. P. F.";

The Rev. Thomas B. Smythe, of St. Mary's Church, Reading, will also have two courses. One on Church History and the other on "Church School Lesson Methods";

Miss Letty M. Parry, of the Scranton Public Schools, will teach two courses. One, "Fundamentals of the Religious Drama," and "Pageantry Preparation";

The Rev. Fred Trumbore, of St. Clement's Church, Wilkes-Barre, will again give a course on Church Music.

One of the fine features of the evening will be the moving picture, "The New World," which was presented for the first time at the General Convention at Atlantic City.

Registrations should be sent to Mrs. Donald W. Denniston, Palmerton, Pa. The fee for registration, board and lodging is only $13.50.

The Rev. A. E. Eastburn, of St. Barnabas' Church, Philadelphia, will be the counselor for the boys and Mrs. Smythe, of Reading, for the girls.

Last year there were 116 registrations from the Dioceses of Bethlehem, Harrisburg and Philadelphia.

For programs and further information address the Rev. George McKinley, Palmerton, Pa., chairman of the Summer School Committee.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop

Bishop Barnwell of Idaho the Bishop-coadjutor-elect of Georgia, confirmed his first class in the Diocese of Georgia at St. Michael's and All Angels' Church, Savannah, on Sunday, April 7, at the mid-day service. The class of sixteen was presented by the rector, the Rev. Joseph Burton.

In the afternoon he confirmed a class of six at St. Stephen's Church, the Rev. Gustave H. Causton, rector, and at eight o'clock a class of fourteen at St. Augustine's Church, the Rev. J. Henry Brown, D. D., vicar.

Camp Reese.

With only a little more than six weeks before Camp Reese on St. Simon's Island, will reopen for the summer diocesan camps and conferences, the Department of Religious Education is sending out literature giving the schedule of the camps to be held and the names of those directors of the camps who have accepted their appointment. The Camp grows in popularity each year, with both old and young, and last year something around two hundred and eighty attended the summer conferences and camps. More are expected this year and, while those in the Diocese of Georgia are always given first consideration, individuals from other dioceses, in so far as they may be accommodated, are accepted on the same terms. Any desiring information are asked to communicate with Mrs. J. W. Griffeth, Executive Secretary of the Department of Religious Education, Diocese of Georgia. The Adult Division (23 years up) will open the camp on June 8 and leave on June 22. The rates are:

Registration	$ 2.50
Total	$22.50

Directors: The Rev. Dr. David Cady Wright, rector, Christ Church, Savannah; the Rev. John A. Wright, rector, St. Pauls Church, Augusta.

The Young Peoples Division and College Conference (16-22 years), June 22-July 6.

Registration	$ 2.50
Board	14.00
Total	$16.50

Director: The Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, rector, St. Johns Church, Savannah.

Junior Girls' Division (13-15 years), July 9-July 20.

Weather Vagaries.

On a March Friday the interior of St. Alban's, Fullerton, was decorated thickly with the product of a severe dust storm, a little later on in the day the sixth window to be replaced since last fall was blown out by the force of the cyclonic wind, the following day a heavy snowstorm blanketed the church, and on Sunday a mild day brought the pattering of water as an accompaniment to the music of the service. The fifteen communicants remain undaunted and "carry on".

Bishop Shayler Offered Invocation.

At the annual conference of the D. A. R. of the State of Nebraska, the Rt. Rev. Bishop E. V. Shayler offered the invocation at the unveiling of a bronze tablet in the Union Pacific Station in Omaha, to commemorate the resumption of the Union after the War Between the States. A large crowd gathered to witness the ceremony, and Mayor Towl of Omaha, and State Regent Mrs. H. J. Cary were among several who took part.

Former Student at Brownell Hall.

The new Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Miss Josephine Roche, renewed friendships with many of her former associates in Omaha recently. She was a student at Brownell Hall, the Diocesan Church School, in Omaha, and recalled many happy friendships with Episcopal people in her life as an Omahan in the 1900's.

United Services in Twin Cities.

Dr. Fred Clayton has just returned from a very happy visit to the Twin Cities, where he conducted Lenten services for the churches there, which united in special gatherings. He preached in St. John the Evangelist, St. Paul, and in Gethsemane, Minneapolis.

St. Andrews Church To Be Dedicated.

St. Andrew's Church, Harrisburg, the Rev. Earl M. Honaman, rector, has cleared off the mortgage on the church property. The church will be dedicated by Bishop Wyatt Brown on Ascension Day, May 30. The parish was organized in 1906. A new organ, which has been entirely paid for, will be dedicated in the near future.

Making Surgical Dressing for Local Hospitals and Mission Stations.

Under the leadership of Mrs. Wyatt Brown, a group has been formed at St. Stephens Cathedral, Harrisburg, to make surgical dressings for local hospitals and hospitals in our mission stations, such as the Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital, Fort Yukon, Alaska. Mrs. Stanley Parks, of Trinity Church, Williamsport, Pa., addressed a meeting held at Bishopscourt, telling of the similar work being done at Trinity Church, and later came to Harrisburg to instruct the women in the making of the dressings.

Intensive Visitation Conducted.

The local Federation of Churches of Lewisburg adopted The Forward Movement of the Episcopal Church at a recent meeting, and an intensive visitation was conducted by all the ministers. The Rev. Morris W. Derr, student chaplain at Bucknell University, who was made a member of the Federation recently, explained the movement and its purpose to the group. The Episcopal students at Bucknell have also taken hold of the idea and a campaign is being planned by the student vestry.

Activities of the Church's Missions.

The Rev. Franklin H. Spencer, has recently assumed charge of the Church's Missions at Salem, Centralia, Mt. Vernon and Carlyle, in addition to the already large number of stations in his care.

One of the most attractive buildings in the southern end of the diocese is the one at Salem and there is a thoroughly alive group of people attached to the church in this community.

At Centralia, the people are working under great handicaps. There is a very attractive church building in this city, but it has a heavy debt on it and a considerable sum owing for its furnishings and services have been very infrequent for the past year.

Trinity Church, Mt. Vernon, is trying to come back, following a rest of all too long a time.

The missions at McLeansboro, Olney, Albion, Carmi, Mt. Carmel and Harrisburg (the latter in the coal fields), are holding their own and it is hoped that before long will be exceedingly active in good works.

A field meeting of the women of the Albion, Olney and Mt. Carmel field was held April 11 with Mrs. J. G. Weart, President of the Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary in attendance, together with other officers of the women's work in the diocese.

The men of the southern end of the diocese are working on plans for a dinner meeting to be held at Salem on May 9.

In several of the Missions, Mr. Spencer is gathering together different people for Confirmation classes to be presented to the Bishop in June.

This section of the diocese is one of the largest mission fields in the church and to adequately take care of it, involves the traveling of some two thousand miles a month.

Lenten Mite Boxes; The Children's Number of The Spirit of Missions; Birthday Thank Offering Literature; The U. T. O. Boxes; copies of the several Church Papers; The Forward Movement literature; Duplex Envelopes —all are used or distributed throughout the field.

PENNSYLVANIA

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop.

"And Whosoever Shall Compel Thee to Go a Mile, Go With Him Twain."

Striking evidence of the responsiveness of laymen to a frank and convincing presentation of the financial needs of their parish was demonstrated recently at the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Lansdowne, of which the Rev. Dr. Charles E. Tuke is the rector. Following the Sunday morning service all laymen attending were asked to remain for a meeting in the parish house.

Fifty-four laymen attended this meeting. Dr. Tuke's sermon text at the morning service was St. Matthew 5:41 —"and whosoever shall compel thee to go a smile, go with his twain." With this sermon still in their minds the laymen at the parish house meeting were shown that during the past four years the parish had accumulated a deficit of $5,500. Members of the vestry explained in detail how this deficit was incurred and, with a further statement that parish budget for 1935 had been balanced, submitted the whole situation to the assembled group for its consideration.

Then the unusual happened. There was action before discussion. Within less than two minutes $2,400 was pledged towards wiping out the accumulated deficit. Then came the discussion. It all centered on the best and quickest way to liquidate the entire sum. The entire fifty-four volunteered to go out immediately and to begin enlisting the aid of all the other laymen in an effort to obtain pledges within the next two weeks, sufficient to wipe out the entire deficit, the pledges to be paid in monthly installments during the remainder of the year.

Someone remarked that Dr. Tuke's sermon of the morning suggested the possibility of a rallying name for the movement. Almost spontaneously "Second Milers" was adopted, and the entire fifty-four following the adjournment of the meeting divided themselves into smaller groups of two and started on their visitation to other laymen.

Evidence is not lacking that the "Second Milers" may become a permanent laymen's organization in this parish. Since its spontaneous organization, less than ten days ago, approximately $3,600 has been pledged towards liquidation of the parish deficit; more than a score of additional laymen have been enrolled as "Second Milers" and the group has extended its aim and purposes by definitely pledging the support of its members to the acceptance of any service the rector may request of them, individually or collectively, in the work of the parish, including parish visitations, contacting new families, teaching in the Church School, or taking part in any community service in which the rector or the parish may participate.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Ablewhite to Assist Bishop Page.

The Rt. Rev. Hayward S. Ablewhite, D. D., Bishop of Marquette, accepted Bishop Page's invitation to spend two and a half weeks during March and April, and approximately a similar period in May, in the Diocese of Michigan, during which time he will conduct about thirty Confirmation services. Bishop Page finds that visiting 120 parishes and missions during the course of a year, in addition to his administrative duties, makes great demands upon his strength, and while he regrets giving up the visiting of any churches in the diocese, he is grateful to Bishop Ablewhite for his kindness in making it possible to relieve him.

Dean O'Ferrall Visits Grace Church, Utica.

The preacher at the mid-week service on Thursday evening, March 28, in Grace Church, Utica, New York, was be the Very Rev. Kirk B. O'Ferrall, D. D., Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit. Dean O'Ferrall feels more than a usual interest in visiting Grace Church, since it was the church his mother attended.

Questions Folks Are Asking.

A series of Lenten sermons on the general subject, "Questions Folks Are Asking," by the Very Rev. Kirk B. O'Ferrall, D. D., Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, include the following: "Is the Religion of Jesus Outgrown?" "Whither Are We Drifting?" "How Shall We Be Religious?" "Are There any Fixed Moral and Spiritual Standards?" "Of What Eternal Significance is the Cross?" and, on Easter Day, "Why Believe in Immortality?"

New Director of Boy's Work.

Mr. Allan L. Ramsay, of Jackson, Michigan, has been appointed as Director of Boys' Work of the Diocese of Michigan, succeeding the Rev. I. C. Johnson, rector of St. John's Church, Detroit, who resigned at the first of the year. Mr. Ramsay is the son of the Rev. Charles L. Ramsey, rector of St. Paul's, Jackson. He will graduate from Michigan State College in June, but has already undertaken his duties.

Mr. Ramsay has been associated, through camp and Brotherhood of St. Andrew work, with the Boys' Work Department of the Diocese, for a number of years, and last summer acted as assistant resident Director of Camp Chickagami, for older boys. During the ten years that Mr. Johnson acted as Director of Boys' Work, his main objective was to train boys for leadership responsibility. The appointment of Mr. Ramsay as Director of Boys' Work is an excellent demonstration of the value of such a policy and program.

The operation of the two diocesan camps for boys—Camp Frisbie, near Waterford, and Camp Chickagami, north of Alpena—as well as the work of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the Diocese and a general supervision of boys' work in many of the parishes and missions, will come under Mr. Ramsay's direction.

Programs of Music by Adult Choristers.

On Sunday evening, March 31, the Adult Choristers of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, under the direction of Francis A. Mackay, organist and master of the choristers, presented a program of Wagnerian music, including the prayer and finale from Act I of "Lohengrin," "O Sing to God" from "Tannhauser," the "Evening Hymn." They sang the Bach "Passion According to St. Matthew," with orchestra accompaniment as well as organ, on April 7, and Dubois' "Seven Last Words" on April 14.

The Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of Michigan, was the speaker at a parish dinner in Grace Church, Mt. Clemens, on the evening of Tuesday, April 2, marking the tenth anniversary of the erection of the parish house.

Detroit People Anxious to Hear Bishop Stewart.

When the Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop of Chicago, visited Detroit to speak for a week at the Lenten noon-day services of the Detroit Council of Churches, the Church people of Michigan determined to make other opportunities for him to address them. As a consequence, he found himself addressing the March meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in St. John's Church, Detroit, on April 1 (the date having been changed to coincide with his visit) in the afternoon, and the Round Table Fellowship sponsored by the Diocesan Department of Religious Education that evening.

A Woman Addresses Congregation from Pulpit.

At the invitation of the rector of the parish, the Rev. I. C. Johnson, Miss Elizabeth S. Thomas, Diocesan Director of Religious Education, addressed the congregation of St. John's Church from the pulpit at the service on Sunday evening, March 31. Probably the last time a woman has addressed the congregation from the pulpit of an Episcopal Church in Detroit occurred during the lifetime of the late Bishop Charles D. Wiliams, when Miss Maude Royden spoke in St. Paul's Cathedral.

COLLECTS FOR EASTER DAY.

Almighty God, Who through Thine only begotten Son, Jesus Christ, hast overcome death, and opened unto us the gate of everlasting life: we humbly beseech Thee that, as by Thy special grace preventing us, Thou dost put into our minds good desires, so by Thy continual help we may bring the same to good effect, through Jesus Christ our Lord, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost ever one God, world without end. Amen.

O God, Who for our redemption didst give Thine only begotten Son to the death of the Cross, and by His glorious resurrection hast delivered us from the power of our enemy; Grant us so to die daily from sin that we may evermore live with Him in the joy of His Resurrection, through the same Christ our Lord. Amen.

EASTER DAWN.

Blossom Bennett.

Soft breezes stirred the new-born leaves on trees
And flowering shrubs, and filled the morning air
With fragrance borne from lilies of the field;
While earth and sky alike became more fair
As dawn revealed their beauties overcast
With gold and rosy glow. Against the gray
Fast disappearing, countless birds sang forth
Their joy to greet the Resurrection Day.

Unmindful of the loveliness of dawn
Or of the matchless joy that soon should know,
The women, bearing precious spices to
The tomb, spoke softly of their grief. Their slow
Steps told of heavy hearts, for hope was dead.
Amazed, they saw the stone was rolled away;
And trembling, heard the angel say, "Fear not.
The Lord is risen indeed—see where He lay."

Thou Christ, triumphant over sin and death,
Roll back for us the cruel stone of doubt,
The heaviness of dull uncertainty
That mars our lives and keeps the Saviour out.
Speak to our hearts as once Thou didst speak Mary's
Name; that we, though slow to see, may fling
Aside our unbelief, and falling at Thy feet, confess our risen Lord and King.

Power Must Be Used for the Kingdom.

The Church must declare that the power of the Risen Christ is given to men to be used for Kingdom effort and not for selfish use, that the way of the Cross is the way of denial and the way of life. Was not the failure to recognize this fact the thing that was behind much of what was wrong with our religion when we were all plunging blindly on to the day of ruin? We thought Christ was our personal possession, that the Cross was a jewel we might hang about our necks, not a burden we must bear after Him. In Eugene O'Neill's play it is when his hero comes to face the meaning of the Cross that his selfish soul dies within him. The Church must do that for itself. It must make the world do it. Something must die on the Cross before the man or the institution can be saved. Bunyan put that truth in another way in "Grace Abounding": "Forasmuch as the passage was wonderful narrow, even so narrow that I could not but with difficulty enter in thereat, it showed me that none could enter into life but those that were in downright earnest and unless they left this wicked world behind them, for here was only room for body and soul, but not for body and soul and sin." And sin to Bunyan was self and all that the love of self entails. The Kingdom of God has no room for selfish men until they leave their selves behind. When John Loving came to the Cross at last, after a life in which self had been supreme, self died. There is many a Christian who needs a like experience.

There are strange prophets today. Shall we enlarge their company?—Dr. W. L. Brooks, in Presbyterian Banner.

Knowing Him.

"That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection."—Phil, 3: 10.

We are to remember that the resurrection is not merely a historical fact and transcendent miracle and mystery of the Apostolic age. Certainly it is all that. But it is more. It is a moral event, a principle of spiritual energy, as well as a fact of human history. While to those therefore who see Christ only from the outer court of knowledge, and whose faith ends in the bare belief that "He died and rose again according to the Scriptures," the mystery may remain. To those who press into the inner sanctuary of fellowship, praying that they may "know Him, and the power of His resurrection," it will be more and more laid open to them as they advance.—A. J. Gordon.

The Church Is of God.

There is one great truth, among others, that we must never let go: The Church is of God. It is the Body of Christ, not merely an organization, but a living organism. It is here at the will and word of God. It has its imperfections, to be sure, because it is made up of so many imperfect beings. But, it is God's Church, and we are members of it. We must be loyal to it. If the Church is of God, and it is, disloyalty to the Church means disloyalty to God. It means disloyalty to the Son of God who gave Himself for it. Disloyalty is manifested by inattention, inactivity, indifference, infidelity. Let us show our loyalty by attending upon its ordinances, paying to its great program, believing in it as a divine institution, and praying daily God's blessing upon it. Some people can't attend church regularly because of illness or other physical reason; some can't pay liberally because of financial straits; but everybody can pray for the Church and help its work. Whatever may be its shortcomings, we'd rather be found with those who love it and who are loyal to it when Jesus comes back to earth, than to be found with those who abuse it or ignore it.—Exchange.

The Resources of the Soul.

"No man can doubt that if what we call the Christian spirit prevailed the world would be changed. But its power to prevail would be immensely increased if we steadfastly believed that the Christian spirit is not a mere aspiration, but the spirit of a real living and reigning Christ. If Christendom really held and acted upon the conviction that in this Christ, in His spirit, in His rule, the will of God the Supreme Reality is revealed, the world would be transformed. This is the truth of another old, deep, familiar word—'Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His Righteousness, and all these things'—the things men need —'will be added unto you.' In view of these great issues on which the true welfare of our own lives, of our country, of the world depend, I plead that in the coming year and always we should set ourselves towards a recovery of soul.

"You are concerned about prospects of recovery—of health, it may be, or of business, or of work. These are recoveries which are not wholly within your own control. But there is another recovery which is—a recovery of soul. Nothing moves me more than to note the way in which so many who are suffering from lack of work refuse to become embittered or depressed and keep their courage high. They are giving proof that the soul has resources which can overcome untoward circumstance. These resources will gain their full strength and power if the soul finds its way to the true centre of its own world —God Himself dwelling among us and within us in Christ Jesus. You remember what He has said of everyone who gives to Him the lordship of his soul— 'I will liken him unto a wise man which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock.' Build the life of the soul on the rock of this unchanging Reality—God's presence, God's care, God's love."—Archbishop Lang of Canterbury.

The Great Adventure.

Only those are fit to live who do not fear to die; and none are fit to die who have shrunk from the joy of life and the duty of life. Both life and death are parts of the same Great Adventure. Never yet was worthy adventure worthily carried through by the man who put his personal safety first. Never yet was a country worth living in unless its sons and daughters were of that stern stuff which bade them die for it at need; and never yet was a country worth dying for unless its sons and daughters thought of life, not as something concerned only with the selfish evanescence of the individual, but as a link in the great chain of creation and causation, so that each person is seen in his true relations as an essential part of the whole, whose life must be made to serve the larger and continuing life of the whole.

With all my heart I believe in the joy of living; but those who achieve it do not seek it as an end in itself, but as a seized and prized incident of hard work well done and of risk and danger never wantonly courted, but never shirked when duty commands that they be faced. And those who have earned joy, but are rewarded only with sorrow, must learn the stern comfort dear to great souls, the comfort that springs from the knowledge taught in times of iron that the law of worthy living is not fulfilled by pleasure, but by service, and by sacrifice when only thereby can service be rendered.

In America today all our people are summoned to service and sacrifice. Pride is the portion only of those who know bitter sorrow or the foreboding of bitter sorrow. But all of us who give service, and stand ready for sacrifice are the torch-bearers. We run with the torches until we fall, content if we can pass them to the hands of the other runners.—Theodore Roosevelt, in "The Great Adventure".

"I Cannot Lie For Any Man."

A few years since, Baron Morimura, president of one of the great banks of Japan and a commercial leader of that country, landed in America, and with his suite took an apartment in one of the large hotels in San Francisco. Pressed with business cares and desiring to avoid intrusion, he commanded that if visitors wished to see him they should be told he was out. Before long a caller unexpectedly appeared in his presence. The baron was very angry. Upon investigation he ascertained that a chambermaid had disobeyed orders and had acknowledged that he was in. He called for the disobedient servant and severely reprimanded her. She flung at him the reply, "I cannot lie for any man!"

After his anger had subsided, Baron Morimura began to think. He became impressed with the belief that the strength of character indicated by the chambermaid must have been based on Christianity. He said, "Nobody but a Christian would stand for not lying". He commenced to study the Bible and became a secret believer. Finally, he made public confession of his faith, and has been a steady advocate of his Lord from that day to this. It has since been his great joy to preach Jesus all over Japan, while his large influence and gifts have, in numerous ways, been dedicated to the cause of righteousness. So much for the possession of genuine conviction and living up to it!—Witness.

Crooked Spines Made Straight

GREATLY BENEFITED OR ENTIRELY CURED

An Elderly Lady, all bent over, was straightened wonderfully. A Grateful Father writes his daughter had a bad curvature, yet was completely straightened. A Man helpless, unable to stand or walk, was riding horseback and playing tennis within a year. A little child, paralyzed, was playing about the house in 3 weeks. A Doctor, confined to a wheel chair for 8 months time. Thousands of sufferers have found relief, benefit or cure through the PHILO BURT METHOD. Over fifty-nine thousand cases in the past 30 years.

30 DAY'S TRIAL

We will prove its value in your own case. The Philo Burt Appliance is light in weight and comfortable to wear entirely different from the old, torturing, plaster-casts, leather and celluloid jackets or steel braces. Every afflicted person with a weakened, injured, diseased or deformed spine owes it to himself to investigate. Doctors recommend it, and the price within reach of all.

THE LAMB IS THE LIGHT.

In Memory of My Christian Mother.

By Cassie Moncure Lyne.

Flowers return with the message of Spring,
Blue-birds and robins are now on the wing;
Daffodils, gay yellow, nod in gentle breeze;
Powdered with bloom are the old orchard trees;

Willows, lush green . . . and dogwood so white,
Like a fairy-wand's touch to earth bring delight;
But where are our DEAD . . . in graves tucked away;
Why can't they return when Nature holds sway?

Are they forgot by a dear loving God,
Left only to mold beneath somber sod;
While violets purple sprinkle the dell;
Where are our DEAD; . . . can anyone tell?

What comfort is chalice of magnolia bloom,
If fragrance of Memory is all at the Tomb;
Then answer made echo . . . out of Bush flaming red;
"I am . . . the Great I AM" . . . that is enough said!

Look at the blossoms that no one can count;
That is the Sermon . . . there on the MOUNT:
If God can so cloathe the lily of the field,
Who can picture what Paradise has to reveal?

Then, Doubt, like the stone rolls away, while tears
Turn to Rainbows of Promise . . . since Death has no fears;
All Life is transition . . . like birds leave the nest,
So the Spirit Immortal, in the grave, does not rest.

But with re-birth in glory . . beyond mortal sight . . .
Wings upward . . . and onward . . . to Eternal Light;
For Spirit of God . . . that took shape of the Dove,
Guides souls of the departed . . . where all is LOVE.

Victorious Life of Love.

Grace French Smith.

The life upon a cross, not crowning fame,
The Christ forsaken even by a friend,
Superb in death—few seem to comprehend
His gift of love upon that wooden frame!
To teach unselfish love has been His aim;
In leading man to God, He would transcend.
All greed and hate—His life the dividend—
The power of love became a vital flame.

Not gold amassed on aching backs of men,
Nor power enslaving men at any price;
Not carven marble held in velvet moss,
Nor snatching fame from life by sword or pen.
The life of victory glows in sacrifice
When love and service flood the daily cross.

A Costly Experiment.

Said a minister to his young people: "I want you to spend fifteen minutes every day praying for missions; but I warn you, it will be a very costly experiment". "Costly?" they asked in surprise. "Yes, costly," he answered. "When Carey began to pray for the conversion of the world, it cost him himself, and it cost those who prayed with him very much. Brainerd prayed for the dark-skinned savages, and, after two years of blessed work, it cost him his life. Two students in Mr. Moody's summer school began to pray the Lord to send forth more laborers in His harvest, and lo! it is going to cost our country five thousand young men and women who have, in answer to their prayer, pledged themselves to the work. You will find that you cannot pray for this work and withhold your labor or your money, or your life itself."—Ex.

AN EASTER VISION.

Miss Anne Reiley Nesom.

The early sunshine smote my eyes
And clear within I heard, "Arise,
This is Easter Day; what do you see?"
A wonderful sight, a flowering tree
Whose boughs but yesterday were bare;
"Oh, Master of Life, in this vision rare,
I see the Angel from Thy tomb,
With a message of joy for a world of gloom."

Bobby and Betty Greet Easter.

Verna Grisier McCully.

When Bobby and Betty came in from play their mother handed each of them an envelope.

"Where did they come from?" asked Bobby.

"The postman left them here," answered his mother.

Quickly Bobby and Betty tore open the envelopes. Inside of each was a pretty Easter card.

"From Doris," read Betty. "Why, we were over there just this afternoon and she didn't say a word about sending us a card."

"She probably wanted to surprise us," said Bobby. "And I guess she certainly did. They are sweet, aren't they? Let's see yours again."

"Yes, they are sweet," answered Betty. "But we ought to send Doris some, too. And we haven't a bit of money to buy any. What can we do?"

"We made a valentine," said Bobby. "Why couldn't we make some Easter cards? I'll go ask mother." Bobby skipped into the kitchen and came running back in less than two and a half winks.

"Yes, mother says we can make Easter cards. She'll help us in just a few minutes. She says we can hunt up the things."

"What will we need?" asked Betty.

"Well, some white cardboard or yellow or lavender, 'cause those are Easter colors. I think maybe we have some, too. At least some heavy paper. And she says to get the wool yarn left from that slumber-robe she crocheted for grandmother. We want yellow and white. And some glue and a pencil and the scissors and crayons and that must be about all."

By the time their mother was ready to help them Bobby and Betty had all the materials at hand. First they cut the cardboard and heavy paper into sizes suitable for Easter cards. Four inches by five is a good size, but they can be either larger or smaller than this, such as three and a half inches by five or four by six. And they can be used either up and down or crosswise, according to the designed.

"Now," began mother, "you must plan some designs on plain white paper marked the size of the cards. You can draw bunnies or chicks or little ducks. But make them fairly large, and don't put too many on a card."

Betty drew a design of a duck swimming on some water. Bobby drew a plump little rabbit sitting up.

"What next?" asked Bobby.

"Next you carefully copy your designs on the cardboard." Bobby and Betty did this, sketching them first very lightly in pencil so that they could erase easily if they made a mistake. Even when the outlines were finished they did not mark them very heavily because the pencil lines were not supposed to show at all after the cards were finished.

Following their mother's instructions, Bobby cut some of the white wool yarn into tiny wee little bits, while Betty cut some of the yellow the same way.

"Now," said her mother, "spread some of the glue all over the shape of the little duck. But be very careful to put the glue inside the lines you have drawn, following them exactly. And don't put any glue on where the beak is to go. And no glue on the water."

Betty very carefully spread the glue on, using the end of a toothpick for places like the pointed tail, where a brush or a spreader would be too big. When this was done, her mother showed her how to sprinkle the tiny furry bits of cut yarn over the glue-covered surface. Betty dropped it on quite thick, then gently pressed it down, shaking the card so that pieces falling outside the gluey surface would fall off. She continued this until the duck was entirely covered with soft fuzzy yarn down.

Following almost the same instructions, Bobby began his rabbit. But before he put on any glue he cut out two long white paper ears. He had to try them out to see if they were the right size. Then he tinted them pink at the tips. The one which was to belong to the far side of the rabbit's head he fastened down by putting a speck of glue at the base of the ear and sticking this to the head. Then he spread glue over the rest of the rabbit except its ears and tail. On this surface he sprinkled bits of white yarn and pressed them down. After the rabbit was entirely covered he pasted on the second ear, putting it on top of the yarn, and attaching it just at the base. The other ear was now underneath the yarn, which made it look as though it were on the other side of the head.

After this Bobby made a little pompom of white yarn, just as he would have made a tassel, winding it round and round a small piece of cardboard, tying it together at one side and cutting it at the other. This was for the tail. At first it was much too big, so he cut it off bit by bit until it was the proper size for so small a bunny. Last he pasted it in place.

"It ought to have an eye," said Bobby.

"A bead would be just the thing," said his mother. So Betty scampered off and soon came back with the little box of beads. Bobby chose a pink one for his rabbit, because white bunnies always have pink eyes. He pasted this cautiously on the head among the snips of white yarn.

"It ought to stand on something," suggested Betty.

Bobby agreed, so he drew a groundline with green crayon and put a few pink and lavender flowers at one end. Above this in green he wrote, "Easter Greetings". If Bobby and Betty had had no crayons they could have put in the ground and flowers with water-color paints, and printed the letters in ink.

"But I haven't finished my duckie," said Betty. "What shall I do next, mother?"

"Next you cut a little wing-shape from some yellow paper. If you can't find any yellow you can use white, and color it with crayons or water-colors. Then cut two little long narrow shapes for the bill."

Betty did this. She pasted it on top of the yarn at the duck's side. And the upper and lower bill she pasted where the mouth would be. Then she picked out a little black bead for an eye. After that with blue and green crayon she marked wavy lines to represent water, and last, wrote in the greeting in dark blue, which said, "Best Easter Wishes."

"Aren't they cute?" exclaimed Betty. And certainly they were, for the little duck and the white bunny looked almost real.

"Let's make some more," said Bobby.

"Let's," agreed Betty. "I'm going to make a bunny this time. Are you going to make a duck?"

"No, a little chicken. Maybe two or three."

Betty cut a card from some heavy lavender paper, then marked a white paper the same size. On the white she drew a rabbit hopping along in a hurry. She copied this on the lavender card. Then she cut out the two ears and tinted them pink at the tips. She pasted on the one meant for the far side of the head, putting the glue just at the base of the ear, so that it would look real. She then covered the rest of the bunny with glue, sprinkled on some bits of white yarn and pressed them down just as she had done with the duck. Like Bobby, she made a wee pompom tail. After this she pasted on the top ear. At last she glued in place a small pink bead eye. Along the bottom of the card she drew a ground-line in green crayon and made some blades of grass. At the top she printed in deep purple crayon, "Best Wishes for Easter."

Bobby and Betty, after admiring the finished cards, ran gayly to the mail box, picturing the surprise and pleasure their friends would have when they received them. And you can rightly guess that they thought they were the prettiest cards they had ever seen, and begged Bobby and Betty to show them how to make some, too.

For the Southern Churchman.

Our Risen Lord.

Arianna Randolph Wight.

Joseph and Nicodemus stood looking towards the Hill Golgotha. It was at the time of the Crucifixion. "I was a coward and would not go to the meeting of the Council," said Joseph, "because I feared to vote against the Chief Priests, and I could not condemn this innocent man to death." "And I, too," said Nicodemus. "I was absent from the meeting. One night I talked to this Man, and His words are the inspiration of my life." The two men stared at the three crosses outlined against the gray sky, and said: "Now by our silence we have betrayed Him."

It was not too late to do something for Jesus, and late that night Joseph gathered his handsome chariot—he was a very rich man—and drove to the Governor's castle where, from Pilate, he begged the body of Jesus. Together, he and Nicodemus wrapped it in snowy white linen and anointed the body with myrrh, aloes and spices. Myrrh, which is taken from a leaf whose color varies from pale yellow to a reddish brown, was an antiseptic. Aloes are taken from a rare wood; and the spices were a sign of wealth and royal favor. Jesus' body was placed in Joseph's new tomb, carved out of exquisite and expensive stone, and situated in the midst of a garden. The Orientals take great pride in their gardens. On hot and dusty days they have their family dinners there. These gardens are enclosed within hedges, and inside there are winding paths, running canals, arbors under which to sit, and Almond and other beautiful shade trees. In the Old Testament Isaiah had said that He (Jesus) would make His grave with the rich at His death, because He had done no violence; neither was there any deceit in His mouth.

On the third day after this, while it was still dark and the world was sleeping, Mary Magdalene and the other Marys came to the tomb bringing spices. They found the stone rolled away, and the body of Jesus had disappeared. Mary Magdalene hurried away and met Peter and John, and they also ran to the tomb. The found the napkin that had been bound about His head in one part of the tomb, and His clothes in another. Peter and John returned home, but Mary stayed there, weeping. Two angels with radiant faces, dressed in snowy white, sitting one at the head and one at the foot of the tomb, spoke kindly to her: "Woman, why weepest thou?" She answered: "Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him." She continued to weep. Another person asked her: "Why weepest thou?" The tears dimmed her vision. She thought this was the gardener, and said unto him: "Sir, if thou hast borne Him hence, tell me where thou hast laid Him and I will take Him away." The Voice said: "Mary!" and now she recognized it as The Master, and said: "Master!" Mary Magdalene had been an ill woman, and Jesus had cured her of her infirmity. This infirmity had been something like a nervous hysteria, and she had been completely cured. The courage of The Twelve had been broken by the approaching death of Jesus, but Mary Magdalene's courage never wavered. She was one of the last at the cross, and the first at the grave, and she has the honor of being the first person that our Lord had appeared to in His risen body.

At a later time the disciples were fishing in the Sea of Galilee one beautiful spring morning, looking out over the waves on which was reflected the glory of the sun. All night long they had fished and caught nothing, and early in the morning Jesus appeared to them on shore and told them to cast out their nets again. They did so, and this time it was so heavy with fishes they could hardly drag it ashore. They cooked the fish over coals of fire, and Jesus served them bread and fish. After they had had breakfast Jesus and Peter were having a confidential talk. Jesus said: "Simon, lovest thou me?" Peter replied: "Thou knowest that I love Thee," and Jesus answered: "Feed my sheep." Three times the question was asked and answered. Jesus had asked the question in terms of deepest love. Peter answered in a lesser degree of love. Once before he had boldly declared that, though all men forsake Him, he never would; then three times within an hour he had denied his Lord. Now he would wait to prove it with his life rather than by his words. Jesus knew how Peter felt, and He did not want him to brood over his sin, but to go out and do something for somebody else. Feeding His lambs is the only way we can do things for the Master.

For forty days our Risen Lord walked and talked with His disciples. He told them to go and tell all nations about Him, but not until the Spirit had led them; they must wait for the Spirit. For the Holy Ghost would come to the world to guide them and be their daily companion. This was Jesus' last command. No educational system; no formal service; only to be under the personal guidance of the Holy Ghost was the way Jesus told His disciples to live. He led them out opposite Bethany, and a cloud received Him up out of their sight. Two men dressed in snowy white, with radiant faces, said: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? The same Jesus shall so come unto you in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven."

Charlotte Ann's Yellow Beads.

One bright spring day Charley was busy painting the bird house he had made. He gave a last stroke with his paint brush and drew a long breath.

"There," he said to Lena, who, with her doll Charlotte Ann, stood looking on. "I will leave it in the sun to dry, and then Father is going to help me put it up in the tree. If the bluebirds do not like this house they will be hard to please."

Lena gazed admiringly at the little white bird cottage with its glistening red roof and green shutters.

"Charlotte Ann would like to live in a house like that," she said. "While you have been making the bird houses I have strung her a necklace. Grandmother gave me the beads. See how yellow they are. They shine like gold. They are part of a necklace she had when she was a little girl, but she lost some of the beads bit by bit, until they are all that are left."

"They are pretty," said Charley, "and I suppose Charlotte Ann will be very proud of them, but not as proud as the bluebirds will be when they live in my house."

Then the two children ran away to play.

The next day they came to see if the paint was dry on the bird house. Charley went all over it carefully to see if there was a rough spot, and Lena and Charlotte Ann looked at it all they wished. Lena even put Charlotte Ann's head inside the tiny door that she might see how it looked. "Don't you wish you were a bluebird, Charlotte Ann?" she asked. "Then you might live in the bird house."

Within a day or two a happy pair of bluebirds came to the little house and, after looking it over carefully, moved in. Charley watched them all his spare time, but Lena was very unhappy, for somehow or other Charlotte Ann had lost her necklace of pretty yellow beads. Lena had hunted everywhere, down by the brook, in the pasture woods, all through the yard around the house, but no yellow beads were to be found.

"I just know the hens ate them," she said mournfully; "they probably thought they were grains of corn."

The summer went on. The bluebirds raised their families and flew away, and at last it was cold weather. Father and Charley took the pretty little house down from the tree to clean it out and put it away until spring.

"I will repaint it," he said, as he went away to get something to clean the house out with.

Lena had Charlotte Ann in her arms. "Let's dust the house while he is gone," she said to Charlotte Anne. "There's is an old nest in there. Charlotte Ann, you may pull it out."

She pushed Charlotte Ann's hand into the little door and drew the nest out.

"Oh! Oh! Oh!" she cried, for there, shining in the sunlight, woven in and out among the twigs and straw, were the yellow beads."

"Charley, Charley!" Lena called, "come and see what your bluebirds left behind them for Charlotte Ann and me."

Charley hurried to her. When he saw the little nest with its trimmings of yellow beads, he gave a whistle of surprise.

"How did those bluebirds ever get hold of Charlotte Ann's beads?" he asked.

Lena was carefully picking the nest to pieces to get at the beads. "I think I know," she said. "Last spring when you painted the bird house I pushed Charlotte Ann's head through the door, so that she could look inside. The necklace must have come unclasped and fallen inside."

"And the bluebirds borrowed it for the summer to make their nest pretty," laughed Charley, "and now you have your beads back again, none the worse for their experience."

"Yes," answered Lena, "and it is not every doll that has a necklace that was once part of a bird's home. Charlotte Ann should be a very proud doll indeed."—Emma Florence Bush.

Potato Race Game.

Equipment—Two baskets or other containers, six or eight potatoes, and two large spoons.

Game—the baskets are placed about two yards apart. In line from each basket at intervals of a yard or so mark small spots or circles. The potatoes are placed on the spots. Divide the players in equal groups. The leader of each group begins the game by picking the potatoes up one at a time, with his spoon, and placing them carefully in the basket at the starting point. Should a player drop a potato he must pick it up with his spoon before returning for another. When all potatoes are in the basket the second player is touched off and he replaces the potatoes on the spots one at a time and touches the third player, and so on.

The race is won by the group whose last player places the potatoes in the required formation and returns to the starting point.

Small apples or other objects may be substituted for potatoes. Sharp sticks may be used instead of spoons allowing the players to spear the object and carry it on the stick to the base.—Cumberland Presbyterian.

GRANDADDY LONGLEGS.

(Who is really quite remarkable.)

Old Grandaddy Longlegs I think is attractive
And, all of his eight legs are certainly active.
He walks, and he runs, but it's never a bother
For him to know which leg comes after the other.

Now, Grandaddy Longlegs is such a small being
That but for his eight legs he isn't worth seeing;
And, if he should ever lose two, three, or four legs,
The wonderful thing, he can always grow more legs.

He must be a wise one—that goes without saying,
For he always knows where our cows go a-straying.
And, though he's related to cruel old spider,
We truthfully state, he's an angel beside her.

—Maude McGehee Hankins, in Nashville Tennesseean.

Cots and Cows.—"Mothers in America, putting their kiddies to bed in white enamelled cribs after a story about Bushy Tail and Hazel Squirrel, will feel special tenderness for the children in the "untainted" homes at Chandkuri, India. These will have no beds at all except with our help. Twenty iron cots, which are needed for children still sleeping on a stone floor will cost $175—about $9 apiece.

Much more important for little children, even than beds, are good cows. Only those who have seen the wretched skeletons of an Indian village herd, and drunk the dirty watered milk of the village milkman, can know how important: Chandkuri has been very happy in the gift of a small herd of their own from this Mission. But last year hoof and mouth disease and injured udders made havoc in the Chandkuri herd. For replacement and for fresh breeding the homes urgently need $800."

Dr. Heiser, of the Rockefeller Foundation, in an address while in Australia said, "Work among Lepers is one of the finest jewels in the diadem of Christianity."

DEATHS

RESOLUTIONS

adopted by the District of Columbia Chapter of the American Guild of Organists at its monthly meeting on April 1, 1935, on the sudden and untimely passing away of Mr. Edgar Priest, March 30, 1935:

WHEREAS, MR. EDGAR PRIEST was one of the founders of the District of Columbia Chapter of the American Guild of Organists, a former officer and a loyal member throughout the twenty-five years of its existence; and

WHEREAS, he possessed a high order of musicianship which he generously shared with his pupils, choristers and all who touched his life in this field of activity; and

WHEREAS, his high conception of the mission of sacred music, always evident in his spiritual and masterly achievement as an organist and choirmaster is a stimulus to the members of this chapter, many of whom were his scholars, to pledge themselves to constant nurture of their own talents, ever striving to attain that goal which he had earned at so costly a price; and

WHEREAS, by his exalted Christian character he was at all times an inspiration and blessing;

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, That the Districst of Columbia Chapter of the American Guild of Organists express here its deep gratitude for the life and influence of Mr. Priest, its profound sense of loss in his removal from our midst, sympathy for his family and all who are bereft by his going, and a prayer for his continued growth in the love and service of his Lord and Master.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Mrs. Priest, to the authorities of Washington Cathedral and to the important music publications in this country and England, and that they be spread upon the minutes of this chapter.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

the Advent Offerings of the Diocese for 1933 and 1934.

The annual meeting of the Church Mission of Help in the Diocese of Connecticut, will be held at the Parish House of Christ Church Cathedral on Wednesday, April 3. Bishop Budlong and Dr. Mark May will be the speakers.

F. Appleton.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Francis Darnell Daley was instituted as rector of St. Luke's Church, Altoona, Pa., recently. Six hundred persons were present at the institution. The Bishop of Harrisburg preached the sermon, and the keys of the church were presented by the senior warden, Mr. E. M. Fleming. E. C. Knepp, secretary of the vestry, read the Letter of Institution. Among those who attended were two Jewish rabbis, two Lutheran ministers, two Methodist ministers, and a Reformed minister. Several of the diocesan clergy were also present. The wardens and vestry of the parish gave a reception for the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Daley the preceding evening, which was attended by more than five hundred persons.

Institutions.

The Rev. Geoffrey M. Horsfield was instituted rector of St. Paul's Church, Savannah, Georgia, on Sunday, April 7, by Bishop Reese. The Rev. George W. Ferguson, who has been locum tenens of St. Paul's Church pending the arrival of Fr. Horsfield, preached the institution sermon.

The Rev. Thomas E. Dudney, recently of Ormand Beach, Florida, has accepted a call to become rector of All Saints' Church, Winter Park, Florida, and enters his new duties on April 28. Mr. Dudney is a son-in-law of the Rev. Jas. G. Glass, D. D., a former dean of St. Luke's Cathedral, Orlando, Florida.

Clerical Changes.

The Rev. E. R. Carter, Jr., formerly in charge of churches in Lunenburg and Charlotte Counties in Southern Virginia, has accepted a call to St. Luke's Church, South Richmond, Va., effective on Easter Day.

The Rev. Frederick W. Leech, formery assistant to the vicar at Grace Chapel, New York City, has become assistant at St. Andrew's Church, Ann Arbor, Mich.

The Rev. George S. Richards, formerly assistant at Incarnation Chapel, New York City, is priest in charge of All Saints' Church, Atlantic City, N. J. Address, 2 South Delancey Place.

The Rev. Donald J. Campbell, assistant at St. Paul's, New Haven, has accepted the rectorship of the Redeemer, Providence, succeeding the Rev. John I. Byron.

The Rev. A. F. Roebuck, formerly assistant at Grace Church, Lawrence, Mass., has accepted a call to St. Mary's Church, Portsmouth, R. I., effective shortly after Easter.

The Rev. Peter E. Spehr, formerly rector of St. Mary's Church, Webster, South Dakota, has taken the rectorship of Christ Church, Sidney, Nebr., effective April 15.

Dean Bonell, founder and long the head of St. John's College, Greeley, Colorado, has resigned.

The Rev. Edwin S. Appleyard, formerly assistant to the Archdeacon of Madison, Lancaster, Wis., is vicar of Immanuel Parish, and St. Stephen's Mission, Racine, Wis.

The Rev. Edward Bull, formerly rector of St. Andrew's Church, Walden, N. Y., is chaplain of St. Elizabeth's Chapel, Eagle Valley, and of the CCC camps and institutions, Bear Mountain, N. Y. Address, Spruce Cottage, Eagle Valley, via Sterlington, N. Y.

The Rev. Frederick Wall Eberlein, formerly assistant at the Church of the Intercession of All Saints, and vicar in charge of St. Olaf's Mission, Stevens Point, Wis., has become priest in charge of St. Augustine's Church, Rhinelander, Wis.

The Rev. Harry Kroll Hemkey, formerly vicar at St. Andrew's Church, Valparaiso, Ind., is priest in charge of St. John's Church, New Rochelle, and St. Andrew's Church, Hartsdale, N. Y. Address, 11 Wilmot Road, New Rochelle, N. Y.

The Rev. Henry J. Simpson, deposed at his own request in 1922, was restored to the ministry on March 30, by the Bishop of Southern Ohio. The Rev. Mr. Simpson is serving in the Diocese of Michigan as missionary in charge of St. Andrew's, Flint; St. John's, Otter Lake, and as rector of Grace Church, Lapeer. Address, Flint, Mich.

The Rev. Hervey C. Parke has resigned as vicar of the Church of the Angels, Pasadena, Calif. (L. A.), due to ill health. Adress until June 18, Eden Hotel, Rome, Italy, then Amherst, Mass.

Preaching and Missions.

The Rev. Shirley C. Hughson, superior of the Order of Holy Cross, was the preacher Monday, April 15, at the Chapel of the Good Shepherd of the General Theological Seminary.

Bishop Ward preached each Tuesday during Lent at the Cathedral in Erie, all our churches in the city combining for the service. There is neither choir nor offering, but just a simple service with congregational singing and the address by the bishop. Everyone seems to like the idea.

"Daddy Hall" famous son of Alabama and Bishop of Wall Street, spent his winter vacation in Alabama and preached in numerous places, to the great delight of his friends.

Dr. Larkin W. Glazebrook, lay missioner of the Commission on Evangelism, has held preaching missions at the Church of the Ascension, Montgomery; All Saints, Homewood, and St. Paul's, Selma. He will return in May for Missions in Troy, Dothan, Ensley and West End, Birmingham.

Dean DeOvies of Atlanta held a most inspiring mission at Christ Church, Mobile, the first week in February; this was followed by a celebration of the Rev. Mr. Kirchhoffer's tenth anniversary, a reception at the chapter house being featured by the gift of a lamp and a purse of money, and a service of thansksgiving when Bishop McDowell preached.

Large Bequests to Churches.

John Russell Van Derlip of Minneapolis, Churchman and lawyer, died on March 16. He was for many years senior warden of St. Mark's Church, and was active in church life. He made very generous bequests to various church institutions totalling $170,000.

Off for Denmark.

The Rev. Samuel Shoemaker, rector of Calvary Church, New York, sailed recently to attend meetings of the Oxford Groups (Buchmanites) now being held in Denmark. There was a persistent rumor about that Mr. Shoemaker had resigned as rector of Calvary in order to devote all his time to the movement, but it is steadfastly denied by officers of the parish. Others attending the meetings in Denmark from America are the Rev. and Mrs. William L. Wood of Cambridge, Mass., and Boshop Logan Roots, missionary bishop to China.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

"Lift your head, poor penitent,
Mercy is with judgment blent;
Christ is risen to bestow
Just the peace you long to know."

"No man but One has ever lived whose acts were not smaller than himself."

Better be a true man on the side of wrong than a false one on the side of right.—F. W. Robertson.

The first word, when the tomb was newly rent,
Was to a grieving woman gently said;
With two sad men He walked, the day far spent,
And how their heavy hearts within them burned,
As comforted into the inn they turned,
And He was known to them in breaking bread!

—Caroline Hazard.

When we have exhausted our store of endurance,
When our strength has failed ere the day is half done,
When we reach the end of our hoarded resources,
Our Father's full giving is only begun.

"All the endowments which we possess are divine deposits entrusted to us for the very purpose of being distributed for the good of our neighbor. Every one owes himself to his neighbors, and the only limit of his beneficence is the failure of his means."

The Gospel is the redeeming power of God brought to us through Jesus the Christ. But no group of redeemed men can be satisfied unless they do their utmost to produce, through the Gospel, a redeemed social, political, and economic life for the world.

After nineteen hundred years the same
Still clings, and we have not made good the loss
That outraged faith has entered in His Name.

—L. A. Robinson.

"On the Cross God was not demanding something; God was giving something; God was giving everything."

All night had shout of men, and cry
Of woeful women filled His way;
Until that noon of sombre sky
On Friday, clamour and display
Smote Him; no solitude had He,
No silence, since Gethsemane.

To every man there openeth
A Way, and Ways, and a Way.
And the High Soul climbs the High Way
And the Low Soul gropes the Low;
And in between, on the misty flats,
The rest drift to and fro.
But to every man there openeth
A High Way and a Low,
And every man decideth
The Way his Soul should go.

—John Oxenham.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

DURHAM CATHEDRAL

At length, St. Cuthbert made unmistakable signs that he desired to rest for all time at Dunhelm, the present Durham. A shelter of boughs was hastily constructed; the makeshift beginner of a series of erections, their culmination being the grand Cathedral of Durham, begun in 1093.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

"THE CHALLENGE."

Mr. Editor:

Will you be good enough to give me enough space to make a statement in regard to "The Challenge Effort" in the Diocese of Virginia for $25,000.00? General Convention, because of lack of funds, decided to give up a part of the General Church's missionary work, valued at $386,000.00. The Convention, because of the vision of some of its members, voted to challenge the membership of our great Church to do something about halting this actual retreat of the Church's first line of advance, which had been won at great cost in sacrifice of money and even of life.

The Challenge was passed on to the Dioceses. The Diocese of Virginia accepted the Challenge to restore the segment of the abandoned salient represented by the cut in the appropriation to St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School at Lawrenceville, Virginia. To make this restoration would cost $6,500.00.

After starting out to organize for this effort, Virginia decided that it would make one effort to secure this amount and the amount needed to keep its own line of battle intact. To do the latter it would cost $18,000.00—$5,000.00 to complete its promise to the General Church and $13,000.00 to care for its own missionary work. Add $500.00 to these sums for expenses and we have one big "Challenge" of $25,000.00.

Will the membership of the Diocese of Virginia do nothing about this matter of letting St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School be crippled and letting the already cut salaries of their missionaries be cut further? This is "The Challenge". To meet the Challenge, members are asked to give on Whitsunday as generously as possible. Without special effort we should hope to raise about $5,000.00 in this way. Where is the other $20,000.00 to come from? From those who are doing all that is expected of them for Church and community enterprises, but who are willing to give of their extra giving ability to this cause. Such people will give, if convinced that the cause is worthy. Therefore, they must be solicited personally. This is not an every member, but a limited canvass. It means on the part of solicitors and solicited the exhibition of some of those qaulities of the members of the early Church who thought it a glory to make sacrifice in serving the Lord Jesus by preserving His Church for future generations.

All parishes have been asked to take a Whitsunday offering for "The Challenge". All pledges are to count on the Whitsunday offering of the parish of the pledger. The effort will be made May 19 through June 2. The Diocese is divided into eleven districts, with a large place as center. It is desired to have a mass meeting at the beginning of a week's campaign. The first mass meeting will be in the Alexandria District, and the last on May 26 in Richmond. The chairman of "The Challenge" Campaign in the Diocese of Virginia is

Yours faithfully,
L. Carter Harrison.

Piece of Church History Honor to Virginia.

Mr. Editor:

Will you not please find space for the following quotation from the late Bishop Whittle's address to the annual Council of the Diocese of Virginia, in the year 1879?

"In Brunswick County a devoted lady (Mrs. Pattie Buford) by simply manifesting the spirit and following the example of the blessed Saviour, has so gained the confidence of the colored people that, by means of her influence, an organized body, composed of a number of preachers and of several thousand members, has asked to be received into communion with our Church. Last summer the Rev. Dr. Dashield was sent by the executive missionary committee to confer with these people, and more recently the Rev. Drs. Dashield and Weddell were appointed for the same purpose. I give their interesting report in full."

Rev. Dr. Packhard, of the Virginia Seminary, chairman of the Committee on the State of the Church, in his report, said:

"The remarkable work in Brunswick and adjoining counties, under Mrs. F. E. Buford, has awakened great hope as to our being able to reach on a large scale, and to influence for good, this class of our population. Through the efforts of this modest and refined churchwoman, under God, we call attention to the fact that an entire congregation, called Zion Union Apostolic Church, consisting of their Bishop, more than twenty (20) preachers and about 2,000 communicants, is seeking to be placed under the care of our Church. When it is considered what an amazing work (unaided and alone except by her Heavenly Father's help) among these people has been done by this devoted servant of God, can we not take courage and hope that at last an open door and effectual has been opened to us in the direction of a people whom we have too much neglected?"

This is a piece of history which is an honor to the Virginia Church. James S. Russell was the secretary and compiler of the minutes of this organization. Through Mrs. Buford, he was the first one to offer himself for the ministry. When he came to Petersburg to prepare for holy orders, he brought with him a little prayer book and hymnal combined, given him by Mrs. Buford. He boarded at my father's house, and I stood by, in St. Stephen's Church, and with my own eyes witnessed his confirmation by Bishop Whittle. Bishop Whittle ordained him both deacon and priest. At the very organization of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, Bishop Randolph appointed him Archdeacon, and he remained such to the day of his translation. Mrs. Buford was one, but preeminently such, of many Southern women who lovingly and devotedly gave themselves in work among the colored people. With the passing of Archdeacon Russell, Mrs. Buford should not be forgotten.

And, in passing, I might add, the logical place for the Bishop Payne Divinity School, is not Raleigh, but Lawrenceville. It was started for the express purpose of the theological education of James S. Russell. No two men have done more for the advancement of the Church among negroes than Bishop Whittle and James Solomon Russell. Both of them were born in Mecklenburg County, the heart of the "black-belt". The St. Paul School and the Bishop Payne should be linked together and stand in the heart of the "Black-belt" as a witness and a testimony. Upon the soil of Virginia that school of the prophets should ever remain.

The Fifty Days.

The new pamphlet issued by The Forward Movement should enable the Church to make use of a season that in our country has been too long neglected. We have become so used to speaking of "Low Sunday" as if the whole program of the Church was at an end until the next Fall season opened that, almost unconsciously, even clergy with a vision have not expected much enthusiasm, and not expecting have received little or nothing.

Already many have commented on the fact that the new pamphlet is superior to the Lenten leaflet, though for our own part we feel that the Lenten one was needed in every way and accomplished its purpose when it was used.

Possibly our climate has had a great deal to do with our neglect of the fifty days. In England, where our Mother Church seems able to make much more of the great days and seasons, the social life of the capital is in full swing and it is natural for the churches to keep up a full program. With us, much of our country has entered hot Summer days and Spring has been given over to little besides school commencements. Even leading rectors of large city churches have been known to begin vacation on May 1 in ultra prosperous days!

But those days are gone forever. The Forward Movement realizes that the great need of Christians is to so deepen discipleship and strengthen faith that as important a season as the fifty days will really mean living the Easter of The Risen Lord in every relationship of man. Whitsunday may have been the birthday of the Church, but to many of us in America, it has just been a queer old-fashioned name and Whitsunday Communion instead of being a climax in a great season, has just been another day when thoughtlessly we could stay away from church as conveniently as at any other time.

If The Forward Movement accomplishes nothing except to point out the lost opportunities of Churchmen, it will have accomplished a great deal. That we have made poor use of fine traditions is evident. That the majority of our people are ignorant of spiritual truths and spiritual power is too well known. That they will respond to dignified and reasonable programs of Bible reading and meditation is attested to by the success in many parishes of the Lenten leaflet. The clergy must lead, but The Forward Movement is a laymen's movement also, and without the enthusiasm of the laity nothing will be accomplished. Again we have reason to be grateful to Bishop Hobson and his Commission.

Parishes and Summer Schools.

We again approach the time when various Summer schools and conferences will have their annual sessions. And again we are astounded at the great indifference evident in parish after parish towards this fine movement. These schools have accomplished so much in actual results and have contributed to such an increased interest in parishes where they have been supported that we wonder that more support has not been given.

Just what is the greatest contribution of such institutions to the life of the Church would be a question hard to answer. To many the demonstration over a period of days of real Christian living would seem to be their greatest accomplishment. Young people who had thought of the spiritual life as unattractive and queer, have had demonstrated to them that it can be the happiest and most natural way of living. A rule of life and a regular day with proper recreation as well as proper periods for prayer and meditation have opened the eyes of many of our healthy young people to the real possibilities of religion.

To others the chance to really learn something about the Church and her methods is the chief reason for a Summer school. Of course, there has been criticism of some of the instruction. In the early days of the Summer conference the staff was often by necessity chosen from those who were easily available. But in the ensuing years the thought and planning that has been put into the program of our institutions has been remarkable. Only those who have sat with program committees of such schools as Wellesley, Blue Mountain and Sewanee, can know the careful planning and the careful regard paid to modern educational methods. We can be sure today that in a well run Summer school we can trust the teaching staff, because it will be the best that can be assembled.

Of course, there are those short and smaller conferences that are doing much good. They cannot, because of lack of resources, equal the larger conferences. But if people can only afford a very few days for attendance, they serve admirably as institutions that awaken possibilities in church workers.

What these fine institutions need is better support from the parishes. Surely a little money appropriated in the budget for scholarships to these schools will come back in a thousand ways in renewed allegiance and intelligent lay leadership. We can think of no other investment that will pay such great dividends.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Meaning of the Word "Catholic".

The Church of England Newspaper, April 5, 1935.

The Bishop of Gloucester (Dr. A. C. Headlam) has the following interesting note in his Diocesan Magazine:—

"I have been asked to write something about the meaning of the word 'Catholic'. In the Prayer Book we describe the Church as Catholic. That means to say that it is the Church for the whole world. The term 'The Catholic Church' grew up originally to imply the Christian Church, which was for all nations, in contrast to the Jewish Church, which was only for the people of the Jews. And then later, the term began to be used of those customs which were used everywhere, and therefore might rightly be described as catholic.

"At the present day the term is used often very incorrectly. It is used by the members of the Roman Church to describe themselves, and to claim that they are only the true Church. As a very large part of the Christian world which displays equal spiritual power is not included, that claim is obviously incorrect. Then it is sometimes used for all churches which are Episcopal. That quite clearly is equally incorrect. It is used by a particular section in the Church of England who claim that they are the only Catholics in the Church. That is obviously ridiculous. It is used often for a great many customs which are only adopted partially in the Church.

"If the term 'Catholic' means universal, then the things which are Catholic are such things as the Bible, the Nicene Creed, and the Christian ministry though not any particular form of it, and the Sacrament of Baptism and the Sacrament of the Holy Communion. All those are characteristics of the Christian Church which are really Catholic.

"It is sometimes asked who are members of the Christian Church. The answer is all baptized persons who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and claim to be His servants. But there are many of those who are imperfect members of the Church, sometimes through their own fault, and sometimes without their fault, who do not possess all the privileges of the Church. Above all, the divisions of Christianity make every branch of the Christian Church imperfect."

Favor Child Labor Amendment.

Federal Council Bulletin, March, 1935.

A strong statement was recently issued by a group of about fifty nationally known churchmen, on the initiative of James Myers, Industrial Secretary of the Federal Council, favoring the Child Labor Amendment. Among the signers were: Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, Bishop Francis J. McConnell, Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, Rev. Frederick K. Stamm, Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin, Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, Rev. Hubert C. Herring, Rev. Albert W. Beaven, Rev. George A. Buttrick, Rev. Allan K. Chalmers, Rev. William Pierson Merrill, Rev. Justin Wroe Nixon, and Rev. Guy E. Shipler.

"For the past thirty years," this declaration reads, "this country has endeavored to abolish child labor by means of individual state legislation, with but little result. In fact, by depending wholly on that method an immoral situation developed which enabled business men to make the most money in states where children could be treated the worst! This system tends to drive manufacturing to the states which allow the most child labor, and out of states with the highest standards, thus penalizing the good and rewarding those states with the lowest standards.

"The National Recovery Administration has now clearly demonstrated that child labor can be abolished. The progress made in this direction has been largely accomplished because the matter has been lifted above state lines and attacked on an industry-wide and national scale. Business men have been glad to go along on this reform as soon as they could be assured that general child labor standards would be advanced without regard to state or sectional lines. To make sure of the permanent abolition of child labor, it is now important to ratify the child labor amendment.

"We heartily concur in the resolution favoring the National Child Labor Amendment, which was officially adopted at Dayton last December at the Biennial Meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, representing twenty-six Protestant denominations."

The statement was presented by Bishop Gilbert on behalf of the group at a public hearing concerning the issue in the State of New York. Reports have come in of unprecedented activity on behalf of Protestant churches in other states also where the matter is up for decision. Among other national bodies recently adopting strong resolutions favoring the amendment are the Council of Women for Home Missions and the Bureau of Christian Social Relations of the Woman's Missionary Council of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Automobile Accidents.

The Canadian Churchman, April 4, 1935.

As the fine weather approaches the danger of motor accidents increases. This modern toll of human lives, like a western juggernaut, should appall every one of us. Those of us who drive should be ever on the alert and those who walk should obey all the rules of the road and in addition walk facing the traffic on country roads. Then at least if the motorist does not see you, you can step off the road into safety.

The Archbishop of Canterbury spoke out not long ago regarding those who drive motors under the influence of liquor. His Grace said, "When this slaughter, this maiming, can be reasonably attributed to the carelessness of persons driving motor cars after overindulgence in alcohol, then I hope we shall agree that no punishment is too severe. It is really monstrous that the same sort of fine or short imprisonment should be imposed on those who commit (often under circumstances of great temptation) some minor theft as is imposed on those who wantonly and thoughtlessly destroy the lives and maim the bodies of their fellow citizens."

In thinking of this subject, we should not lose sight of the fact that a driver becomes a menace to the public long before he is technically regarded as drunk. A very moderate amount of alcohol impairs the judgment and powers of control necessary for safe driving. I remember hearing a man remark that he would not drive his car after one cocktail. That is the standard of safety. And the words of the Primate of all England are needed here as well as there.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

Where Is the "Power of His Resurrection?"

St. Paul in his Epistle to the Philippians (3:10), said: "That I may know Him and the Power of His Resurrection." St. Paul had a clear idea of the essential facts of Christianity, and he felt that what he most needed, to make his work thoroughly effective, was a share in that power which Christ manifested when He rose from the dead. If he could but bring that power to bear upon the difficulties which stood in his way, he felt that he could overcome them all. And we may well take it for granted that it was because he did actually come into possession of this essential power, that he was able to carry out the tremendous task, which had been given him by his Master to do.

The Influence of St. Paul on Human History.

It seems impossible to overestimate the wonderful influence which St. Paul exerted in his own day with the added influence which has been carried on throughout the centuries which have elapsed since then, and will doubtless continue on with increasing power till the end of time. We can hardly explain the vast cumulative influence referred to above, without coming to the conclusion that there was a power manifesting itself which was something more than can be accounted for by the ordinary influence of a single individual, however great his talents and natural energy may have been. He certainly claimed to have identified himself with his Master, Jesus Christ, not only in His Death, but in His Resurrection Life, as may be seen from the following:—I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me." (Gal. 2:20.) These words may be said to be figurative, but they nevertheless represent an assured reality which implied that the mystical union betwixt Christ and His Church is shared also by the individual members of His Body. The only difference is that in St. Paul's case he entered more deeply into the experience of this mystery than perhaps any other saint of God has ever done, and by sharing his Master's Resurrection Life, in so great a measure, he shared also in the power of it.

An All-Important Question.

The all-important question at the present time is, where can we find now the manifestation of the resurrection power of Christ in His Church? Are we really seeking earnestly, as St. Paul did, to know Him and the Power of His Resurrection? If we could only attain to a share in this power as members of His Body, then there would be no question at all as to Christianity exerting a dominant influence upon the world at large and being recognized as having the Power of God working with it. We Christians of the present day, do not seem to possess that clear perception of the essential thing to be sought after which St. Paul evidently had. We are seeking after a hundred and one different things which distract our attention from the one thing needful to make us "more than conquerors through Him that loved us."

The Distracting Effect of Non-Essentials.

The multitude of non-essentials so clutters up our field of vision that we are expending our energy upon them instead of seeking to share in that power which would, if used, carry everything before it. Everyone must see, if he will carefully consider the matter, that what the Christian Church needs, more than anything else at the present time, is the possession of that same power which the Church had in the early days, and which enabled her to conquer the world. Perhaps that which has distracted our attention most completely from the quest above described is the undertaking to attempt a reconciliation between Christianity and Natural Science. The latter has been so successful in bringing about a transformation of our material surroundings, that it has been supposed that all that is required to give to Christianity a similar impetus would be to apply the scientific method to religion.

The Heavy Price Required for This Reconciliation.

But it must be borne in mind that in order to come to terms with Natural Science, Christianity would have to submit to a dictatorship on the part of Science and this would mean that Christianity would have to give up its claim to be a supernatural religion and be content to be brought within the limits of the Natural Order. It would simply be one of many religions, though it might be allowed to claim a leading place among them, provided that this superiority could not be considered as due to a supernatural origin. But this would be bartering our Christian birthright for a mess of pottage, besides which Christianity could certainly not enter into an alliance with Natural Science, unless the latter would consent to repudiate all connection with the scientific discoveries and inventions which have given to modern warfare its most destructive and horrible weapons, and in other respects show itself willing to promote the higher interests of mankind.

The Main Objective of the Christian Religion.

However Christianity has its own special objective, the pursuit of which will best serve the good of the world. Its chief concern should be directed towards spiritual ends and the development of the spiritual resources which have been placed at its disposal by God Himself, through His Son, Jesus Christ. Christ has revealed to us the divine method for obtaining the treasures of the Kingdom of Heaven, which are more needed by mankind for its own highest welfare, than all the discoveries and inventions of man. We have yet to see what faith can do in unlocking the heavenly treasure house and above all in securing for us that spiritual power which will enable us to bring in the Kingdom of God upon earth, which even Natural Science, with all its wonderful achievements, could never accomplish for us.

O Bride of Christ, beloved by Him,
Why are thine eyes of faith so dim?
Dost thou not know His mighty power
Is thine to use this very hour?

O Church of God, why dost thou deem
His promises an empty dream?
Shake off thine unbelief and be,
His angel to humanity.

Good Friday, Easter and Then....?

By GILBERT K. GOOD.

Dean of Trinity Cathedral, Duluth.

SUBMISSION to the influence of mechanisms is an obstacle to personal growth. Every person who has risen above the ordinary has been a rebel. He has been one who has refused to submit to the control of either natural or artificial mechanisms. He has, and does, feel that God has endowed him with distinctive, individual qualities and that it is his basic duty to contribute these qualities to society. It may, as it often has, mean crucifixion, or death by other means. Yet, if he is true to the divine within him, he will rebel, although it is harder than placid conformity. This is because it is divine to grow, and growth is the deliberate expression of individual character.

It is too easy for people to slide into the mechanistic grooves carved by natural and human mechanism. If we do not resist nature, it will destroy us. We must wage constant warfare against the deterioration of the soil, or it will become so poor that it cannot produce food for the sustenance of physical life. We must build shelters and produce artificial heat or the cold of nature will destroy us. We must paint our houses or the elements will rot them. If we would make a steel knife to serve our needs, we must first blast our way through layers of stone and earth to procure the ore. Levees must be built lest the spring floods overwhelm our fields and homes. The aspects of this every-day battle against the mechanism of nature are varied and complex, but humanity dares not give in. Human welfare depends upon it too much.

Apparently nature gives us nothing except the will to reach out and take what we want and need. In this light it would appear that nature is an enemy and not a friend. It apparently presents a problem to be solved, and that man's life depends upon his success in the solution. This has led many into pessimism. If the mechanism of nature is unfriendly and lacking in charity, then the God, whose creature it is, is likewise unfriendly and uncharitable.

This is true, if we think only in terms of problems. But life is not a problem. Life is a challenge to the human capacity to grow. The mechanism of the universe is a promised land for man to take and possess. Man inherits from his Father the divine spark of creative ability. This power to create develops only in proportion as it is used.

The building of mechanisms seems to be the result of human, as well as divine, activity. There are human mechanisms on every hand. Social mechanisms, economic mechanism, industrial mechanism, moral mechanism, and religious mechanism—one and all the creatures of man. Their usefulness depends upon man's capacity to grow and remain superior to them. We human beings will remain superior to our mechanisms only as long as we remember that they were created by us. The moment we side-step the responsibility for them, by insisting that they are beyond our province to change and improve, we become their slaves. For example, there is a decided inclination to say that the recent economic collapse was inevitable and that such recurring periods cannot be helped. If this be the case we have become the helpless creatures of the mechanism we have created. There can be only one reason for the breaking down of one of our mechanisms, or systems, and that is human failure.

In other words, man-made mechanisms are the creatures of man's brain and he alone is responsible for their operation. He fails and they fail only at the moment when he ceases to grow and thereby remains superior to them.

WHAT about man's religious mechanism? This was invented and placed in operation as a means to an end—the God-like life. In the case of that branch of the religious mechanism called the Episcopal Church, we have had handed to us an auxiliary mechanism—the Callendar of the Christian year. This is a guide to the annual observance of the events in the life of Christ. The pattern for individual life in the Kingdom of God. There is the festival of Christmas, with its message of humility and good will. Both are essential qualities of the good life and are binding on every person who takes the vow of Christian discipleship. There is the Epiphany season which calls upon every subscriber to the system to show forth these basic qualities in every relationship and endeavor. There is the holy season of Lent; the season when we concentrate on the business of using these basic qualities of Christian living with our spirits. Good Friday is set aside that we might not forget the colossal defeat of human character and the causes thereof, and to warn us of the cost of the sincere expression of individual goodness. As every despair is followed by a ray of hope, so Easter must inevitably follow Good Friday. Easter must be observed with a great shout of praise, because the creators of this mechanism would have us always remember that victory is possible, even after the most devastating defeat.

Good Friday, Easter, and then . . .? Shall we call it the acid test? It is the test of our place in the Calendar, and the test of the Calendar's place in our living. The post-Easter season is the time of testing whether we are servants of the Calendar mechanism or whether the Calendar is serving us.

When the last triumphant notes of the Easter Te Deum fade away there is apparently a deep and sincere sigh of relief. To ease the strain, Low Sunday has been injected into the picture. The annual burden of Lent and Easter is removed and a long breathing space is ahead. The Calendar mechanism is a hard task master. It has literally whipped us into the observance of certain events in the life of the Utopian Man. We have reluctantly complied up to this point, but beyond that we either will not or cannot go. We are content to leave our pattern of eternal life on paper, printed in violet, green, red and white.

What if the automotive engineer took the same attitude toward his creature? He has designed a streamlined method with all of its magic accessories. Beyond the picture he will not take the trouble to go. He then becomes the servant of the picture. He adores it as it hangs on the wall of his office, and as it appears in the catalogues.

But no automotive engineer, worthy of the name, is satisfied until he has gone all the way and placed his car on the highway. Even then he is not satisfied for he at once sets his creative power in action to improve on that car for the coming season. He is thus the master of the mechanism he has created.

That is what the post-Easter season must mean to the Christian. After resurrection there can be no standing still. Yet, that is what Low Sunday implies

Renewal

By JAMES E. FREEMAN,

Bishop of Washington.

Bishop Freeman

LO, the winter is past. The flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come."

This finely descriptive and picturesque passage occurs in one of the great poems in the Old Testament, namely, the Songs of Solomon. It suggests a freshened hope and the renewal of life that marks the days of early Spring. It fitly describes the dominant note of Easter. As Lent is designated, "The Spring Fast," Easter comes as its climax, bringing with it the mighty truths which the Risen Saviour of mankind gave to men in that early morning, nineteen centuries ago. A Rock-hewn sepulchre in a garden in a remote corner of the world has focused the thought and reverent interest of men the world over. It contains a truth more compelling and more thrilling than any recorded in the annals of men, a truth that responds to the ancient query: "If a man die, shall he live again?" So mighty is this truth that upon it a great institution has risen known as the Christian Church, and so strong is the conviction concerning it that, the greatest exponent of the Resurrection, St. Paul, declares: "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain." It was this conviction that welded together a band of recreant disciples, filling them with such persuasive power and courage that they readily and gladly accepted martyrdom as they prosecuted their ministry in the early days of the Christian era. Their message was keyed to the word: "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above." They resisted all opposition, overcome all obstacles, carried their message to cities and institutions that, at the beginning were unresponsive to their claims, and ultimately planted and established the new faith in Rome and Athens until ultimately it spread to every part of the world, civilized and uncivilized. Every Cathedral and Temple, every Church in city and hamlet throughout the world affirms its faith in Him who declared: "Because I live, ye shall live also."

No recorded fact in history has so affected the thought and inspired the reverent obedience of men as that which the Easter message proclaims. It must be ever identified in our minds with the renewal which each recurring Spring proclaims, that "the winter is past, the flowers appear on the earth," and "the time of the singing of birds is come"; this is in perfect consonance with the message of Easter. It is impossible adequately to express in any form of words the hopes and expectations which Easter seeks to interpret. Our thoughts run beyond theological systems, creeds and formulae, and each one, according to his needs and his experiences applies the message of that first Easter morning to his own life and the intimate incidents of his own household.

Quite apart from the glowing Church services with their triumphant hymns and anthems, that command the greatest response of any throughout the year; quite apart from the enthusiasm and the spirit of praise which they generate, it is the personal appropriation of the Easter message to our personal needs and problems that makes it the most precious and refreshing of all the beliefs we hold.

Renewal is our search from youth to old age. To feel that the spent forces and energies of life can be renewed, and that when the shadows lengthen and the evening comes we can be assured of another and eternal Springtime, where disappointment, weakness and sorrow shall be no more, is to give to life here and now its greatest refreshment and its supremest comfort.

"Lo, the winter is past; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come."

GOOD FRIDAY, EASTER AND THEN.

—an abrupt stop. The result is that the last state of that man, or Church, is worse than the first. The spirit of resurrection can mean nothing to us unless it is followed by a deliberate ascension. Because Christ ascended after He arose, we have a living Christ to "prevent and follow us" instead of just a pretty picture of a man who rose from the tomb many centuries ago. The man who uses the Calendar as a guide by means of which he exercises his capacity to grow, or ascend to a higher plane of living, is the master and not the slave of the Calendar. To him the Calendar is a challenge to his power to rise, and not a thorny problem to give him a headache.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT calls upon men to stop serving the Church and to begin to make the Church serve men and all humanity. Lent and Easter set up the sign posts along the road of progressive living that point to the Kingdom of God. These sign posts read, year after year: Self-sacrifice is a prerequisite to Self-realization! No man makes any progress along this road unless good will is the key to his every relationship. There can be no stopping or loitering along the road at these attractive taverns called Low Sunday. It is a steep ascent and the pause results only in the stiffening of the joints.

Steep? Yes, very steep! It is the steepness that is the Challenge. Steepness is the basic quality of every mechanism, artificial or natural, in this universe. Compare the hardship of living one hundred years ago with the comforts of today. What a steep ascent! What a glorious portrait is this determined rebellion of man against the resisting forces of nature! It is an everlasting challenge to man's capacity to grow, but growth is the only road to freedom.

So is the spiritual ascent, as set forth in the Calendar, a challenge to man's rebellious nature. Has he the capacity to ascend after the resurrection, or does his weakness demand a long period of rest? We shall see, we shall see!

We live in a vast experimental laboratory. Life is an interesting experiment, if . . .

Dr. Easton's Reinicker Lectures

Reported by

FREDERICK WARD KATES.

SAINT LUKE'S "Acts of the Apostles" became more than ever before the touchstone to the early history of Christianity for all who listened to the rather novel and brilliant interpretations of the book given by the Rev. Professor Burton Scott Easton, D. D., of the General Theological Seminary, in a series of three lectures at the Virginia Seminary, April 3 and 4.

Professor Easton's acute insights and profound penetration radiantly attested his scholarly reputation. Under his searching eye the Book of Acts sprang to life and its full meaning and significance in correctly understanding vital phases in the first century of the Christian era were indelibly impressed.

Students of the Seminary, alumni and residents of the Seminary Hill comprised the audiences. Dr. Easton spoke on the Reinicker Lecture Foundation, established in 1894 by Mr. George A. Reinicker of Philadelphia. The Rev. Norman B. Nash, S. T. D., professor in the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass., gave the first series of Reinicker lectures for 1934-1935 last autumn.

Dr. Easton prefaced his initial lecture with an introduction to the book. Luke wrote it to edify all Christians and in order to make the story understandable to all he simplified it in three ways, geographically, biographically, and chronologically. "To attain the maximum of simplicity he begins with a city—Jerusalem—and ends with a city—Rome. This by itself tells the story in miniature: from the sacred but utterly provincial city of the Jews to the dazzling capital of the Empire! All in between progresses in orderly fashion. From Jerusalem the narrative widens out to Samaria and Judea, moves from there to Antioch, from there to Asia Minor, from there to Eastern Europe, and from there finally to Rome itself."

"Along with this geographical simplification goes a biographical. The first part is dominated by the figure of Peter, the latter by that of Paul. The only other persons in Acts who are at all individualized are Stephen and Philip, and they serve chiefly to link together the work of the two great apostles.' '

The third simplification is chronological. "About time-sequences Luke is indifferent." Dr. Easton believes this lack of precision regarding time and dates deliberate. "The edificatory purpose of Acts could be obscured only too easily by an over-multitude of details. . . The reader's attention is concentrated exclusively on what Luke feels that Christians ought to know—and, as a result of their knowledge, belief and practice."

Of the methods by which this all-important knowledge is conveyed, the most directly didactic is of course the speeches. Of these there are eleven, and Luke's grouping of them is interesting. The three extended addresses at the beginning, in chapters two, three and seven, are balanced by a corresponding three at the end, in chapters twenty-two, twenty-four and twenty-six. In between these two triads stand five speeches, and these are all different. "These speeches," said the lecturer, "taken as a whole, are designed as a 'corpus' of first-century apologetics."

"But they are only part of the apologia. . . The apostolic miracles are confirmatory testimony of the highest possible order. So Acts is suffused with miracles from beginning to end."

"Practically all these signs are arranged in two groups of unusual similarity, the lecturer pointed out, one attached to Peter, the other to Paul. Both expel demons, heal a lame man, raise persons from dead, etc. Here are sixteen miracles, in two series of eight each. We are told that all apostles possessed wonder-working power as a matter of course (2:43, etc.), and that others had it also; specifically, Stephen (6:8), Philip 8:13), and Ananias (9:18).

The form of these miracle-stories merits special study, continued the speaker, but "it must suffice to say that the more elaborately they are told, the more they tend to be conventionalized. On the other hand, the nearer Luke comes to the event itself—whether through personal presence or good sources—the more simple are the narratives." Of another type are the miracles of revelation.

Less supernaturalistic, perhaps, but equally miraculous to Luke—no doubt even more so to us—is the evidence to the faith provided by the marvelous conversions wrought through apostolic preaching. "At the very beginning the original 120 win about 3,000 souls, and the glorious record never falters. Wherever the missionary sets his foot, there a church springs into being. How countless many souls have been moved to their depths by Luke's story! 'God's arm is not shortened; since He could do these marvels through the first believers, may He not do something today through me?' And to give men this inspiration was one of the most potent reasons why Luke wrote Acts."

Dr. Easton next pointed out that not every word and phrase of the book is consciously pedagogical, so the definite teaching material is interspersed with narrative, whose primary design is merely to interest the reader and to refresh him after the exactions of the more serious passages. In Acts is one scene introduced to arouse laughter—19:13-16.

"Such are certain of the means by which Luke has produced, what is beyond any possibility of compare, the most popular historical work that the world has ever seen or—I am sure we may safely add—ever will know."

PENETRATING more deeply into the work, Dr. Easton declared that religious edification is not Luke's sole purpose. "He has another, never put explicitly into words, but obvious to even the most casual reader. Christianity is a religion that should be tolerated by the State."

In a very real sense Acts from Chapter 13 on is a casebook in Roman Law, said the lecturer. Contacts with Roman authorities fill the book. Luke gives precedents that prove Christianity deserves toleration from the State. He goes much further and demands this toleration as a legal right. For, as Luke presents his case, Christianity is no new and independent religion. It is nothing more and nothing less than Judaism and so is explicitly recognized by Rome as a religio licita.

It is easy enough to miss this thesis of Luke's, unless we recall certain facts about first-century Judaism, the lecturer showed. "Primarily, that in the apostolic age a Jewish mission to Gentiles was no novelty. Christ tells us how the Pharisees 'crossed land and sea to make one proselyte (Matthew 23:35)." Paul and other Christian missionaries to the Gentiles were only doing what other Jews had long been doing.

In the second place, we have to remember that in the apostolic period, Judaism was highly complex, of numerous parties and divisions. "Gentiles found incomprehensible the topics about which the chosen people quarreled so bitterly. To them a Jew was a Jew, and this is Luke's point. From what he conceived the Roman theory ought to be, the Christians were simply one more Jewish party." Christianity differs from the other Jewish parties in being the only true "way." It was enough for Luke's aim if he could persuade Theophilus and the rest that the Christians too were Jews.

"A considerable part of the speeches in Acts is devoted to this theme. It is the reason for the lengthy openings of the speeches in Chapters seven and thirteen." These prefaces are purely rhetorical, designed to convince the listeners of the speakers' orthodoxy. In this manner the way is prepared for a sympathetic reception of the specifically Christian message. And this message, when told to Jews, is always told as specifically set forth in the Old Testament, Dr. Easton emphasized. It is the true promise to the fathers, to which the patriarchs and prophets bore testimony and to see which they passionately yearned." Acts is packed with arguments from the Old Testament to prove that Christianity and it alone is true Judaism.

But Luke was aware that the argument from prophecy was fiercely disputed by the bulk of the Jewish nation and so might not convince the Romans. Far more cogent were previous official decisions that the Christians were, in fact, a Jewish party, and such decisions Luke produces (18:15; 23:29, etc.).

Luke has still more testimony, of the sort which ought to be irrefragable, that of the Jews themselves. And in the very forefront of this he sets the evidence of the strictest and most representative party of all, the Pharisees.

The testimony of the most important class of all is that of the Christians themselves. Did they consider themselves to be Jews? As far as regards the Palestinians the problem was simple enough and the answer is yes. Jerusalem Christianity was almost bound up with the Temple. And "the Way" was no insignificant group; it contained tens of thousands of Jews, faithful and strict in their Judaism, painstaking in their legalism.

"But how about those Gentile Christians, on whom the legal burden is explicitly said not to rest?" continued Dr. Easton. Just as Jewish semi-proselytes were never allowed to separate themselves in groups that posed as full representatives of Judaism and were invariably kept in a subordinate status under strict Jewish supervision, so according to Luke's picture were the Gentile Christians treated in the first century.

In concluding his first lecture, Dr. Easton said: "It is a thesis of Acts that the Way has a centralized Jewish authority, and that this authority is fixed in Jerusalem. And just as in non-Christian Judaism as a whole, authority is exercised by the high priests and the elders, in the Way it was exercised in the earlier period by 'the apostles and the elders' in the later period by 'James and the elders'. And in the Way, just as in non-Christian Judaism, Gentile converts or semi-converts are kept strictly under the supervision and direction of Jews."

DR. EASTON'S second lecture dealt with the Apostle Paul and church polity in the first century. Luke's picture of Paul was designed to stand on its own merits, said the lecturer, who proceeded to discuss the Acts portrait, noting particularly Paul's subordinate status to Barnabas in the Antiochan Church.

The suggestion that the ceremony described in Chapter thirteen was nothing other than an ordination ceremony of Paul to the apostalate, was advanced by the speaker. Luke regards the apostalates of Paul and Barnabas, while valid ones, inferior to those of the original twelve, who were witnesses of the Resurrection of Jesus. To Luke, what Paul saw and heard, while true knowledge, was less than what the original twelve saw and heard and Paul was very definitely behind those pre-eminent apostles. He could receive apostolic title only through ordination.

Paul's missionary efforts were directed to the Jews. That he in fact labored chiefly among non-Jews was only because such work was thrust on him against his will. At at all times, however, he remains a Jew scrupulous in his legalism.

Dr. Easton stressed the fact that the early genuine Christians were under iron discipline directed from Jerusalem by Jews, that the early Christians had specific duties to obey, there were duly constituted authorities to enforce them, the apostles, and that their main function was to perpetuate through teaching the pure original Christian tradition. Just as in non-Christian Judaism teaching was in the hands of duly-constituted elders, divinely empowered to perform this duty, because they were the divinely-instituted guardians of the divinely-given tradition from Moses, so was Luke's idea of the Christian elders who derived their authority not from Moses, but the apostles and who ruled the different early Christian communities in presbyterian manner.

The ideal example of a Christian presbytery was that at Jerusalem, whose elders originally had been the twelve apostles all together. This council of elders, in which was invested the authority of teaching and governing the Jerusalem community, was the model for all local presbyteries, though it always held a unique position among all.

This Jerusalem presbytery, besides being the pure fountain-head of the tradition, had another prerogative, that of a permanent head. This was at first James, not because he was an apostle, which he was not, but because he was something higher—a brother of Jesus and so in some way was felt to represent our Lord in person. James was succeeded by a series of individual Christian leaders setting an example of church government that in the second century was to spread through the whole Christian world. So to Luke, in Dr. Easton's opinion, the organization of local congregations was presbyterian and the elders were the successors of the apostles. In the church as a whole, the polity was not presbyterian for the single one in Jerusalem rules over all and its authority is episcopal and its head is an individual.

The diaconate as presented in Chapter six was next discussed. Dr. Easton said Luke states that deacons were a Christian creation called for by a specific Christian need. There was no Jewish precedent. Stephen and Philip, who were made deacons for purely administrative functions, he pointed out, directly forsook them for preaching and missionary activity on their initiative. Stephen became a zealous champion of the faith and Philip did everything but care for the poor widows in Jerusalem. The seven really were not deacons at all, as the office was originally conceived, but rather ministers to the Greek-speaking Jerusalem Christians. The primary duty of the deacons was to care for the poor by serving at the tables at which they were fed. Stephen's case showed preaching was a proper incidental function for deacons, that is, preaching to the unconverted, but it is to be noted that, when in this capacity, his title was changed to that of evangelist.

THE Reinicker lecturer's third discussion of Acts dealt with the content of the faith which the apostles and church perpetuated and taught, Christology, the doctrine of the Holy Spirit and criticism. The Faith in Acts was not a set of doctrinal formularies but, from evidence in missionary addresses of Paul and speeches addressed to the Jews, consists of the basic tenets of the Jewish faith—monotheism, repentance, belief in a resurrection—and the Christian note enters by way of the resurrection belief. Jesus is the Man, God has ordained to bring remission of sins, His forgiveness, and His super-eminence is amply confirmed by His own resurrection and by Old Testament

St. Cuthbert

By

KATHRYN POCKLINGTON.

On a rock, by Lindisfarne,
St. Cuthbert sits, and toils to frame
The sea-born beads that bear his name;
Such tales had Whitby's fishers told,
And said they might his shape behold,
And hear his anvil sound;
A deadened clang—a huge dim form,
Seen but, and heard, when gathering storm
And night were closing round.

FOR the above passage in Marmion, Sir Walter Scott drew upon an ancient legend that St. Cuthbert in his cave beneath the sea, forged the small crinoids of which myriads were once washed up by the waves during storms. Each of these fossils being perforated where a slender animal body had lain, they were called "St. Cuthbert's Beads," and were for the use of the devout on their rosaries. The seventh century Cuthbert is the inspiration of countless legendary tales which lead from marvel to marvel.

It was on the night when Aidan, Bishop of Linsdisfarne, laid down his staff forever that we get what is perhaps our first authentic glimpse of Cuthbert. We see him watching his sheep in the valley of the Lauder, a stream emptying into the Tweed, not far from Melrose—this district being then annexed to Northumbria. As he was kneeling at his prayers, a broad path of light cleft the dark skies and thereon a crowd of angels came trooping down to earth. Presently, they reascended, bearing with them a glorious soul, which, though the awed Cuthbert knew it not, was that of Aidan. Through this vision, the boy was led to become a monk.

We are told that Cuthbert was an active lad and excellent in sports, but whether his racial origin was Celtic or Anglo-Saxon we do not know. His family may have had oversight of the flocks of some rich Saxon lord. The boy was not extremely poor, for in an illumination in Bede's Life, showing him being received at the door of Old Mailros (Melrose), his horse and an attendant stand behind him. It was Prior Boisil who, in the absence of Abbot Eata, welcomed the fifteen year old youth to this famous school for novices, exclaiming, intuitively, "An Israelite, indeed, in whom there is no guile!"

OLD MAILROS stood on a promontory whose base was laved on two sides by the Tweed. In the rough wooded country adjacent lived wild tribes of Picts and Angles. A cluster of wattled huts formed the monastery. Amid these rude surroundings, the young Cuthbert grew in conventual graces, in all ways justifying the Prior's predilection. Before long, he was being sent out through the sparsely settled kingdom—one of those missionaries who, before the foundation of parishes, kept Christian teaching alive among isolated people. Often he walked weary distances over rugged ways, bearing his message to dalesmen and hill-dwellers; more rarely, he rode; and when he wished to minister to people along the cost, he would take boat.

Abbot Eata, on being transferred to Ripon, took with him Cuthbert, and there the young monk, being made Hostillar, had in charge the entertaining of strangers. On one occasion, says tradition, after the departure of a guest, there was found upon his table three loaves of whitest, most delicious bread—in truth, heavenly bread, for an angel had been entertained unawares. But Eata and Cuthbert returned to Melrose, by and by, and the latter resumed with zeal his apostolic journeyings. These were interrupted when he was stricken with the plague. His life was spared in answer to the united prayers of his brethren of Melrose, but to his deep sorrow his loved teacher and friend, Boisil, succumbed to the disease.

Again, in 664, Eata left Melrose, this time for Lindisfarne, the Holy Isle, where he assumed the abbacy. And again he was accompanied by Cuthbert, who became Prior of the monastery.

LINDISFARNE! How the word sweeps us back to the early Church in Britain. From the Lindis, a brook which had hollowed a narrow course across the basalt of the island, and the Celtic "fahren." meaning "a place of retreat," came the euphonious name. It was Aidan who had pointed out Lindisfarne to the compliant King Oswald as the future seat of his bishopric. Perchance, he saw in it resemblance to his former home, the bleak Iona. However that may be, there was a measure of security for his church in its insulation twice daily by the tide.

In Cuthbert, now promoted to priorship though still under thirty, was observed an ever-increasing humility. Many other gentle virtues were his—compassion, sympathy, tenderness, tolerance—which shine star-bright against the dark, half-barbarous background of his age. No imputation of dull goodness attaches to him, for we are informed that he could be merry among his companions. His days at Lindisfarne were spent in religious offices, in acts of mortification, in manual labour and in healing spiritual and physical ills of the people. Twelve years seeped placidly away, then he resolved upon a solitary life. It is believed that he crossed to the mainland and inhabited a cave, since known locally as "Cuddy's Cove," but not finding the hoped-for seclusion, he withdrew to Farne, a desolate islet south of Lindisfarne.

His first care was to exorcise a horde of demons. The chronicler describes these horrific beings as short in stature and with long beards. They wore black cowls. Brandishing lances in an alarming manner, they dashed about the little domain on goats. So puissant were they that the holy hermit's powers only availed to banish them to a neighbourhood island where they remained in possession for centuries.

Now Cuthbert was free to erect his hermitage. This was round in shape and of no mean dimensions, being from four to five perches across. Its walls of rough stone and turf upheld a roof of wood thatched with the long tough grass of the island. Within were his oratory and his living-room. Some distance away, beside a little harbor, he built a guest-house for the use of the devout who would visit the island. In these works he had the aid of brother monks. Cuthbert's buildings were yet standing in the twelfth century. "There was still the small low cottage on the north side of the island, the only part approachable by a boat, and there was still the narrow pathway leading to the oratory, which was purposely concealed among the rocks."

BY PRAYER, Cuthbert obtained a spring of water, and for food he planted a plot of barley. Until this was ready to be gathered in, rooks, says legend, daily brought him sustenance. Like many another saintly anchorite, he made the birds his friends. Wild sea-fowl, said to have been eider-ducks, grew tame from his caressings and lost all fear of man. They were termed the "Birds of St. Cuthbert."

Visitors from far and near drew in at the little bay, and Cuthbert would talk and eat with them. But on nights of intense blackness and storm, cut off as he was from all his kind, what solemn sense of his mortality and his sole dependence upon the Eternal must have possessed his consciousness! No puny faith was his, for he joyed in his reclusive life, and when, after eight years of it, King Egfrid himself came to him and humbly besought him to accept the bishopric of Hexham, it was with utmost reluctance that he consented. Six months later, he left his island and at York was consecrated bishop by the primate, Theodore.

But still he longed for those familiar isles washed by the cold North Sea, and within the twelvemonth he had effected an exchange of sees between himself and Eata, and was Bishop of Lindisfarne.

Faithfully he discharged his episcopal duties. But, though he was little more than fifty years of age, his health was failing. In two years he resigned his high office and retired to his loved hermitage on Farne, where, a few weeks later, tended by friendly monks, he breathed his last, on March the twentieth, 687, or, as some assert, 688.

He was buried at Lindisfarne, which at once became a focal point of pilgrimage, with many miracles wrought at the tomb. Quoting from Scott:

> Dry shod, o'er sands, twice every day,
> The pilgrims to the shrine find way;
> Twice every day the waves efface
> Of staves and sandal'd feet the trace.

Even now, at low tide, pedestrians cross the three miles which separate Lindisfarne from the mainland by following the "Pilgrim's Way," indicated by poles and the "Monk's Stones."

Eleven years passed, then the tomb was opened, whereupon, as stated in Hegge's "Legend of St. Cuthbert," "they start at a wonder, they lookt for bones and found flesh, they expected a skeleton and saw an entire bodie with joynts flexible, his flesh so succulent that there only wanted heate to make his bodie live without a soul, and his face so dissembling death, that elsewhere it is true that sleep is the image of death; but here death was the image of sleep."

It was in 875, when the community on Lindisfarne fell into peril of attack by the Danes, that Bishop Eardulph and his clergy fled, taking with them the body of their tutelary saint into whose coffin had been thrust other sacred relics, including the head of St. Oswald. They also carried away a Book of the Gospels which had been written for St. Cuthbert and used by him—a richly illuminated volume, in a cover of gold and silver set with precious stones. Then began seven years of wanderings through Northumbria and southern Scotland, the little band receiving support and veneration wherever they went. And never did the saint cease his miracles. The coffin was laid upon a wheeled bier, which was drawn by lay brothers. Despairing at last of any permanent peace in their own land, the chiefs of the wanderers resolved to go to Ireland. They set sail, leaving their comrades on the beach, lamenting. But a storm drove them back. Before they could land, Cuthbert's Book of the Gospels fell into the sea. Now was disunion, the laymen and junior monks being so incensed at the attempted desertion that they withdrew from the party, leaving no one to draw the bier. From this plight, the saint himself brought succor. In a dream, he appeared to one of the monks, and after informing him where the lost Book would be found, he said he must seek a bridle which was hanging on a tree and show it to a horse feeding nearby. The animal would run to him and allow himself to be yoked to the bier. All these things came to pass. The book was found on the coast of Galloway, and the horse henceforward drew the saint's vehicle.

At length, St. Cuthbert made unmistakable signs that he desired to rest for all time at Dunhelm, the present Durham. A shelter of boughs was hastily constructed, the make shift beginner of a series of erections, their culmination being the grand Cathedral of Durham, begun in 1093. There in 1104, the body of St. Cuthbert was finally translated. It was found to be still incorrupt, states the monkish narrative. In a place of honour behind the high altar, the casket was elevated on a handsome green marble tomb, in which were four praying niches. It was enclosed in a great iron chest, which in turn was protected by a case of wood, highly ornamented, and capable of being lifted above it by means of a pulley. To the rope were attached six silver bells whose tinkling "made such a goodly sound that it stirred all the people's hearts that were within the church, to repair unto it, and make their prayer to God and that holy man, St. Cuthbert."

At the time of the Norman conquest and the resistance of the North to the Conqueror's authority, the body of the saint was conveyed for greater safety to Lindisfarne, but was soon restored to its old place at Durham.

When the Church was suppressed, rough, hireling hands broke up the shrine, after stripping it of its wealth of gold and precious stones. Beneath the spot where it had stood so long, the bones of the saint were consigned to earth.

St. Cuthbert's Festival is the twentieth of March. In his representations there often is seen with him the head of St. Oswald, of which the dust mingles with his in the tomb. The biography of this early saint of Northumbria is peculiar in that more has been written of the vicissitudes of his relics than of the circumstances of his life.

Victorious Life.

Grace French Smith.

All hail victorious life!
By peace of God set free,
Above the noise and strife
March on, my soul, so free.

How long we seek in vain
Our weary way to tread,
And pick our steps with pain,
Misunderstood, misled.

When lo! that peace divine,
So near to us—within,
Can all our life refine,
Create new power within.

For when we look away
Into His face sublime
And follow His bright ray,
Our song outsings our rhyme.

All hail victorious life!
By peace of God sent free,
Above the noise and strife,
March on, my spirit free.

THE BARREN FIG TREE.

Bess S. Ayres.

You ask why I am withered, gaunt, and sere,
And why I stand so starkly naked here;
Have you not heard how once He came to me
An hungered, on the road from Bethany?
I missed life's moment for a noble deed;
I failed Him utterly in time of need;
The curse of barrenness is mine to bear,
No cloak of leaves or figs to ever wear—
I stand a symbol to the passer-by,
But—it is rightly so—for—such—as—I.

BOOK REVIEWS

THE STORY OF GOOCHLAND: By Richard C. Wight. Published by The Richmond Press, Inc., Richmond, Va.

Within the covers of this little volume, Mr. Wight has placed the rich information he has gathered from forbears who had a conspicuously creative part in the life of Goochland County, Virginia. He has presented many incidents that deserve permanent record, and he has done so in a manner that will be of interest to many readers.

In a foreword, Dr. Douglas S. Freeman states: "The story of homes and families, of intermarriage and inheritance, constitutes the brick for the structure of the social life of the State, without which there can be no real understanding of national development."

The book is illustrated with portraits of former residents of Goochland, prominent in the social and political life of Virginia, and of many of the historical homes of the county.

C.

WITHOUT COMPROMISE: By W. Brooke Stabler. Pp. 135. Price, $1.00. Published by The University of Pennsylvania Press, Philadelphia.

The volume contains seven lectures delivered to the University of Pennsylvania students under The George Dana Boardman Lectureship on Christian Ethics at the end of 1934. The lecturer was the chaplain of the University, the Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, an Episcopal clergyman of ability to face the problems of students today.

The lectures are unique in their presentation of the necessity of Christian living and thinking. They form one of the best presentation of Christian apologetics of the day. The very title suggests the uncompromising nature of the Christian revelation of the way of life abundant as revealed by Jesus Christ. The third lecture on "Humanity Turns the Corner" is an inspiring sermon on the changes the Birth of Jesus Christ wrought on the fundamental institutions of mankind and how the mind of the mankind turned the corner at the first Christmas. This is a Christmas sermon that would appeal to any mind that seeks rationalization of historical facts.

The lecture on "What Price Success" is a picture of what kind of attitude to life will lead to success. Success is presented in the light of the teaching of Jesus Christ as the only success that is worth the name. It ought to be read and re-read by all young people who seek a career. The quotations are very striking and unique. They suggest great themes. The lecturer faces bravely and consistently all the difficulties that confront students today. An invaluable help for all who deal with young people.

THE GRIM SHADOW: By Herbert Lockyer. Art Paper. Pp. 14. Published by The Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago, Illinois. Price, 10 cents.

Many mind are turning with longing eyes to the close of this trying depression marked by bungling governmental situations. What will the issue be? We need not be alarmists to seek some solution of the perplexing problem. It certainly must be acknowledged. There is no ground for warm congratulation that there is "peace and safety." Those who look for the gradual Christianizing of the world are not very stable in their position. Wonderment infiltrates the political, social and religious world. We cannot hide our heads in the sand.

The writer of this pungent little treatise had gripped the question with firm hand. He believes the world is headed for the assumption of power by that superman, which the Scriptures define as arrogating to himself authority in all of the above realms. Certainly, we have come to admit that our vaunted democracy is honeycombed with graft and merciless rivalry. The whole world needs and is crying for one mind and heart to salve its desperate and despairing agony.

If we have Fascism in Italy, Nazism in Germany and unrelenting dictatorship in Russia, there is solemn ground for apprehending the breakup of our own govenment; the influence of the old world cannot for all time be resisted. Thinking men are coming back to the predictions of our Lord and His apostles, who declared, every one, that the present dispensation would not conclude in an era of peace, but discord and confusion, strife and hatred, war and bloodshed. Many have laughed at those who have in earlier years affirmed their conviction of this truth. Now, they are verifying their forth-seeing in the witness of secular opinion. H. L. Mencken, the retired editor of the Mercury, an un-Christian Magazine, has declared, "I desire to point out that the New Testament offers precise and elaborate specifications of the events preceding the inevitable end of the world (age it should be. K. M.), and that a fair reading of them must lead any rational man to conclude that these events are upon us." This is certainly a rebuke to the popular ideal.

THE KEY TO THE DOOR OF DIVINE REALITY: By W. H. Jeffreys, M. A., M. D. Art Paper. Pp. 71. Published by Harper and Brothers, New York City. Price, $1.00.

This volume is a number in the series which had been previously issued by The Institute of Social and Religious Research.

The very designation of the above organization, illustrates the character of the volumes which have been brought before the public. The attempt to reach divine realities from the ground up is commendably wise; if the man or woman who is seeking divine realities cannot accept the Scriptural ideal of their being revealed from heaven to earth. We can find no fault with mysticism for those who like it and think it the only way. But we prefer the simpler method of taking what God has spoken without any intellectual analyses. There are those whose intellectuality must be satisfied by the mystical process. But the world is full of simple folks who cannot enter into the disquisitions of such a book as this; and for them our Lord had and has a heart of compassion.

Dr. Jeffreys has done a good work. It is consistent with others of his producing. He has a longing to help and he will help. Blessings upon him and his book, if he does.

DR. EASTON'S REINICKER LECTURES.

prophecy. When repentance of sins and faith in Jesus are coupled, the proselyte to Christianity is granted remission of sins and share in the inheritance of the community and elders.

"The apostles' preaching in Acts is in no sense a preaching of the Cross," declared Dr. Easton. Not by any theory of atonement does belief in Christ bring remission of sins, he continued. From Christ's Messiahship, rather, springs Luke's doctrine of forgiveness. "From Christ's Ascension, not from His Passion, forgiveness flows."

Commenting on the extreme communism practiced in the Jerusalem Christian community, Dr. Easton said it was rather an exaple of self-sacrifice and to be regarded as a work of supererogation rather than as an example for all Christians to follow.

The outpouring of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost was of special significance to the early Christians. Pictured in Jewish apocalyptic imagery "the last days were at hand." And it was from Christ Himself that they received the Spirit. They never doubted this: "In the name of Jesus Christ ye shall receive the Holy Spirit." These were the last days, to the early Christians, and the long-promised gift of the Holy Spirit was bestowed on the elect by Jesus Christ Himself. That the Messiah was even then communicating the Holy Spirit to the believers in Him who were thereby united to Him in a wondrously intimate bond enabled the Christians to adjust themselves to the notion that the world might endure for yet a great while and allowed them to drop the apocalyptic stress from their early faith with no sense of integral loss. That the Church was already in direct and immediate communion with her Lord and Master rendered the delay of the Second Coming a matter of no moment. Messianism was replaced by Christology.

Dr. Easton spiked the notion lately advanced that Acts was written during the lifetime of Saint Paul. The only tenable date for it, he says, is 93 A. D.

Dr. Easton said that the strongest argument against the theory that the Book of Acts was written by the man who actually accompanied Paul, is that, if this man wrote the work, he would have known more about Paul. Either the author didn't know about Paul at firsthand, or consciously distorted facts. The more one argues for the traditional authorship, the more one puts on the conscience of the traditional author, was his concluding remark.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

THE GOOD NEWS FOR THEOPHILUS.

Leader: The scene of our pageant this evening is the home of Philip, the Deacon in Joppa. The time is about the year 60 A. D. Its purpose is to show us how the Gospel according to St. Luke was written. There are four characters: St. Luke, St. Matthew, Rhoda, the wife of Mark, and Iris, the daughter of Philip the Deacon. Three are seated when Luke knocks at the door.

Iris (going to the door): Who knocks at this hour of the night, and whom do you seek?

Luke (outside): I am Luke the Physician, the companion of Paul the Apostle. I seek Philip the Deacon. I am told that this is his house.

Iris (opening the door): Enter, Noble Luke, in the name of the Lord. I am Iris, daughter of him whom you seek. I have often heard my father speak of you and the Apostle whom you accompany.

Luke (entering): Peace be unto this house, my daughter. Will your father be home soon?

Iris: I believe so. Meanwhile, let me introduce you to my friends. This is the Apostle Matthew, who also awaits my father, and of whom you have heard.

Matthew: Nay, my daughter, Dr. Luke and I are old friends.

Iris: This is my friend Rhoda, the wife of Mark, the Bishop of Alexandria in Egypt.

Rhoda: Welcome, noble Physician, my husband has often spoken of you and of your faithfulness to Paul.

Luke: I thank you for your welcome, my friends. Perhaps you may be able to tell me some things I wished to know from Philip. Recently a young Greek named Theophilus, who has just become a follower of the Christ, asked me to write him out a life of the Master in order. So I would find out all that I can from those who actually knew the Christ.

Matthew: The idea is a good one. Have you seen the Life of Jesus which Rhoda's husband, Mark, wrote a short while ago for the Romans?

Rhoda: I have here a copy of it, if you would like to see it.

Luke: I did indeed see that wonderful book, and a copy of it I always carry with me. But as I have gone about I have found many stories which Mark did not include. These I would add to Mark's Gospel.

Rhoda: My husband wrote for the Romans. He was so anxious to tell of what Jesus did, that he wrote very little of his teachings.

Matthew: Yes. That is the reason the reason that I have collected the sayings of Jesus into one great sermon. This I have my children learn before they come to confirmation. This also I teach to all new converts to the Curch that are grown when they wish to be baptized so that they may be certain they know what He taught. This I call the Sermon on the Mount. I have combined it with other stories I remembered and using the Gospel of Mark as an outline have written my own Gospel. I wonder if you have seen a copy of this?

Luke: I have not seen it, nor did I know that you had written it. But I would greatly like to copy from it if you will allow it. For I would put into the book for Theophilus all that I can obtain about the Master that is certainly known as true.

Iris: Most noble Luke, I, too, have a contribution that I can make. After the Crucifixion, John took the Blessed Mother of the Master to his home, and there my sisters and I as girls used to visit her often. While on these visits she told us many things about Jesus, and later at our request she wrote them down for us in order that we might not forget them or get them confused. I have that manuscript here in the house.

Luke: This is most interesting. What kinds of things were they?

Iris: She told us of how an Angel first told her that Jesus would be born. Then of how He was born, and how she wrapped Him in swaddling bands and laid Him in a manger. Also she told us of how on that same night Shepherds were watching their flocks, and to them angels appeared and told them that Jesus was born. Also she told us of how they took Jesus to Jerusalem when He was twelve years old and what happened there.

Matthew: This is indeed wonderful. Joseph told me something of the birth of Christ, and I put it in my Gospel. I did not know that Mary had also written the story.

Luke: I will indeed be glad to have your manuscript. Does it also tell much of John the Baptist and his preaching?

Iris: It does indeed. For it tells not only of his preaching, but of how an angel foretold his birth to his father Zacharias.

Luke: This is a marvelous treasure that I have stumbled upon. I wonder if I can secure many other things that have not yet been recorded?

Rhoda: Before I married Mark, I was a servant in the house of his mother, and she and I used to often discuss the teachings of Jesus and His wonderful works. Some of those that especially concerned women I listed and I have with me in my home in Alexandria. I wonder if you would like to see the list?

Luke: I would, indeed. But why did not Mark put them in his Gospel?

Rhoda: He said that no one save women would be interested in them and he was writing primarily for men. I remember one of the incidents. There was once a woman who had been sick for eighteen years, but Jesus healed her on the Sabbath. That was one that I saw with my own eyes.

Luke: May God be praised that I have once more found people who saw the Master do His miracles. Do you remember more? I am very much interested in the way the Christ dealt with women.

Rhoda: I remember that once when I was waiting on the table, Jesus took a grain of mustard seed and held it up. Then he said that the Kingdom of Heaven was like that. For a man took such a seed and planted it and it grew into a great tree.

Iris: Then, too, the Virgin Mary told us of many parables that Jesus spoke concerning sinners. Thus He told us the Kingdom of Heaven was like a woman who lost a coin and swept the house diligently until she found it. So also He told us of a Prodigal Son who wasted is Father's money. But when he came home his Father received him with rejoicing and a feast.

Luke: These are wonderful stories from the lips of Jesus. Could you both write down for me all that you remember and send them to me? I would like to put them all in my story.

Iris: I know that I will be glad to do so.

Rhoda: I, too, will be glad to help, and will tell of all the miracles of which I know that have not been recorded by either Matthew or by my husband. But there is one other matter; I wonder where you will have your story stop? Some say that the story is complete with the Resurrection. Others think that it should end with the Ascension of Jesus. But it seems to me that the story is not complete until the story of how the Holy Spirit came is told, and also of how the Spirit has led the Church even down to the present. Where do you plan to end your account?

Luke: I agree with you that it is a great mistake to end the Story too soon. So I am planning three books. The first will tell of the Life of Christ through His Resurrection. The second will continue the story until the Church under the leadership of Paul has reached Rome, the capital of the world. For this purpose I have kept a diary of the times I have been with Paul. The third book will tell how the Gospel has been carried to the farthest limits of the West in the trip that Paul has just completed. It is my desire to give these three books to Theophilus, and only hope that I may live to complete them.

Rhoda: Then, perhaps, you will tell of my husband's life and work in Alexandria.

Luke: No, for I must limit my subject matter. Thus of the Twelve, I will confine the record to the time when they were all together with special attention to Peter and to John. Then I will tell of how Philip here brought the Gospel to the Samaritans, and then of Paul's travels for the Gospel.

Rhoda: Even if you do not tell of Mark's work in Alexandria, you will tell of his first trip with Paul, will you not?

Luke: Yes, I have already written that part.

Iris: If you are to tell of Peter, you must not forget to tell of how, when he was freed by an angel from prison, he came to the house where they were all assembled, and Rhoda answered the door and was so glad to hear his voice she ran to tell them without letting Peter into the house.

Luke: Peter was laughing over that story the last time I saw him. Did it really happen that way, Rhoda?

Rhoda: It did indeed, and Mark often jokes me about it even now.

Matthew: It is a wonderful plan that you have, Luke, but I would make one suggestion. It is that you will give the exact dates of the happenings.

Luke: I am planning to do so. But I must hasten on to catch Paul at Troas.

Will you all send me your contributions to the house of Trophimus in Rome? For we expect to go there after Troas?

Iris: We will indeed.

Matthew: And now, my brother, shall we not all kneel, and say the prayer Jesus taught us.

Luke: By all means let us pray. (They kneel and Matthew leads in the Lord's Prayer.)

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

PRAYER FOR THE NATIONAL COUNCIL MEETING, APRIL 30, AND MAY 1 AND 2.

Almighty God, whose wisdom has enlightened and whose will has ruled Thy Church, grant to the National Council the guidance of Thy Holy Spirit that in all things it may seek the welfare of Thy Kingdom and the glory of Thy Name, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT MOVES FORWARD.

The six hundred and seventy-five thousand, six hundred and eighty-nine copies of the Forward Movement Commission's Lenten folder, "Discipleship" ordered were sufficient to cover every family in the Church, if properly distributed.

The Church is accustomed to daily Lenten suggestions for Bible reading and meditation, but the issuing of a post-Lenten pamphlet to cover the great forty days from Easter to Pentecost was a new idea, and a smaller demand was anticipated for the new folder entitled, "Disciples of the Living Christ". The edition ordered by the Commission was two hundred and fifty thousand. So many requests for it were received that other editions followed one upon another. Still the requests poured in and the printer wired asking that the reserve of twenty-five thousand copies, being held for shipment to the Cincinnati headquarters of the Forward Movement, be used temporarily since the presses and packers, though working at full capacity, were unable to supply the demands.

To date, five days before Easter, the total number of "Disciples of the Living Christ" printed is six hundred and twenty thousand, and stock is ready for increasing this number as needed. Being simpler, more concrete and more definite than "Discipleship" this second leaflet seems to be commending itself even more than the first. Bishop Manning has circularized his clergy in his eagerness to obtain a complete coverage for the Diocese of New York. Many other Bishops are employing this method. One Bishop writes:

"I am enclosing our order for 6,500 copies of the pamphlet for use during the great fifty days. I actually have received orders from the clergy for more than 6,200 copies, but, to be on the safe side, you will notice I am ordering 6,500.

"I think this is quite amazing. I had no idea there would be such a demand for this new pamphlet. It is only one more indication of the impression the Forward Movement is making. I do believe that all of us in this Diocese will agree that the Forward Movement is the most helpful and encouraging thing that has come to us in many years."

Some parishes are planning on an Every Member Visitation in the interests of promoting a Forward Movement in life and service among their members. The rector of one parish writes:

"I want you to know how much of a success I feel the Forward Movement is so far. I have been using your first pamphlet, and the second has arrived today. Personally, it has stirred me more than anything since I was ordained, and I have been bending every effort to make people realize that we have been living a second rate Christianity without really knowing Christ at all. I can see results in this parish. One of my vestrymen has come to me to offer his services for an Every Member Visitation of the parish after Easter, at which we shall try to put the question to each man as to whether he is doing his share in supporting the Christian Gospel—not with money, but with his life. I plan to announce it from the pulpit and through letters to the parish. The visitors will have to be trained as to what they shall say and do."

During Lent many of the clergy preached on the six notes of Discipleship—which formed the weekly topics of the Lenten folder. Larger Lenten congregations are reported.

A laywoman writes as follows:

"The other day I was talking with a young priest. He is in a difficult field, much business has crept in and many foreigners. His congregations have not been large—and what is worse they have not been enthusiastic.

"He had been talking to his people about the Forward Movement. He has distributed the literature, and he says that on Ash Wednesday morning at the 7:30 Mass he was startled and almost fainted when he looked down from the Sanctuary. Instead of the usual two or three there were some thirty people. Every one of them made their Communion. He says the other Masses throughout the day were similarly well attended—likewise the evening service. And the Sunday congregations are growing. He has had the gratifying experience of having his women workers come to him and ask him how best they could serve.

"This priest says that the people are using the Forward Movement literature faithfully—reading the leaflets daily and bringing them to services with them. He says he is so impressed by the fact that the persons in charge of the Movement have dwelt upon the gifts of the Holy Spirit—and so happy to see that the material carries on beyond Easter to Whitsuntide.

"People do want to march forward, don't they? But all people are not leaders. They have to have those "up front" to help them forward. The most ardent soldiers must sometimes have a band to keep them in step, if for nothing else!"

The rector of a parish of about one thousand communicants in an Eastern Diocese returned from the General Convention last October with the impetus of an encouragement engendered by the inauguration of the Forward Movement. He spoke of the Forward Movement frequently to his congregation, both in public and private, and communicated much of his spirit and hope. He reports a new enthusiasm for Christ and His Church among his members, manifesting itself in the following ways:

1. One of his laymen suggested a corporate communion for fathers and sons, at which 190 men and boys were present.

2. The following Sunday, March 10, was the corporate communion of the Forward Movement, at which nearly 300 people were present at the eight o'clock service, and approximately an equal number at the later celebration of the Holy Communion. There has been nothing like it in the parish except at the great festivals of the Church heretofore.

3. The Sunday School has doubled its membership.

4. A Parent-Teacher Association has been established to work together for the better religious education of the children of the parish.

5. The Lenten services have been better attended than at any time during the present rectorship of thirty-two years.

6. The pledges for parish support have been increased by $1,200, and for the general work of the Church by $500, and the end is not yet.

Truly a Forward Movement in this parish because of a new and contagious determination and an enlarged vision in the heart and mind of the rector.

Welcome in Unexpected Places.

The pamphlets of the Forward Movement find a welcome in unexpected places. A prominent Baptist minister in the South wrote concerning "discipleship" to one of our Bishops:

"A few days ago there came to my hand the little booklet . . . for use by your people during Lent. Now, do you think it strange when I tell you that I'm going to carry this in my pocket and read every assignment each day during Lent? You know Baptists are not strong on doing such things because we say we should do those things all the time. So we should, but I think there is great spiritual advantage to be gained by observing special seasons. I have just read the second page, 'A Disciple Turns', and then knelt in prayer for you and myself that the good Lord may use and bless us in His work."

An inmate of an old ladies' home, seventy-four years of age, a member of the Disciples of Christ writes:

"I have been greatly helped by a Lenten pamphlet, 'Discipleship', of the Forward Movement, and would like to go on with what follows. Please advise me so there will be no breaks in the readings."

Again from another seeker after light and leading:

"Several days ago a booklet of yours entitled, 'Discipleship', fell into my hands. I have read it with more than keen interest because I have been deeply concerned about my own particular work. Would it be asking too great a favor for a little more information about 'The Forward Movement'?"

HOLY WEEK MISSION SERVICES.

The Cuban parish of St. Paul, Bolondron, and the congregations in three neighboring towns, Guanabana, Guira de Macuriges and Bermeja, under the care of the Rev. Vincente A. Tuzzio, united in a kind of mission during Holy Week, with one or more services each day in one or more places, a group from each congregation visiting the others in token of general unity and brotherly love. The Church schools and young people took part, also the Woman's Auxiliary, "that industrious and useful society", as the announcement calls it. A neatly printed announcement and invitation was distributed in advance.

A REVIVAL OF HEBREW.

Lecture at the Kensit College.

In the Times of December 1 an article was printed commencing with the words, "The revival of Hebrew from a dead into a living language is one of the most remarkable achievements of the last fifty years".

In keeping with that thought was the interest displayed in a recent lecture at the Kensit College, Finchley, which was thrown open to the public, and drew an appreciative audience. The Rev. Dr. Goldsmith, Greek and Latin tutor at the college, presided, and declared that there was no one of average ability who could not tackle the Hebrew language. It was, indeed, a great advantage for the study of the Old Testament, for no language gave more vividness to the mind.

The lecturer was the Rev. R. Talbot, M. A., vicar of Reigate, and son-in-law of the famous North London preacher of a past generation, Canon E. A. Stuart, of St. James, Holloway. Mr. Talbot declared that Hebrew might be described as a child's language, built up on simple principles, and the phrases were made by very simple conjunctions. He showed, by many blackboard illustrations, both the difficulties that were encountered in reading the ancient manuscripts and the spiritual light and leading which came by careful study. He reminded them that consonants only were given in the ancient manuscripts, and that there appeared a solid phalanx of letters without break, and that, therefore, the Rabbis were needed to apply great care and diligence to the reading. The first verse of the Bible would read, "In beginning created God the Heaven and the earth". It was noteworthy that God was the plural nominative and yet had the singular verb—a clear indication of the doctrine of the Trinity. The contrast betwixt Hebrew and Greek was made—the one being an Eastern, and the other a Western, language. Therefore, the reading was, in the Hebrew, from right to left, and in the Greek, from left to right. In the Hebrew, every word was a poem, and every letter a picture, and by most interesting sketches he traced the forms of the Hebrew alphabet. The ideal Hebrew word consisted of three letters, and the ideal Hebrew sentence, of three words—surely another foreshadowing of the Trinity.

There were many words which had the same consonants, or at any rate, the same roots, which had opposite meanings For example, the words, "bless" and "curse"; the root idea going back to "kneeling", because it was the custom whether in blessing or in cursing to kneel. The great passage of the writing on the wall in Daniel 5 was explained by the filling in of the vowels, which made all clear, and Daniel knew what God was going to do, whilst the drunken party did not. Indeed, only one could supply the vowels to the hardly understood words of the Old Testament; Christ only could enable one to read the Scriptures aright.

The pronunciation of the Hebrew words was of sounds which made big suggestiveness by their inflection. "Nehustan" literally meant "He shivered it", with reference to the brazen serpent, and it implied that no thing ought to be worshipped—only a person—the Person of our Blessed Lord. Love and hatred were represented by the same root, in which there was the thought of breathing, but love was the breathing of the zephyr, while hatred was snorting. Saul breathed out, or snorted out, threatenings. It was easy to see how even English words looked very much alike, when there were quite opposite meanings to the words. He remembered a vicar addressing a letter to "Dear Friends", and when it appeared in print it was "Dear Fiends". There was a striking illustration in the matter of the Hebrew word for "strong drink", for it literally meant, "to take possession of".

The lecturer went on to give some graphic illustrations of various texts of Scripture. A beautiful one was on prayer, where he showed that the word used was literally "to stroke the face of God". How our children are ready to thus coax us, but what a mighty conception of the Father's readiness to hear His children, this thought gave.

Before he closed he spoke of the jot and tittle, the jot being the smallest letter of the alphabet, and the tittle only the shoulder of a letter; yet there was not to be missing one letter or even a shoulder of a letter, from the great text of the Scripture. They might well ask, who keeps the Bible intact, and they could but reply, "Almighty God". There was no such thing as "all scholars are agreed"—a favorite phrase with the critics; but all should be agreed to peruse the Scriptures to receive the delineation of the features of the Son of God. A church warden of his once asked, "Why do you always preach Christ?" and he had replied, and continued to reply, "Because I have no one else to preach."—The Recorder (English).

A MILLION PEOPLE IN WAR-PANICKED EUROPE HEAR THE THE MESSAGE OF THE OXFORD GROUP.

In all his fifteen years as a porter in the Liverpool Street Station (London) he had never seen a flashlight photograph taken of a group of people departing quietly for a spiritual offensive in a foreign land. He had never before seen a flashlight picture taken of any group bent on any purpose. The party which left was part of a team of the Oxford Group en route to Denmark. In Copenhagen today two hundred people, representing thirteen different countries, and whose ages range from seventy-three to eighteen, are met for the purpose of bringing the message of Christ to an entire nation. A member of the House of Lords is working together with the son of an unemployed sailor; an erstwhile member of the Young Communist League of Great Britain stands alongside a Lady in Waiting to a Queen; a former chairman of a Warwick Unemployed Association is cooperating with the provost of an Oxford college. This same provost, Canon Streeter of Queen's College, was in Oxford on April 1 in the morning, and an hour after landing in the Copenhagen Airport in the evening addressed a jammed meeting in the Danish capitol's largest assembly hall, in which he said: "It was because I saw that the Oxford Group were making bad people good and good people better, and giving to men of good will new hope, that I threw in my lot with them. The reason why I am here today is not so much that I want to address meetings, but rather that I want once more to join the Group so that I can learn more from them for myself, over and above what I have already learned. May I suggest that perhaps you might follow my good example?" (Laughter.)

Two years ago the owner and editor of Denmark's most important newspaper pulled a ladder up to the open window of the assembly hall of an Oxford college in order to hear what was going on in an overcrowded meeting, where an Oxford Group house party was in progress. Today all the leading papers in Denmark are carrying front page articles about the Oxford Group, and the belief of leaders in Denmark that this religious movement holds the answer today to world unrest. Representatives from twenty newspapers were present at the first Copenhagen meeting, together with six press photographers. Some of the press representatives came from Finland, Sweden and Germany. The meeting was broadcast over the entire country, and was heard in Norway, Sweden, Great Britain, France, Switzerland, Egypt and Canada. Telegrams came in from all parts as a result of this meeting. Before the broadcast was finished people were ringing the studio asking for interviews. The Bishop of Copenhagen said at the first meeting: "I myself have been a member of the Oxford Group for some time. My friend, Bishop Berggrav, of Tronso, said to me yesterday, 'What is now happening in Norway is the greatest spiritual movement since the Reformation'. We in Denmark have been praying for the Oxford Group team to come. Eighteen thousand people have already come to their meetings during the first few days."

It is estimated that over a million people in the first national broadcast or the press reports of it, heard or read the challenge of Jesus Christ to a needy, disillusioned world in a language that the modern pagan can understand. In mentioning this question of language one might add that the Group is never short of interpreters. In Copenhagen a prominent business man was asked to interpret for the first meeting, but he decided that he did not feel worthy to interpret such a message. This led him to make a full surrender of his life to Christ, and on the following night the team had a changed interpreter, through whom the Holy Spirit spoke with power.

Latest additions to the Oxford Group team in Copenhaven are the Bishop of Finland, two citizens from the Faroe Islands and a lawyer from Sweden. The Swedish lawyer has come from a house party held near Stockholm. Already the team has been urged to go to Sweden, Finland, Iceland and the Faroe Islands. A new illumination may come to Europe through the Scandinavian countries. Norway has led the way, and Denmark is beginning to follow after in a constructive Christian revolution, which may lead a renaissance throughout Europe.

AMERICAN DECLINE IN GIVING TO MISSIONS MUCH GREATER THAN IN ENGLAND.

Finance in the Church of England is discussed in the 1935 issue of the Churchman's Handbook, published by the English Church Assembly. The writer, G. R. Crawford, chairman of the Winchester diocesan Board of Finance, observes:

"The Church today is full of life, and is dealing vigorously and rapidly with those many problems which have necessarily remained almost untouched for generations waiting for the time when the Church should acquire more liberty of action . . . It is to some extent the reorganization of Church finance, and the new interest which it has aroused in diocesan and central problems that have made this possible . . . In the teaching and organization in the dioceses and in the parishes, the financial and the spiritual duties of the Church are no longer considered as being water-tight compartments. It is far more generally, though not universally, recognized that the financial work of the Church is as spiritual as that more obviously spiritual work which finance renders possible."

Commenting on Mr. Crawford's article, Dr. Lewis B. Franklin says:

"It is not surprising to learn that in England the Church is experiencing difficulty with the system of missionary quotas only introduced there of recent years. The following quotations from the Handbook have a familiar ring:

"'A certain risk there is of quotas being accepted and paid in the wrong spirit, considered as rates or taxes and endured as necessary burdens. Originally the quota was intended to be a suggestion of the minimum that a parish should pay if it desired to take its fair share with other parishes in the work of the Church.

"'It is not unnatural that a parochial Church council should put in its budget the exact figure asked from it, and regard the due payment of that amount as fulfilling all obligations . . . Constant teaching on the duties of Christian stewardship is required if the right spirit of giving is to be inculcated and maintained. It is there especially that we need the assistance and good will of the clergy. It is still rather too uncommon to hear from the pulpit teaching on the duty and on the right spirit of giving, while the attitude of the chairman of a parochial Church council towards the responsibilities of a parish to the diocese and to the Church as a whole may make or mar the success of the parochial effort'."

Dr. Franklin adds:

"In the Handbook is also found a statement showing the voluntary offerings in the Church of England for extra-parochial purposes. For the year 1933 the offerings showed a decline from 1924 of less than 10 per cent, and from 1925, which was the high-water mark, of only 17 per cent. This is far less than the decline of such giving in the United States. The giving here to general missions in 1933 was less than one-half of that for 1926; the income for diocesan missions has not declined to such a large extent. Our total giving shows a far greater decrease than that of England."

THE INFLUENCE OF A SINGLE COMMUNITY.

In the study of the Blacksburg Community of Montgomery County, a partial check of migration from the community for the last fifty years was made. Records were obtained from 577 individuals. Three hundred and thirty-two were found to have gone to thirty-six other States and to five foreign countries; while 245 had gone to thirty other Virginia counties. Approximately one-third of those migrating came from the more marginal homes. Many of those migrating have moved several times. These migrants are an influence for good or ill in their associations in the communities in which they have settled, thus the influence of the Blacksburg Community becomes nation-wide.

It has cost this community more than a quarter of a million dollars to rear and educate these migrants (allowing $500 each, a most conservative estimate). The migration to the community from elsewhere has not anything like compensated for this outlay.

The above figures are a good illustration of how living standards, health and educational conditions of a single small community are of state and nation-wide significance. They form a strong argument for state and national support of various kinds of public services if a community is not able to adequately provide for such facilities itself.

Such data as this also emphasizes the importance of occasions like Rural Life Sunday tending to promote a high state of community development. It is hoped that every community in the state will observe Rural Life Sunday this year some time in the month of May, and at this time focus the attention of the people on community progress and needs.

Notice.

The Woman's Auxiliary meeting of the Valley Convocation will be held this spring at Upperville on May 23.

The program will open with celebration of the Holy Communion at ten o'clock, followed by an address from Bishop Tucker.

During the morning brief talks will be made by Mrs. Barton, Mrs. Welbourn, Mrs. Batcheller and Mrs. Chambers. Each delegate is asked to give a three-minute report of the work being done by her Branch and to omit figures.

After lunch the Auxiliary will have the privilege of hearing Mrs. John E. Hill of Philadelphia, president of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Pennsylvania.

How One Church Observed the World Day of Prayer.

In observation of the World Day of Prayer, the Woman's Auxiliary of St. James' Church, Montross, Va., invited their friends and neighbors of other denominations, Methodist and Baptist, to join them in expressing these faiths in the community.

The united prayers of Christian women, all working and praying for the evangelization of the world seemed a step in the right direction, and every one present must have been spiritually renewed by this experience. The church was open from 7:30 in the morning utnil seven in the evening for the benefit of those who could not be present at the special programs. The first of which was under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary, at 10:30 A. M. Prayer was used as the subject for this meeting, congregational reading from Scripture, moments of meditation, prayer in unison and prayer hymns made this a very effective service. At 2:30 the program was continued by the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Church, led by the wife of the minister of that church. In this hour the importance of missionary effort and the cultivation of the missionary spirit was emphasized and a very interesting talk on Japan was given by one of the members.

The next program in charge of the Woman's Missionary Union of Nomini Baptist Church was postponed until 4:30, that the teachers at the High School in the village, might have the privilege of attending.

A very helpful and instructive program was conducted by one of the members—sincere prayers for all mission workers, and for the spread of God's Kingdom on earth were offered. Responsive Scripture reading, and sweet music closed this wonderfully helpful day of prayer.

Secretary St. James' Branch,

The mid-day services conducted throughout Lent at St. Paul's Church, Richmond, were well attended, as always. The last preacher, Dr. Hugh Black of New York, spoke to a church filled to capacity every day. Many who came to hear him were from other denominations in the city. His coming to preach is always heralded with joy by those who have heard him in times past.

There have been large confirmation classes in the city churches during Lent, and two classes were presented on Easter Sunday, Bishop Tucker held the confirmation at St. Andrew's Church in the evening, and Bishop Goodwin visited St. John's in the morning.

Easter Services.

An Easter Dawn Service was held on the Library steps of Columbia University at 7 A. M. on Easter morning, under the auspices of the Greater New York Federation of Churches. Among the participating clergy were the Rev. Robert W. Searle, Executive Secretary of the Federation, and the Rev. Herbert E. Evans, Director of Religious Work at Columbia. The Salvation Army Band played.

Bishop Manning preached at the eleven o'clock service at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine and at three o'clock in the afternoon he confirmed a class at Trinity Church.

The Rev. E. Russell Bourne, rector of the Church of the Resurrection, New York City, who has been absent from his parish for the last six months, because of ill health, has returned and conducted the services on Easter. Dr. Bourne, however, will not take up active pastoral duties for at last two more months. Meanwhile, the Rev. Charles L. Pardee, D. D., Secretary of the House of Bishops will continue as priest in charge.

At the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Easter afternoon, the young people of the parish presented the Easter mystery play, "The Resurrection." The play was written by the rector of the parish, the Rev. Henry Darlington, D. D.

The Rev. Olin Scott Roche, rector-emeritus of St. Peter's Church, New York City, participated in the Easter services for the fifty-second consecutive year. The Rev. Richard A. D. Beaty, present rector of the parish, preached at the eleven o'clock service.

The Church of the Ascension gave a dinner on Thursday, April 25, at the Hotel Pierre to celebrate the tenth anniversary of their rector, the Rev. Donald B. Aldrich, D. D. Dr. Aldrich came to New York in 1925 from the Cathedral Church of St. Paul in Boston, where he had been assistant to the Dean. He succeeded at the Church of the Ascension the late Rev. Percy S. Grant, D. D.

Grace Church, Nyack on the Hudson, of which the Rev. E. W. Churchill is rector, held its annual Men's Dinner on Easter Monday, April 22, at 7: P. M. The dinner was prepared by the Girls' Friendly Society. The speaker was the Hon. John McKenna, recently elected Rockland County Judge and Justice of the Children's Court.

American Slavonic Choir to Sing in Trinity Chapel.

The new American Slavonic Choir, under the direction of Alexander Koshets, is to sing music of the Eastern Orthodox Church in Trinity Chapel, on Sunday May 5, at 4 P. M.

Trinity Chapel, New York City, was the scene of the first celebration of the Eastern Orthodox Liturgy ever to take place in the United States. The celebration in Trinity Chapel was held on March 4, 1865, to mark the tenth anniversary of the accession of the Czar, Alexander II, to the Russian throne.

The Rev. Dr. J. Wilson Sutton, the vicar, has invited the Slavonic Choir to Trinity Chapel for its recital on May 5. The chapel has a gallery similar to that ordinarily occupied by choirs in Eastern churches, which will be used and as the chapel is one of the loftiest church buildings in the city, it offers exceptionally good sounding space for the resonant Slavonic music.

The speaker at the noonday service in Grace Church on Friday, April 26, was the Rev. Walter H. Brooks, D. D., pastor of the Ninth Street Baptist Church in Washington, D. C. Dr. Brooks, born a slave, was one of the first graduates of Lincoln University, and has been a devoted pastor and leader among his own people for more than sixty years.

Easter Day in the Capital.

Despite a cold rain in the Capital City, Easter was a memorable day in the churches. It is estimated that over 12,000 people attended services at the Cathedral. President Roosevelt and his family worshipped at St. Thomas' Church, the Rev. C. Ernest Smith, D. D., rector. There were a number of sunrise services, including one at the tomb of the Unknown Soldiers. At Mount Rainier four or five hundred people braved a cold wind and the inclement weather to attend the first sunrise service to be held in that section. The service was conducted by the Rev. Walter Plumley, rector of St. John's Church, Mount Rainier, on the edge of the metropolitan section, and thirty voices from the choir of this church provided Easter music. At Rock Creek Church, the Rev. Dr. F. J. Bohanan, rector, the two hundred and twenty-third consecutive Easter festival service was held. A special feature was the closing address at Town Hall, in a series of open forum talks, which have run through the winter season. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman was the Easter speaker.

National Cathedral Association Annual Meeting.

On May 2, the annual meeting of the National Cathedral Association will be held in Whitby Hall, with the Bishop of Washington presiding. Dr. John Huston Finley, of the New York Times staff, will be the chief speaker. Invitations have been issued to a tea and reception held by Bishop and Mrs. Freeman in the Bishop's Garden, which is a bower of rare beauty at this season of the year, as indeed at all times.

Diocesan Convention.

Arrangements are now complete for the fortieth annual diocesan convention of Washington, to be held in St. John's Church, Georgetown, the Rev. F. Bland Tucker, rector. It will be preceded by a special service on the evening before at the Church of the Epiphany, at which time the Bishop will give his annual address.

The Diocesan Summer School of Religion will be held this summer at Overall, Va., beginning June 22. It will be under the direction of the Rev. Wm. Moody, chairman, assisted by Mrs. Moody, and a staff of instructors.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Fourteen Pennies Have Grown to $40,000 in Two Years.

This is the story of how fourteen cents became $40,000. It was related before a group of laity of the diocese April 16, at the Central Y. M. C. A., Chicago.

Two years previous at a similar luncheon meeting in the same place, fourteen men sat around the table with Bishop Stewart. In the course of the discussion, financial problems came up. The Bishop made the casual remark that if every church member gave a penny a meal to his Church, the problem of finances would be solved.

At the conclusion of the meal, one of the members of the group handed the Bishop a tumbler containing fourteen pennies. Six months later, the Bishop's Pence, inspired by that informal gathering, came into being. And on Tuesday the second birthday of the Pence was celebrated with members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and Pencemen from over the city in attendance.

The Bishop was again handed a tumbler, containing the same fourteen pennies which started the Pence Fund two years ago. The pennies have been preserved and are being kept by the Pence office at diocesan headquarters. Along with the fourteen pennies, was a huge Pence Can, bearing the exact amount collected from the Pence to date. It aggregated $40,000.

Bishop Stewart praised the accomplishments of the Pence, pointing out specific places where it had stepped into the breach and saved important pieces of work for the diocese. Mr. Angus Hibbard, chairman of the Pence Committee, told of the developments of the plan, and Sylvester A. Lyman, executive secretary, stressed the importance of active pencemen to insure the future of the plan.

Good Friday Services.

The Harris Theatre in the Loop, Chicago, was filled to capacity on Good Friday, when Bishop Stewart concluded the Noonday services sponsored by The Church Club. The attendance was considerably increased over last year.

'Today the world is at least a little hushed," said Bishop Stewart in his Good Friday Message, "in awe, as it remembers the events of a spring day, the year 29, when a young man died outside the city wall in Jerusalem. On Sunday, the same world will be full of joy because He rose from the dead. If He hadn't risen, His death would have been the end of it and of His influence; His words would have been forgotten, and His career would have been recorded in the footnotes of history, numbering Him among the minor fanatics of His day.

"It is the light of the Resurrection thrown back on the Cross which gives it significance. It is Easter which makes this a Good Friday and not a Bad Friday; because now we know that the central figure between the thieves was a unique figure, a genuine superman. God in the trenches.

"Jesus Christ in His position in the world is no longer on trial. The spectators are. His disciples are. You and I are. Everyone who knows Him is. Only as we enter into the agony of Good Friday can we share in the tri-

COLLECT FOR THE FIRST SUNDAY AFTER EASTER.

Almighty Father, who has given Thine only Son to die for our sins, and to rise again for our justification; Grant us to put away the leaven of malice and wickedness, that we may always serve Thee in pureness of living and truth; through the merits of the same Thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

HE LIVES, OUR GREAT REDEEMER LIVES!

Georgie Tillman Snead.

Was ever day so joyous as on that Easter morn
When Christ arose victorious, and hope was then reborn,
When shadows dark, appalling, fled from the earth away,
And joy and peace and gladness came on the earth to stay?

O Easter morn, thy glory is shed o'er earth and sky,
As we listen to the story of Him who reigns on high—
Who burst the tomb asunder, in majesty arose,
With lightnings dire, and thunder he conquered all His foes.

He lives! Go tell the tidings, let all the earth rejoice,
He lives Who died to save us, lift up, lift up the voice,
Lift up your voice, behold Him Who conquered o'er the grave,
Nor seal, nor death, could hold Him Who came our souls to save.

He lives, our great Redeemer, He lives for aye and aye,
Who ushered in the glory of an everlasting day,
No more can evil blight us, nor shadows dark appall,
No more can sin affright us, He conquered over all!

A Young Man's Definition of Reality.

On the occasion of his last appearance in the Gospel, Thomas is still the relentless seeker after facts. His is the immature mind which thinks that it can accept nothing but what can be substantiated by the senses. Thomas is an uncompromising realist. His difficulty is that he has a totally inadequate notion of what constitutes reality.

It is a young man still who answers from the depths of his dark despair to those who declare that they have seen the Lord, "Except I shall see the print of the nails in His hands, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe". Life had tumbled in for Thomas, as it had for the others. Like them, he had given his whole self to this Nazarene Messiah, and now that He was dead, life was over for them.

Christianity would probably have perished had it not been for the forty days after the resurrection. What these men needed most was to see Jesus alive again. Yet for some reason Thomas was absent on the occasion of the first appearance. It is possible that he was deliberately keeping apart, brooding, nursing his sorrow. It is a fact that we frequently fail to make use of our two great pillars of strength—human fellowship and divine love—in the very moments when we need them most. What a tragedy it would have been if Thomas had gone on thinking that the Lord was dead, that death was victor over life! But again Jesus gave him what he asked. "Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hand, and reach hither thy hand, and behold my side, and be not faithless, but believing."

The record does not state that Thomas availed himself of the opportunity. Perhaps he did. But I like to think that at the last it was not these physical marks in the body of our Lord, but rather something about His personality—something intangible and invisible, yet very real and compelling, which overwhelmed Thomas and led him to make his profound confession, "My Lord and my God". But Jesus saw so clearly what was troubling Thomas. It was his immaturity, his woeful inexperience with life, his naive assumption that you can fight your way through doubt and despair by depending upon the senses. "Because thou hast seen me thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." Happy, indeed, is the man whose philosophy of life includes the recognition that some of the profoundest realities we know cannot be apprehended at all by the senses.—H. L. Sumner.

Rocks.

Monica Williams.

As we look out upon the landscape, are not the rough stones in the stream or the jagged rocks on the mountainside those which first catch our eye? They seem to stand out beyond the rest, they seem more alive. Time and tide have not yet worn their edges smooth, and in the uncertain lines of their ragged beauty there is a mystery that entices us.

Within our inner consciousness we can see the bird's nest tucked deep within the crevice of a sheltering peak or hear the music of the wind as it circles overhead, then drops and winds through each untrammeled space in tones of varying sweetness—or we may see the snowflakes falling, one by one, filling in and covering all until the silhouette against the sky is white—then the sun shines and we turn away somewhat blinded, but the mystery of the rocks is there. When the snowflakes melt, if we will look again we will see the water trickling down in drops and streams of widening greatness. The ragged edges glisten in the sunlight and the rocks again are drawing us to the secrets they withhold.

So it is with life—our lives have heights and depths we do not know, smooth surfaces and rough edges. But how often are the jagged lines those which first attract and hold our gaze. We may not see the beauty in the roughness of our lives, perhaps it is the toil that empties life of joy, the pain that hardens hearts, we see—the jagged edge. But the mystery of pain, the gladness of the toil is back of all, if we will see. We look at the lives of others and we think we know them, but there are nooks and crevices which bind the secret of their lives to other days. The pain that seems so keen today may be but joy tomorrow if looking through the pain we see God's love coming through.

We are content to look upon the whole of life, as we look out upon the rocks. The various aspects of our lives enchant us. But we do not want to come too close to the jagged edge, for we cannot see behind it. We are afraid of what we do not know, and so we sit down upon the first smooth stone we come to and look about at the rest. Why are we afraid when it is the mystery of life that leads us on? The things we do not know open up through joy or pain—it is the pain we fear, but pain will be as joy, when treading in the Way the edges are worn smooth through deeds of selfish love.

It is only God that stays our lives. It is only our life in Him which can hold us and carry us over the rough stones. It is God who is urging us on, it is God who has made the ragged beauty of the rocks, and it is He who draws our gaze upon them. God holds the mystery for which we yearn, but His secret is deep. It is not found upon the smooth stones in the stream over which we like to pick Life's way—it is not found on the rock at the foot of the hill on which we like to browse in the warmth of the morning sun. God's secret, dear friend, which is the Way of Life, is found only in toiling day by day along the pathless way of jagged rocks. The secret of God's love is deep, but if we place our hand in His and trustfully obey the voice within, which is His guiding Hand, we need not fear the Way. Our perspective will change as we go on, and the rough edges will become stepping-stones of life.

Only we must hold on, we must trust God. The bird that nests within the shadowed ledge is safe from wind and rain, but a rock is its shelter. God in His infinite love has guided the bird in His Way, and the down that fills its nest is but a token that God alone is worthy of all praise!

The music of the wind that whistles through the rocks in changing tones could never be the same upon an open plain. The music of the soul, which has not feared hard things, but has gone through all for God, rings true. It is as if a harp were playing in our midst in tones of wistful sweetness.

The seasons change, there is a rest for all; the hardness of our rocks seem softened as the snowflakes fall, we forget their jagged lines. If we were children we might almost feel that ghosts were in the sky, they seem so white and changed. The rocks are there, but they are changed to us—it is like God's love that eases pain, that makes things new, but we must be like children, we must trust God, and when a respite comes, see only joy. As in myriad forms of snowflakes from the sky—so peace comes, too, in many ways from God. It is for us to see! But as the snow melts, sorrow comes again, for life goes on. But thank God rocks are rough and sorrow comes, and there are men with hearts to follow through—God's Way.

The Household of God.

Church-ianity is a word used with lofty scorn by the friendly citizen who feels that he can be a better Christian outside the Church than he can inside its official walls. By the same token, that man ought to make his own candles, professing them to be better than public service lights. He ought to make his own shoes and other commodities that are made by organization rather than by individual effort. When he reads his English Bible he ought at least repeat a brief collect of gratitude for the organized Christian scholarship that gave him a readable Revelation out of indecipherable manuscripts, and which worked for centuries to do it.

Such a man may be likened unto the farmer who still scorns scientific agricultural methods and calls the student of the soil and plant life and the follower of school methods "a book farmer". The book farmer has won a fifty year battle in the country so conclusively that the so-called practical farmer is only to be found now where the brush is high, the soil sour and the machinery rusty.

The man who scorns the church building and the church-organizing method of clinical Christianity may be likened unto the man who buys the finest apples at the city fruit stall and then recommends that orchards be cut down and cleared away.

The Church Creed Christian will win the day just as the book farmer won it. Just as the Declaration of Independence won the battle where maudlin social theories melted before the heat of battle. Creeds are principles defined, not infallible, but workable until they are improved.

So we deliberately preach about Christianity as it is mothered and fostered under the roof of a church, carried on by a board of elders, led by an ordained preacher and paid for by contributions listed in the signatures of names that will pass among friends because they are genuine friends.—Rev. R. L. Long, in Presbyterian Banner.

DO YOU BELIEVE?

Monica Williams.

Do you believe the Sun will rise—
As a golden disk in the Eastern skies—
Do you believe the dark of night
Is swept by its radiant light?

Do you believe the Sun at morn—
Will keep on shining the whole day long—
Though many a cloud Its light embrace—
Do you believe they can stop its pace?

Do you believe our life abounds—
In warmth and light the Sun sheds 'round.
Do you believe Its glories too—
Can cheer us on more work to do?

Do you believe the moon reflects—
The hallowed light the Sun begets—
Do you believe its still calm light
Is only through the Sun's great might?

Then look you to the Life of Love
Which is all other lives above,
And you will see Love's radiance too
Can carry on, God's work to do.

Professor Spooner's Pew.

"Excuse me!" said Professor Spooner to the occupant of his seat in a packed church (it must have been Easter day or Christmas), "but you are occupewing my Pew!"

Proprietorship of pews is not known in this Church of England of ours in Canada. Neither, unfortunately, with few exceptions, are packed churches. In this democratic country the use of a surname is the exception rather than the rule among men; the significance and obligation of the Tom, Mitch and Harry continually on men's lips merits some consideration by Anglican laymen.

The significance—A Christian name bestowed at baptism.

The obligation—"The duties of a Christian towards the Church of which he is a member. Surely the least of these duties is attendance at divine service, and particularly at the Lord's own service on each Lord's day.

If every member of the laity who has received the privilege of baptism into the Church of England were seized with the responsibilities involved, packed churches would be the rule and not the exception.

Lions, Rotarians, Kiwanis, Hermes and what have you—the clubs which are responsible for so much social service—have amongst them an esprit de corps, which is sadly lacking in our Church; there, membership entails regular attendance—here, attendance is only regular at irregular times. Easter and Christmas, perhaps, are added to the occasional wedding or funeral, and we sit back, self-satisfied and well satisfied at a good deed well done!

But it is not enough. Addressing a meeting at Montreal in the Church of St. John the Evangelist, the Primate of Canada, in speaking of the urgent task of upbuilding the Anglican communion, mentioned idealism, sacrifice, patience and endurance as some of the personal characteristics needed in those Christians who would contribute to the work.

Let us laymen pause long enough to consider how those qualities are made manifest by our parish priests—sacrifice, patience and endurance, how they stand out as an example to every layman who has eyes to see. Idealism—if it is not quite so obvious, is it not because we laymen have half killed it with our montrous apathy?

Let every layman who is enrolled go after just one of those unenrolled Anglicans, but, and there is always a but, he'll never get that other to attend the services of the Church and shoulder his responsibilities until he himself is a regular attendant meeting the liability signified by the continual use of his Christian name.—Walter Danks, in Canadian Churchman.

TEACH ME TO DO THY WILL.

William P. Rockey.

Teach me, O Lord, to do Thy will,
Though hard my lot may be;
So that my life may be always,
Acceptable to Thee.

If grief and pain my portion be,
Give me the strength to bear;
My cross will lighter be, if Thou
Bestow Thy love and care.

If I be tempted to do wrong,
Come quickly to my side;
That I may walk and talk with Thee,
I would in Thee confide.

If I should Thy commandments break,
And stray away from Thee;
Protect and guide me, so that I
Again restored may be.

When I no more shall labor here,
On this earth cease to roam;
Unite me then with Thy blest saints,
In Thy eternal home.

An Imperishable Possession.

Throughout the vanished centuries a golden dream has stirred the heart of man, and kept his hope alive and bright. It is the dream of heaven. In these latter days we hear less of heaven than in former times. The emphasis is placed upon service and upon right living. And yet deep down in the heart of man, in which there is restlessness and warfare and great hurts, there is, all unobserved by every eye except the eye of God, a hunger for a place where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary be at rest. Therefore, the assurance of the great apostle, who himself had been caught up into heaven and experienced inexpressible emotions, and the assurance of a greater than Paul, who promised that He would go to prepare a place for us, are among the most treasured and imperishable possessions of the human spirit.—Southern Christian Advocate.

God's Christ "Descended Into Hell"

To utter dark came perfect Light,
To utmost wrong came Lord of Right,
To deep despair—of hope one ray,
To night of soul—One gleam of day.

To lost—hope in His Saving Grace.

GLAD NEWS!

Monica Williams.

Little Friends, I bring to you
Glad news on Easter Day,
It is that Christ is risen,
And will always with us stay.

He will always help and guide us
If we will feel Him near,
And talk with Him in all we do,
Today, and all the year.

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter XVI.

David.

M. L. G.

"Marse David?"

"Yes, Uncle Danger, what is it? Want me to help hitch up? It's 'most time to go to the station for Father?"

"I 'clar, little marster, I gwine hafter ax mor'n de hitchin' up. Here I got a tu'n o' rheumatics mighty nigh twis' me double. Miss Mollie she gimme a pellet or somep'n, but hit ain't rout hit, not yit. An' wid dishyar storminess gwine on outside—"

"I believe Aunt Mollie will let me go alone. I'll ask, Uncle Danger."

David ran upstairs, with more spring in his step than it had had for a week. Aunt Mollie saw the eagerness in his face. Winnie had told her, and she had seen herself, that all was not well with David. Now there was something that David really wanted to do.

"Aunt Mollie, Uncle Danger's rheumatism is bad. Can I drive to the station for Father?"

"I don't see why you shouldn't, David. Just be in good time so you tie Frank before the train gets in." Aunt Mollie almost offered to go along, but she felt that David would be glad to be quite alone, and to come back with his father.

And David, driving along in the rainy darkness, with only the bobbing lantern to light the way, was indeed relieved to be meeting Father alone. How good the pines smelled, as Frank jogged along, rain flying from his harness, and shadows seeming to leap into strange shapes in the lantern's light, to fall back into the general darkness as they passed. Now they reached the churchyard gate, and Frank seemed doubtful whether this was not the place to turn in, until David urged him on. Then the village, and the curved slope to the station. David tied the horse securely, selecting the end of the long hitching-rack where a scrubby tulip-tree leant above, somewhat protecting him. It was good to enter the station where the big stove glowed red-hot.

"How about seventy-two, Mr. Acres?" he asked the agent, not without a sense of importance.

"She'll blow in long about six minutes now. Your Papa comin' home on her?"

"That's what I expect."

"Guess you ain't sorry. We've missed him about the village. F'r instance, Ben Burser can't stay sober like he used to, without him."

"Oh, is Ben—I mean, Father'll be sorry."

"It ain't Ben only. My wife's mother, she stays sick in the bed all time now, and she frets considerable, not havin' your papa come say prayers and the like. Well, the track's beginning to sing, she'll be coming in now."

David went out on the platform, where rain poured from the eaves. A glow lighted the eastern sky down the track. Then the headlight shone out as the engine rounded the last curve, bell clanging and brakes grinding. Fireman and agent shouted greeting as the engine steamed past. The baggage car, the mail coach—at last the one dimly-lighted passenger car, and Father, making his way with a few others, to the forward door.

"Hello, son!"

"Hello, Father! Let me take your satchel. Frank is right out at the hitching-rack. Is Claire all right? And is Mother? Can you stay this time, Father?" David was shaken out of his usual quietness.

"Thank you, boy. No, I'll keep one bag—well, Mr. Acres, how's everything here at home? And how's Mrs. Sanders?"

"She'll be the better for knowin' you're back, sir. And the rest of us, likewise."

"Well, I'll be looking in the choir for you on Sunday. Nothing like a good, strong bass to depend on."

"And there I'll be, Reverend, with the aid of Providence, and if Mrs. Acres thinks well of it, sir."

David was never to forget the drive home in the pouring rain. His disquiet gave place to a feeling of utter security. In after years he would know who first taught him the meaning of fatherhood, giving him a sort of parable by which he might learn of the great Father's unchanging care.

"You asked about Claire and Mother, David. Claire couldn't be coming along better. And that, and having Aunt Mollie here, have been medicine for Mother."

"And you can stay?"

"Unless Mother writes she needs me I can stay until time to bring them back. That should be in another six weeks. So I'm a fixure now—and how good home is! Now tell me about Kent and all at The Rectory."

"Everybody's fine but Uncle Danger, he had a turn of rheumatism. But Kent and all are fine."

"And that's why my son meets me alone? Well you've shown you can drive! Come on, Frank, old fellow. I've missed these pine woods, David, none along the way can compare with them. This air is good to fill the lungs with;—did you say you're fine, too, son, or is something troubling you?" One of Father's hands came to rest on David's.

"Yes, sir, something is—or it was, I feel better now you're here. I—I hate to bother you with it when you're just come home."

"Why, it's just another reason for me to be glad I came. Do you feel like telling me now?"

"It's about school, Father. I'm—Father I've been suspended for a week!"

"Well, son, and if you have?" Father answered instantly and cheerfully; and what had seemed to David an unspeakable disgrace became a commonplace circumstance, hardly deserving a thought of anxiety.

"It's not what happens to us that can hurt us," Father went on, calmly, "but only what we are or do. Are you something, or have you done something, that can harm you, David?"

"I was careless, and I'll tell you about that. But I can't think of anything else."

"Well, carelessness is your old enemy. But you've given him some good fights, and I've thought for some time that he was on the run. But tell me—no need to hurry, Frank, along too fast."

"It was in Latin Class. More than a week ago the first time was. Mr. Price had asked us to make a list of the people we were reading about in Caesar—Orgetorix and Dumnorix and all. And we were to tell what they did. I wrote my list down with a few lines about each one. And when he called the class—we don't leave our desks, you know—he asked me about one—it was Divitiacus; and while I was telling about him, Mr. Price said, 'What's that paper under your hand, David?' And, Father, it was the list I had made! It was right on top of my desk, and Mr. Price said he had noticed me looking down and moving my hand along as if to see one part better. But Father—I knew he realy thinks he saw it. I didn't, Father!" David's voice grew thick, he could not go on."

"Certainly, my son, you didn't," Father said quietly.

"And he told me to sit down, and he said he had suspected irregularities among several boys in the class, and that I was one. He said my work had suddenly grown better, and he thought it strange knowing you weren't at home to help me—but Aunt Mollie's good at Caesar!" David broke off to say; "she helped me over a hard line two or three times."

"Fine, that it's getting better!" Father said, heartily.

"And then after class he called me to his desk and I told him—I told him I hadn't even thought of the paper, I hadn't meant to move my hand or anything, but he only said he found it hard to believe me against the evidence of his senses. And then he said he would have to lay the matter before the Principal. So then, after school, he took me to Dr. Blackburn's office and told him. And Dr. Blackburn asked me just what I had done, and I said about what I've told you. And then Dr. Blackburn said to Mr. Price that I should have zero on the lesson for having the paper in class at all, but that my record was good, and you weren't here to consult, and it was better to have too much faith in a boy than too little. So that was all; but Mr. Price—he seemed angry about it after we had left the office."

"You say that was the first time? What was the second?"

"It was on Wednesday. I was translating, and I got it pretty good. And Mr. Price said, 'Sure that's all your own work, David?' and I said except Aunt Mollie helped with a verb. And, Father, he said, 'Every boy in the class clear out his desk and put on the top all he finds.' And we did. And in my desk I found a little paper book, and it had every word of the Caesar in English. I had never seen it before—"

"I know, my son. Were others like it found?"

"Yes, sir, three others. So we all four were taken to Dr. Blackburn's office and he suspended us for next week, because you would be here, and he wouldn't go into the matter without consulting each boy's father."

"And that's the whole story, my boy?" Father said, turning into the driveway, "Well, I'll tell you first that I believe every word of it, and I suspect only one thing—and that is that the work was better because you knew I had been worried a bit about your Latin, and so you wanted to improve it while I was gone, and surprise me with a good mark. Have I guessed it?"

"That was it! That was it, Father!"

"Well, I'm as pleased as Punch. Couldn't be more so. You've shown yourselve able to carry responsibility, patient under reproach and earnest in purpose. Good boy, David! And here's the Rectory door open and Winnie and Phil waving. We'll forget the worry, son, and just be happy!"

REAL LIFE.

Wythe Leigh Kinsolving.

A little bird was flying and singing as it flew;
The little bird looked at the sun, and saw the cloudland, too:
Ah, what a pretty world it is, the little birdie said:
The one Who sees the whole of it must live up overhead.
Of course 'tis I must get the straw and build it in a nest;
And when it rains I cannot find the straws that are the best;
But He above sends out the rays of sunlight; and I find
That He is very good to me and truly very kind;
Thus while I live I love to sing and have a happy day;
For with the things I'm bound to have, I sing along my way.

The lily looked so queenly as the sun shone out so clear;
She said sometimes the raindrops sweet bring to my roots good cheer;
The air is full of life, and I draw from it what I need;
As I delight to blossom, so also I drop my seed;
The One Who sends the sunshine and the rain is very kind;
I'm happy even as a bird; life very sweet I find.
I pondered on the birdie's lot and on the lily's, too;
For Solomon in glory was not dressed in gayer hue;
And never falls a sparrow but the Heavenly Father knows;
Great kindness to the lilies and the birds is that He shows.

How little are they anxious; and how happy birds and flowers;
How they live amid the sunshne and the fine health-gving showers;
Do they pray? Perhaps in faith, in hope, in love, they truly live,
Just perfectly dependent on the One Who loves to give
All the blessings most abundant for their happiness and peace:
They toil not and they want not, and their joys seem ne'er to cease!

Perfume for Mother.

Jean and Marie were standing by the mail-box, waiting for Mr. Anderson, the carrier, to come over the hill.

"I do wish he'd hurry," Jean said.

"So do I," her sister replied. "You know granny promised to tell us a story if we brought her a letter this morning. There he is now!" she exclaimed as Mr. Anderson came down the hill, stopping his car in a little cloud of dust.

"Where is Mrs. Arthur?" he asked. "I have a valuable parcel for her."

"She couldn't come, so she sent us," the girls answered in one breath.

"Well, see you don't lose this parcel. Here is a letter for her, too," he added, and then he disappeared down the road.

"Oh, goody! I do believe it is from her big boy. See the queer postmark. I can't even read it," Jean said as they started back along the little green road to Granny Arthur's home on the other side of the big hill.

Now, Granny Arthur's little white house, with its big garden filled with lovely flowers, was the nicest place in all the world, and every summer Jean and Marie came to live there.

They loved to listen to granny's stories and to play with their dolls in the playhouse up in the apple tree. But this summer granny was very lame, so Jean and Marie ran errands for her.

A little breeze brought a whiff of fragrance from granny's garden.

"Oh, dear!" Marie sighed. "I wish we could think of some way to get that perfume into a bottle for mother. She just loves it, and she can't come here in the summer with us."

"So do I. I have tried and tried, but I can't think of a single way to get any. Let's hurry, though, the sun is getting hot," Jean said, and soon they were going up the walk to the porch, where granny was waiting.

"Here's your letter, granny dear, and here is a parcel, too," they called.

Jean and Marie sat very still while granny read the long letter from her big boy, Jim, who was in that far-away place with a name one could not pronounce. Then she opened the little parcel, which had the same hard name stamped on it.

"Come here, Jean and Marie," she said. "See this tiny bottle. It is filled with the loveliest perfume in all the world. Attar of roses. How would you like to hear its story this morning?"

"Do tell us, granny. And begin right now."

"Very well," she said, as the girls sat on the porch steps in the shade of the climbing roses. "In that tiny bottle Jim sent is the sweetness of many thousands of roses.

"These roses are gathered in the beautiful sunny rosefields of Bulgaria. In the early morning, before the sun gets hot, men and boys and women and girls gather the roses and rosebuds. They are taken to the rose-sheds. The petals and buds are put into water and boiled. The sweetness of the roses is in the steam that rises. This steam is caught in a tube and is turned back into liquid."

"I know," Jean said as granny stopped to watch a robin hopping down the path. "It is just like when I hold a plate over the teakettle spout and drops of water form."

"That is right," granny went on. "This liquid is put into pans and let stand all night. In the morning there is a thin coating of oil on it. The oil is very carefully taken off, and it is now known as attar of roses. It is so strong that only one drop is needed to make a whole gallon of perfume."

"Just think," Marie exclaimed, "you would never know, to look at roses, that they are worth so much."

"I do wish we could get some perfume like that for mother," Jean said wistfully. "Do you think we could, granny?"

"I am afraid not, dear child. That perfume is very costly," and granny smiled as she added, "I wonder if you girls will go up to the attic for me. You will see a little old trunk under the window. Open it and get the box you will find there."

Jean and Marie climbed the attic stars and pushed the low door open. "My!" Jean exclaimed. "What a lovely place to play in the winter! Don't you wish we could come here then?"

They soon found the box in the little trunk under the window, and carefully carried it down to granny. She opened it, and there was a lovely brown jar that sparkled as the sun shone on it.

"This is the rose-jar I had when I was a little girl, and I have been thinking I'd like to have it filled with petals from these roses climbing over the porch," she said.

"Oh, granny! Let us do it right away," Marie begged, and soon the little brown jar was filled with the fragrant pink petals. "M-m-m," she whispered to Jean, "wouldn't mother just love to smell these?"

"That is fine," granny said, and she dropped one drop from her tiny perfume bottle on to the petals in the jar.

Jean and Marie sniffed. "It smells just like the roses before the sun shines on them in the morning."

"Now," said granny, "I know two little girls who have been feet for me all summer. And they never grumbled once when they had to leave their dolls to go after the mail in the hot sun, or pick the berries for supper. Do you suppose they would like this rose jar?"

"Oh, granny! Not really! For mother? Is it really ours to give to mother?"

Granny nodded, while Jean and Marie hugged her tight, and whispered, "You are the best granny in all the world."—Junior World.

On Striking a Man When He is in Your Power.

David once did this thing when the king of Israel was in his power, and a temptation at this point may try us. To strike at those who are wronging us, to say some sharp or ugly word about those whom we do not like or who do not like us, to take advantage of a man who is in our power, to hit an enemy or rival when he is down—who has had the opportunity and not felt the temptation to do this? But to resist such opportunities and solicitations to do evil, to deal justly and generously with an enemy, to speak kindly of him, to take no advantage of weakness, to walk all around a sleeping enemy and never touch him—this is noble self-control and manhood. Jesus when He was reviled, reviled not again, and though He had ten legions of angels at His command yet He resisted not His enemies with a sword, but let them take Him to the cross.—Ex.

Christ Church, Joliet, to Celebrate.

Christ Church has completed plans for celebrating its one hundredth anniversary next month. The celebration will start May 5, with the Rev. Duncan H. Browne, S. T. D., rector of St. James' Church, mother church of the diocese, preaching.

On May 7, the Girls' Friendly Society will sponsor a centennial entertainment, and on May 9, will be the Centennial dinner and parish reunion. May 10 will bring a Centennial Ball; May 12, the Very Rev. Irvine Goddard, rector of Emmanuel Church, LaGrange, will be the preacher. In the afternoon, the reunion of the choir will be held. The men's centennial program is scheduled for May 13; May 14, a Japanese bridge tea.

On May 16, will occur the one hundredth anniversary service, with reception in the afternoon, and Bishop Stewart preaching and confirming in the evening. May 17, the children's celebration will occur and May 19, the Very Rev. E. J. M. Nutter of Nashotah House, will be the special preacher.

Mr. James Vard Clyne is chairman of the centennial arrangements, and the Rev. Joseph S. Minnis is rector.

Christ Church dates back to the days when Bishop Philander Chase, first Bishop of Illinois, rode along the Illinois River, carrying the Church to far outposts. In fact, Bishop Chase was largely instrumental in the founding of the parish, which has carried on consecutively through the century.

Chicago Centenary Fund Progresses.

Grace Church, Oak Park, has set as its goal in the Centenary Fund Campaign about to be launched by the Diocese of Chicago at $100,000. This is the latest of the larger parishes in the city to set a definite goal.

Six parishes have decided to give all that they raise in the campaign to the diocesan fund. They are: Epiphany and Trinity Churches, Chicago; St. James, Dundee; Emmanuel, LaGrange; St. Anne's, Morrison, and Christ Church, Waukegan.

Governor Henry Horner has sent a Centennial Message to the diocese, saying in part:

"I heartily congratulate you upon your plans for a centennial celebration of the founding of the Episcopal Church in Illinois; the important event, which took place near Peoria one hundred years ago. That this centennial is to mark the beginning of an even greater period of service to God and to the State by the Episcopal Church, is my sincere hope."

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

The Symbol of Life.

As automobiles approach what was once the most dangerous intersection in Atlanta, known as "Dead Man's Curve", the headlights for nearly half a mile away bring into flaming prominence the reflector cross at the foot of the Cathedral Hill. It is so beautiful a sight that drivers instinctively slow down, not from a sense of danger, but with a desire to let the eye linger a little longer on this symbol of life. As the car draws nearer the name of the Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip, Atlanta, and its services are plainly discernible on this sign.

Y. P. S. L. Activities.

The Young People's Service League of the Cathedral of St. Philip, Atlanta, presented a pageant, "How the Light Came", by the Rev. F. D. Graves, on Palm Sunday evening. This was part of the year's study of missions of the Church.

"The Terrible Meek," by Charles R. Kennedy, was presented Maundy Thursday evening by the Young People's Service League of St. Luke's Church, Atlanta. This play, containing only three characters, is played in total darkness until the last four lines, when a faint light shows the three crosses upon Calvary. The St. Luke's League is giving this play in connection with the Personal Evangelism Committee of the Diocese. At the Diocesan Convention of the Y. P. S. L. in May, St. Luke's League will have notebooks and ideas that are workable to present for the other groups in the diocese.

An honorary society, Omicron Delta Epsilon, based upon a point system for the Service Leaguers of St. Luke's Church, Atlanta, is being formulated. The ritualistic service has been planned and the initiation tea will be held in May, following the Diocesan Y. P. S. L. Convention, which will be held at the Cathedral of St. Philip. Points will be awarded for young people giving most outstanding service in the five fields and practicing the four ideals of worship, study, service and fellowship.

Children's Easter Offering.

Easter pageants and the presentation of the Mite Box Offering formed colorful service in each of the Church Schools of the diocese. The Church School having the largest per capita offering for the Mite boxes will be awarded the Bishop's banner at the annual Diocesan Church School Service, on Sunday, May 5, at the Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip, Atlanta.

The children of the Diocesan Church Schools are sending their gifts for the kindergarten teacher in St. Margaret's, Tokyo, to the Diocesan Chairman of Religious Education, W. W. Davison, of All Saints, Atlanta.

Andria Bandy Gray.

NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. E. V. Shayler, D. D., Bishop.

Oldest Inhabitant of Omaha Passes.

Trinity Cathedral was filled with a subdued and saddened congregation last Monday to honor the late Frederick H. Davis, senior warden of the Cathedral Parish, and for many years the oldest continuous inhabitant of Omaha. For nearly eighty years Mr. Davis has grown up with the city. He has been prominent in Episcopal Church life, in banking, industrial expansion, civic office and education. From its inception the Bishop Clarkson Memorial Hospital has received his loving and constant care. Brownell Hall, the Episcopal Church School for girls, from which such illustrious figures as Josephine Roche and many others have graduated, was one of his deepest interests. He is survived by his wife, who is a daughter of the late Bishop Clarkson.

Personal Notes

Bishop Helfenstein Has a Busy Lent.

From Ash Wednesday, beginning with the midday service in St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, to Easter afternoon, Confirmation at the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Bishop Helfenstein participated in forty-five services, confirming during that period of time 518 persons.

The Rev. Canon G. Freeland Peter, D. D., sailed on April 18 for Italy to take charge, for at least a few months, of St. James' Church, Florence, relieving Bishop Booth of Vermont, who has been there for the past few weeks. Canon Peter's name is well-known from his position during the past seven years as canon and chancellor of the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, Washington, D. C., before which time he was rector of St. James' Church, Richmond. He is a descendant of George Washington's family. He formerly lived for some time in Florence, and is familiar with the parish.

Mrs. Peter will join her husband in Florence as soon as possible after the Episcopal High School in Alexandria, where their son, G. Freeland Peter, Jr., is a student, has closed in June. She will be accompanied by her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Aiken Nolting, as well as by her son on her trip to Italy.

The Rev. Philip Kittredge Kemp, A. B., M. A., S. T. B., was instituted by Bishop Seaman as rector of Emmanuel Parish, San Angelo, in the Missionary District of North Texas, on April 15. The day of the institution was the sixteenth anniversary of the rector's ordination to the Priesthood. He has transferred from Glendale, California, in the Diocese of Los Angeles, where he was rector for twelve years.

The Rev. George W. Atkinson, D. D., recently resigned, has been elected rector-emeritus of St. James' Church, Washington, where he served with conspicuous loyalty for many years.

Ordinations.

The Rev. Frederick Alexander McDonald was ordained to the Priesthood by the Most Rev. James DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop of Rhode Island and Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, Tuesday morning, April 23, at 9:30 o'clock in St. Stephen's Church, Providence, R. I., which Mr. McDonald has been serving as assistant curate since last September. Bishop Perry acted for the Rt. Rev. S. Arthur Huston, D. D., Bishop of Olympia, of which the ordinand is canonically a member.

The Rt. Rev. G. G. Bennett, D. D., Auxiliary Bishop of Rhode Island, was deacon, reading the Gospel; the Rev. Harold N. Renfrew of the General Theological Seminary, was sub-deacon, and Canon B. I. Bell, litanist; Fr. Spence Burton, D. D., of the Order of St. John the Evangelist, Cambridge, Mass., preached the sermon, and the rector, the Rev. Charles Townsend, presented the candidate.

Two Young Ministers Ordained During Lent.

Two young ministers of the Diocese were ordained to the priesthood during the Lenten season by the Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin, Bishop of Texas. The Rev. E. Percy Bartlam, who has been the assistant at Trinity, Houston, for the past seven months, was presented for ordination by the Rev. Thomas N. Carruthers at Trinity Church on April 11. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Everett H. Jones of St. Paul's Church, Waco.

On April 12, the Rev. Homer Neville Tinker was ordained in St. Philip's Church, Hearne, Texas. At this service, the sermon was preached by the Rev. J. P. DeWolfe of Christ Church, Houston, and the candidate was presented by the Rev. James S. Allen of St. David's Church, Austin.

The Rev. Mr. Bartlam will continue as assistant rector at Trinity Church, Houston.

The Rev. Mr. Tinker will continue as priest-in-charge of St. Philip's, Hearne, and Epiphany, Calvert, Texas.

Deaths.

The Rev. Robert Scott Chalmers, D. D., rector of Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, died suddenly on April 12, while preaching in Trinity Church, New York, at the noonday service. His death was a great shock to Maryland, as well as the entire Church.

The Rev. B. McK. Garlick, one of the assistant ministers of Grace and St. Peter's, went to New York to meet Dr. Chalmers' son, the Rev. William H. Chalmers, of the Order of the Holy Cross, and the two accompanied the body to Baltimore.

The body laid in state in the Baptistry until the funeral on Monday morning. Bishop Helfenstein read the burial office and Father Shirley W. Hughson, Superior of the Order of the Holy Cross had the Requiem Mass. The Rev. G. Warfield Hobbs, D. D., represented the Presiding Bishop and National Council. Burial was in Druid Ridge Cemetery, Baltimore.

Dr. Chalmers was born in Dundee, Scotland, in 1882. He was educated at Edinburgh University and came to America at the age of twenty-five and went to work with a rubber company. He became assistant credit manager of the company, later assistant to the treasurer, but cut short his business connections to prepare for the ministry. He studied at Bexley Hall Divinity School, Gambier, Ohio, where he received the degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Divinity. He was made deacon in St. Paul's Church, Akron, Ohio, where he served from 1914 to 1915; then successively rector of Trinity Church, Tiffin, 1915-1918; rector of St. Mark's Church, Toledo, 1918-1924; Dean of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Dallas, Texas, 1924-1930, when he became rector of Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore.

He was a member of the National Council from 1924 to 1930, and a member of the Standing Committee in the Diocese of Texas and later in the Diocese of Maryland. He was a Trustee of the Donaldson School, Ilchester; St. James' School for Boys, Washington County, Maryland, and a member of the University Club, Baltimore.

In addition to his son, the Rev. William H. Chalmers, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Adela W. Burnet Chalmers, formerly of Glasgow, Scotland, another son, James Chalmers, and a daughter, Miss Margaret Chalmers.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

"Love made perfect in deed is nearest akin to God of all things beneath the stars."

Mankind, on the whole, needs not so much revelation as redemption.—Figgis.

Peter believed because he had found a living Jesus, not because he could not find a dead one.—Sel.

If you desire Heaven, you must win it; for Heaven is a Temper, not a place. —Farrar.

You must be free from sin in proportion as you would judge with the allowance and the charity of Jesus Christ.—F. W. Robertson.

Power of life means power of suffering.—Hort.

"Deny the reality of the resurrection, and it is certain that Christianity becomes a patch-work, whose complete disintegration is only a question of time. Affirm the resurrection, and Christianity becomes a seamless robe, woven throughout by the Master Workman of us all."

"Back flies the foam; the hoisted flag streams back;
The long smoke wavers on the backward track,
Back with the wind fly the things that wind obey;
The strong ship keeps on its appointed way."

There are so many kinds of ignorance and they do so many kinds of harm; but the most fatal ignorance is not to know love when it looks us in the face, nor gentleness when we have felt its healing touch, nor goodness when it travels our own streets, nor wisdom when it speaks to us of the things which belong to our peace.—Dr. Gaius Glenn Atkins.

It might be possible to double the amount given by a church without increasing its spirituality and power, but it would be impossible to multiply the number of members who gave according to the principles of the Spirit of Christ without immensely augmenting that Church's spiritual life and achieving ability.—John R. Mott.

The coming of the Kingdom of God can mean nothing less than the opening up, for every living soul of the human race, regardless of race or nation, rank or color, full liberty of development for the Godlike powers with which it has been endowed.—Edward Grubb.

Free, indeed, men must be to accept Christ as Lord or to reject Him; but when they have accepted His Lordship, they cannot be their own masters, and the society or fellowship of believers claim this loyalty.—Selected.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

1835—CHRIST CHURCH CENTENNIAL—1935

JOLIET, ILLINOIS

Christ Church was founded on May 16, 1835, and has had a continuous history in the community during the hundred years which have passed. A note in the parish register tells that in 1849, because of the gold mania which swept the country and because of cholera, there were only seven communicants left in the parish. Among those who have ministered to the parish were the Reverend Clinton Locke, the Reverend John Hazen White (later Bishop of Indiana), the Reverend Bohler Walker (who later went to Atlanta, Georgia), and the Reverend T. Dewitt Tanner (who is now in Bellingham, Washington). The Reverend Joseph Summerville Minnis, the present rector, came in 1932 from the Washington Cathedral, where he had been connected with the College of Preachers.

The Centennial celebration will be held from May 5th to 19th.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Religious Life in the Nation's Capital.

April 12, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

Bishop Freeman, to whom you wrote under date of March 28 regarding the Committee on Religious Life in the Nation's Capital, has asked me, as Secretary of the Committee, to reply. This movement represents the twenty-two leading Churches of all denominations in Washington. Some forty-one pastors representing the Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Jewish Churches, have signed an appeal for greater emphasis on the claims of religion and church attendance. The Committee plans to lay special emphasis on reaching the hundred thousand and more government employees in Washington, as these constitute one-fifth of the total population.

It will be greatly appreciated if the "Southern Churchman" can call the attention of its readers to the fact that they are invited to communicate with the undersigned, or any other Episcopal Minister in Washington, if they know of any Episcopalians moving to the city, or who have recently moved here and are without church connections. Arrangements will be made to have them called upon by the rector of the nearest parish. In each case their home address and parish, and their position in Washington and their Washington residence should be mentioned. It may interest you to publish the enclosed statement which we issued to the press a few weeks ago, or at least some extracts from it.

Thanking you for your letter, I am

Anson Phelps Stokes.

Principles Not Lost.

April 18, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

I have just read your account of the service commemorating the evacuation of Richmond, and think it very unfortunate that the term "Lost Cause" was used.

True principles can not be lost and if they were not true why commemorate them? The principles for which the South stood in 1861 were those for which the United Colonies stood in 1776. They were true then, in 1865, and now.

"A cause that produced a Lee and a Jackson can never be lost"; nor the steadfast people of which Richmond is proud.

Please call attention to the anomaly of the use of the term in this connection.

Yours truly,

Sue Ruffin Tyler.

Satisfactory Dividends.

1174 Victoria Avenue, Los Angeles, Cal.

Mr. Editor:

Unless my memory is very much at fault, which is liable to be true of those of us who have qualified for membership in the octogenarian class, this renewal remittance herewith handed is my fifty-sixth annual one.

Had my other investments returned such satisfactory dividends as have these annual remittances of renewal, I would be well up to the "Morgan class." As satisfactory as has been the reading of your journal to me, and as good as I know it to be, I believe had I failed in prompt remittance to it my conscience would have so rebelled as to entirely upset my mental powers of appreciation. Of course, do not permit the "slow pays" or the "never pays" to know that any one of your subscribers entertain such an unethical opinion; should you do so it is highly probably many would write "discontinue the paper," or say "the Southern Churchman has greatly deteriorated since the depression began."

The fellow, either male or female, who has placed himself or herself in either one of the last two named classes should refrain from criticizing the street gamin who crawls under the tent to see the circus performance.

Armistead C. Leigh.

"Dr. Bill's School."

Perhaps not all of our readers know of the school of social service conducted by Dr. William Keller in Cincinnati each Summer. For the past number of years Dr. Keller with the charming Mrs. Keller has been taking seminarians right into his home and giving them an insight into practical life as it is found in the big city and into conditions which they will face in their ministries.

Greek and Hebrew are certainly needed in the scholarly side of the ministry, but many problems of a social nature in the past have come to young clergy and older ones, too, which they have not been prepared to meet. Dr. Keller is adding a new and fine training to the work of the ministry.

Dr. Keller literally visits the jails, and even the sweat shops, to show his pupils life in the raw. After all, such visiting has the sanction of The Master Himself. The idea that the ministry is a protected life, away from the horrors that humanity has to face, is not Dr. Keller's idea, for he knows that to be effective the clergy must know all sorts of conditions of men.

And then the Church has been accused of having the poorest trained men in social service. Many a good rector has no knowledge of social service technique and consequently is often the bane of the trained social worker's existence. But Dr. Keller's pupils know social service, for they work with social workers. Undoubtedly they have something fine to give the social workers, but also the workers have a great deal more to give them. They see the social service set-up of a great and well organized city. They meet the men and women in the institutions and hospitals who deal with humanity and humanity's problems, and they go back home with eyes opened.

Dr. Keller is known to his "alumni" as "Dr. Bill". In the present depression the Social Service Department of our National Council has had to cut off the appropriation made to this great work. Under Bishop Hobson and the Diocese of Southern Ohio the work is encouraged to continue, but more contributions are needed. If any of our readers interested in well trained clergy and real social work in religion make a contribution, they will have encouraged one of our finest pieces of real and vital work in the national church. We must keep "Dr. Bill" going.

Contrbutions sent either to Dr. Keller direct or to the Diocese of Southern Ohio for this national work would be a real blessing to the work of the Church.

Reading Schools for Laity.

If a large orchestra were to play with no rehearsals, or even worse, with no musicians, the result would be discordant and unpleasant and the music would never be played as the composer dreamed it. And yet in the Episcopal Church, we have a great poetry in our Book of Common Prayer that is read by many who have no appreciation of the drama or the beauty contained in the book.

As part of The Forward Movement it might be a good thing for a few interested laymen to gather for instruction in reading. Of course we know that a great many clergy should have such instruction also, but couldn't parish clergy conduct such schools and do not teachers often get more out of such studies than their pupils?

The tragedy of the average service is the fact that with some of the most beautiful English ever written, prepared for aiding worship, the many listeners never hear the religious truths expressed, because they are expressed monotonously and inartistically.

The General Confession of Morning Prayer is often read with the emphasis in the wrong places, so that a listener with no familiarity might think most of us were bragging that we had done the things we ought to do instead of the opposite feeling which is contained in the words.

The laity would be interested in the drama and would possibly point out to their clergy many places for improvement if little schools of reading could be held in parishes from time to time. At least it is a worth-while idea.

Looking Forward to a Goal.

The Great Fifty Days which is being emphasized by The Forward Movement as it has never been emphasized in the American Church will bring about a new thought of Whitsunday and the Birthday of the Church.

Too often we have good ideas born in the minds of clergy and often of the laity, but we find that for some reason or other, failure often follows great ideas. One reason for failure is the fact that there is no goal to work towards. We American people like goals. We like community campaigns where we know what we should attain, to be successful. We like programs that are definite in objective. This Fifty Days under the Forward Movement gives us such a goal.

Whitsunday is late this year. In many of our South-

British Church Officials Score Munition Makers.

Christian Century, April 24, 1935.

When the British government announced, on February 18, "the terms of reference" together with the personnel of the royal commission charged with the responsibilities of investigating the munitions industries there was the usual remonstrance from various quarters. Those who were overcautious, as well as the avowed opponents of the inquiry, expressed their fear of too much prying into personal affairs and too much interference with a business that is "after all neither better nor worse" than any other form of business. It remained for the archbishops of Canterbury and York, the Anglican archbishops of the churches in Wales and Ireland, together with representative leaders of the British free churches to form, on behalf of British Protestantism, a united front against profits in the arms trade. In a lengthy memorandum addressed to the royal commission, which has hardly begun its long grind, these prelates insisted that "the present system of manufacture of and trade in arms is open to grave objection and is provocative of war." Said they: "We have been gravely disturbed by allegations made that the armaments industry has used the power of its financial strength to impede the negotiation of treaties for the limitation and reduction of armaments, that it has used the means of propaganda to keep alive such international alarms as will increase its profits. . . . We believe that steps must be taken to eliminate private profits from . . . this industry, either by appropriate measures of restriction or control, or, if such measures proved inadequate, by the transfer of the industry to some public authority." This sort of language should prove a signal for a further bombardment of official quarters from the churches and smaller sections of public opinion generally. In that event our British friends may yet expect to witness a real investigation, one which assumes from the start that the private business of munition making is after all public business, and that it must be understood and dealt with accordingly.

League of Clergy for Peace.

Church of England Newspaper, April 12, 1935.

A meeting of the League of Clergy for Peace was held recently at three, Little Cloister, Westminster Abbey, by kind invitation of Canon F. Lewis Donaldson.

The speaker was Rev. E. N. Porter Goff, Secretary of the Christian Organizations Committee of the League of Nations Union. He reported briefly what was being done up and down the country under the auspices of his Committee. Conferences of clergy and ministers had been held in twenty-five Dioceses, by the invitation of, and generally under the presidency of, the Bishop, to consider what they as clergy and ministers could do to present the case for peace. He did not think any useful purpose was served by blaming statesmen. The more fruitful approach was outlined in a paper which had been prepared by his Committee, and which had been distributed to those present. This paper recalled the words of the Lord Privy Seal on March 7, that:

"The foreign policy of His Majesty's Government is unalterably based on the League of Nations as being the most effective mechanism yet devised to operate a collective peace system; and that there is no security in arms comparable to that which can be derived from the effective working of such a system."

We had a right to ask that this policy should be pursued consistently, and that it should be as much in evidence in British naval, army and air estimates as in British pronouncements upon Foreign Affairs. We must make it clear to our statesmen that in carrying out their declared policy they would have our support, but that if they departed from this policy they could not rely upon our sustained support.

Several interesting questions were raised in the subsequent discussion, and it was evident that some of the clergy were convinced that the way of complete pacifism was the only one they could follow. Others present felt that support of the collective system, embodied in the League of Nations, was the only solution in the present state of the world.

The New Leisure.

By John W. Day, in The Witness, April 18, 1935.

To Fred Eastman, professor of religious drama in the Chicago Theological Seminary, the problem of the new leisure suggests the story of the boy who received three Christmas presents: a sled, an air-rifle, and a diary. In the diary he made these entries, "December 26: Snowed so hard I was not allowed to go out with my sled. December 27: Still snowing. Had to stay in. December 28: More snow. Shot grandmother." Professor Eastman's comment is, "When denied recreation and amusement we shoot grandmother."

My own reflection is: "When we are furnished with the means of recreation and amusement and don't know how to use them we shoot grandmother."

Assuming that there is already a problem in regard to leisure time, it is not yet sufficiently acute to cause us much worry. Many individuals who have benefited by the NRA to the tune of fewer hours of daily labor, report that for several months they spent their time catching up on sleep and rest.

No one questions the hope that the day is not far distant when workers will really have a problem of leisure time, which can be occupied with some helpful and healthful amusement or occupation and not in "shooting grandmother."

a successful skirmish of a small body of troops, has sometimes brought on a general engagement of the whole army, resulting in a great victory. The really important thing is to prove by an actual demonstration, that God is just as ready as ever to manifest His Divine Power in and through His Church, whenever His people show sufficient faith in His promises to bring down that Power from above, to lead them on to victory. And there is no reason why our own Church should not be able to bring about such a demonstration as any other.

O keep Thy promise, Lord,
According to Thy Word,
That they who will believe

A New Battle of the Marne

The first Battle of the Marne, as we all know, turned the tide in the Great War, which seemed to be going against the Allies. After many days of retreat, which seemed to forecast a complete route, they took a stand at the River Marne and began an offensive movement which ended in a victory for them, and a consequent retreat of the German Armies. It was the turning point in the Great War. We may, perhaps, take this event as an illustration of what might be done to arrest the rearguard action of the Christian forces which has been going on for some time and to take the offensive and win a similar and even a more decisive victory for Christianity than was won by the Allies at the Marne.

An Ever Victorious Army.

An army that is always on the defensive never wins a campaign. But there is no reason at all why Christianity should submit to be reduced to a merely defensive position. It has at its command all the resources needed to keep up an offensive warfare, and to go on winning victory after victory all the time. There was everything to discourage the Allies when they reached the Marne, and it probably seemed to many of them, a hopeless task to attempt to turn the tide against their foes. It was courage and a firm faith in their cause which enabled them to strike back, when all seemed lost. But the Christian army has no need to be discouraged, for the situation is similar to that in which the prophet Elisha said to his servant, when the city in which they were staying, was surrounded by the Syrian armies:—"They that be with us are more than they that be with them." For the Word of God says:—"Ye are come unto Mount Sion and unto the city of the Living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels." Heb. 12:22. We have lost sight of the main body of the army of the Living God, although they have joined forces with us, and if we are willing to fight the good fight of faith, which includes a clear consciousness of the fact that we have been reinforced with the heavenly legions, then defeat is inconceivable. And not only that but there should be a continuous advance.

The Intellectual and the Spiritual Planes.

It has been proved by years of actual experience, that this triumphant progress cannot be made on the intellectual plane. Much as learning has added to the strength of the Christian position in many cases, and however necessary it may be in building up a reasoned theology, it has not been able to restore to us that technique of spiritual power which was the priceless possession of the Early Church. If that is to be restored to us it can only be through the exercise of faith upon the spiritual plane. On the intellectual plane we are being held up by our adversaries and brought to a standstill, because they are using the same weapons which we ourselves possess, and their skill in using these weapons is often more clearly manifested in their hands than in our own.

The Superiority of the Spiritual Plane.

But on the spiritual plane we Christians have an overwhelming advantage, because that is the region to which our adversaries have no power to penetrate, because they have never learned to adapt themselves to it. We are told, with good reason, that the next Great War will be fought in the air, and it is, we believe, a great advantage to the pilots who can manage to keep their airplanes above those of their foes and thus hold a position which enables them to dominate those below them. The spiritual plane is, as it were, the stratosphere as compared with the intellectual plane below it. It requires the exercises of our spiritual faculties and their proper development to carry on a warfare at such a high altitude. But it is only upon the spiritual plane, and by fighting the good fight of faith, that Christianity can be proved to possess a power superior to every other known to mankind. This is because faith is the faculty which enables us to draw upon the only source of spiritual power, which is God Himself. We can by faith, feel assured that just as we rise in the morning and go forth with the belief that all necessary physical strength will be at our command to do our ordinary day's work, so will all spiritual power be forthcoming necessary to enable us to live the Christian life.

The Hour of Destiny.

It seems to be a time when the Christian Church should realize that the hour has arrived, when she should courageously take the offensive and go forward with a full assurance that all the necessary power will be forthcoming, not only to resist but to drive back her adversaries and make a triumphant advance towards the bringing in of the Kingdom of God upon earth.

The Forward Movement.

In our own Church we have started a Forward Movement, under the leadership of Bishop Hobson, of Southern Ohio. We have passed through several Movements which have had their day and ceased to be, because our people have not taken them seriously enough to carry them to a successful completion. The Forward Movement is of a different character. It is not a mere campaign to raise funds, nor is it intended merely to supply our people with information as to what the Church is trying to do, although it may include that. So far from that it is a genuine attempt to awaken our people to a consciousness of what it means to be disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ, and so inspire them to walk in His steps that the Church may come to be really and truly made up of loyal and consecrated members, full of enthusiasm for the cause of Christ and with a fixed determination to make His Kingdom a reality here on earth.

The Last Shall Be First.

It will, of course, be said that the Episcopal Church is but a small part of Christendom as a whole, and that it is absurd to suppose that so small a part could start a movement which would involve the whole Christian world. But, as we all know, "God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform." It seems to many very, very strange that such a tiny speck in the vast universe as this earth of ours should have been chosen by God to carry out His great work of Redemption. But He did so, nevertheless. We remember, too, how Gideon, when he was called by God to lead Israel against the Midianites, said:—"Oh, my Lord, wherewith shall I save Israel? behold my family is poor in Manasseh, and I am the least of my father's house." And history has shown again and again that

The Moslem Awakening

By JAMES THAYER ADDISON,

Professor in Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Massachusetts.

IN THE last ten or twelve years in this country we have grown rather tired of hearing about Fundamentalists and Modernists. But I hope our interest may freshen if we change the subject from Christian Fundamentalists and Modernists in America to Moslem Fundamentalists and Modernists in Cairo and the Near East.

Until very recently all Mohammedans were fundamentalists in several senses of that word. They rejected all modern science. They clung to ancient dogma and to ancient forms of education and they believed devoutly that their sacred book, the Koran, was absolutely infallible and inspired word for word. Against these rocks of conviction the waves of modern learning and discovery and the tides of Christian missionary enthusiasm have dashed in vain. But about a generation ago there began to be faint stirrings of a new development, and in the last seventeen years since the war these first signs have expanded into a vigorous movement which challenges at point after point the claims and convictions of the old Islam. At last there is such a thing as Moslem modernism. That is what I went to Egypt especially to study, some years ago, and the results proved interesting and fruitful beyond my expectation.

In the first place, there are changes in religious belife. In Moslem countries in the good old days you could always count on all the people and their leaders being professed and orthodox Moslems. But the inroads of European science and culture have been so extensive and devastating that in Egypt and Turkey today a large proportion of the educated and governing classes are not at heart Moslems at all. Such a mild profession of faith as they may see fit to make from motives of policy barely disguises their scepticism and agnosticism. So far the merest handful have become Christian, but tens of thousands have inwardly given up the consolation of any religion. These open or secret doubters and deniers form the extreme wing of the new movement. Less advanced than they are other thousands of educated men who are trying to readjust their religious beliefs to modern conditions, trying to reconcile an infallible sacred book with modern science, trying to combine the old claims of religion with the new claims of Western culture. You see how similar their difficulties are to those of many here at home. And then still further to the right you find the huge illiterate majority still untouched by outside influences and still following leaders educated in the old school—narrow, intolerant, and obstinately orthodox.

To sum up, by looking at the two extremes, you remember that Turkey went so far in 1924 as to abolish the Caliphate—that supreme office of temporal and spiritual power in the Moslem world—and to forbid the teaching even of the Mohammedan religion in the schools. For the first time in Moslem history Church has thus been divorced from State and religion made to stand on its own feet. That, so far, is the extreme case of reform in Moslem lands. And at the other extreme, as I have said, we must put the tens of millions of ignorant believers whose religion is very much what it was a thousand years ago. The significant point, however, is that the liberalizing movement is growing in strength and the number which it affects is steadily increasing. Above all, a new tolerance and open-mindedness are everywhere in evidence.

THE SPREAD of open-minded tolerance shows itself in the extraordinary zeal for modern education among Moslems in the Near East. Egypt is a conspicuous example of this. Everywhere fathers among the upper and middle classes and (to an increasing degree) even among the lower classes are eager that their sons and even their daughters should reap the advantages of a modern Western education. That education a few of them get abroad; many thousands find it in American Mission schools and colleges in Egypt; but the enormous majority of those who get it at all receive it in less admirable but still valuable form in the Egyptian Government Schools. In Egypt today there are over 600,000 children in elementary schools where at least a mild beginning is made in education, while a smaller number of more than 12,000 goes on to really modern study of more advanced grade. It is these men with their modern training of the Western type who are becoming the governing classes of the next generation. For no government positions are open except to those who have had this secondary school training.

Though I saw, when in Egypt, something of the government schools, I saw much more (both as teacher and as observer) of the American University at Cairo, an institution now fifteen years old, with a brilliant future before it. In that most interesting college of some two hundred and fifty students, nearly a score of different nationalities are represented—about half of them Mohammedans, a few Jews, and the rest scattered among different types of Christianity. They were a delightfully varied group to teach and in no subject more so than in the subject of religion. What more direct and amazing proof could be found of the new spirit of open-minded tolerance than the picture of all these young men studying at an institution avowedly American and avowedly Christian, warmly encouraged to come by Moslem fathers as well as Christian fathers, and always ready and eager to discuss in class the pros and con of any and every religion including their own. Twenty years ago the classes I taught would have been impossible. They never would have asked the questions they now ask. Here, for instance, are some of the questions that these very live wires used to ask me: Why are there different religions in the world? What is the difference between supernatural and superstitious? Why have you the religion which you have? Is it due to family influences? How do we know that Christ really existed? And then there were other questions, less theological, which revealed personal and social problems. Is it possible to cure spiritual disease? What are the chief causes of revolution? Why does Islam permit polygamy? Is it true that a sinner who repents will be applauded in Heaven?

Among these young men students and teachers could talk freely about any religion. Moslems could ask me what in the world I meant by saying that Christ was the Son of God and I or other Christians could ask them why on earth they thought the Holy Koran was infallible. And so Moslems and Christians could meet for the first time in many centuries as personal friends to discuss the deep problems of religion, not only with no desire to exterminate each other, but with no desire even to take an unfair advantage of each other.

Ideals and Life

By JAMES E. FREEMAN,
Bishop of Washington.

Bishop Freeman.

CAN we survive individually or corporately without religious ideals? This is the primary and pertinent question of the hour. Up to the present we have assumed that fundamentally as a people we were upon a religious foundation, and it is only within recent years that this assumption has been challenged. In all our concepts of individual and corporate practice a religious basis is implied. Wherever men in public life by word or act have denied this, they have lost public favor and their decline has been swift and certain. Such religious principles as the "Golden Rule" and those set forth in the Ten Commandments have occupied a conspicuous and integral place in our life.

It is interesting and significant to note that some of our outstanding publicists and educators are beginning to appraise the causes of our present confusion and are tracing them to the decay of moral and spiritual ideals. Recently, Dr. Angell, President of Yale University, in a notable address, declared that, "Only when and if there be an essentially ethical and religious attitude introduced into the convictions of the great mass of the population can there be that generous and whole-hearted cooperation which can alone guarantee continuing process, even in the face of shifting circumstance." He refers to the "acceptance of a spiritual order of righteousness as constituting an integral part of reality," and maintains that, "The ultimate values of life are reflected in beauty, truth, righteousness and their kin," and that all these are "Children of the spirit and very close to the heart of true religion." Continuing, Dr. Angell said: "They are indigenous to the human social order, and in any effort to better that order they must be taken into full account. While hunger and destitution are insufferable in any age, it is still as true today as it was 1,900 years ago that man does not live by bread alone. Any effort to bring peace and happiness into our lives, which seeks this result through economic channels solely, is destined to defeat."

These are significant words. They are the profound convictions of the head of one of our greatest educational institutions. It may be and probably is true that the practical values of religion as applied to our social and economic practice have not been made as evident in our age as they should be. It may be that our practice has not squared with our profession. Doubtless much of the apostasy of our age is traceable to the failure of the professed religionist to make his religious principles operative in his daily conduct and practice. Certainly the time has come where we must face the challenge presented in Dr. Angell's bold statement. It is becoming increasingly evident that security and survival, whether of the individual or the body corporate, are conditioned and determined by the kind of ideals that we adhere to and practice. That Jesus Christ dealt with the immediate and pressing problems of life, that He sought by word and act to give to men a finer sense of their individual and corporate obligations, is clearly evident. He lived in a real world, contended with weighty and pressing human problems and repeatedly insisted that His mission was to give to men a finer, nobler and more wholesome philosophy of life. He dealt with the privileged and under-privileged, with the well and the sick, with the abused and with the favored. As a matter of fact, He came to His crucifixion because He dared to confront and confound the faults and selfish philosophies of His people. The ruling class destroyed Him because He attacked their unwholesome and inequitable systems.

We will not and we cannot survive nor have the sense of security, unless along with our other efforts at rehabilitation we freshly and definitely acknowledge our loyalty to those deep and eternal religious principles that constitute the very basis of our individual and corporate happiness and peace. We do not believe that our youth in particular will follow any leader, however clever and adroit he may be, who lacks devotion and loyalty to deep moral principles and spiritual ideals.

THE MOSLEM AWAKENING.

THIS INVASION of Western learning and modern culture is not only producing a powerful ferment within the very vitals of Mohammedanism itself. It is not merely revolutionizing the subjects and the methods that constitute state education. It has also, as you can readily see, begun to stimulate new activity and to encourage new methods in the great enterprise of Christian missions.

Until the last twenty-five years or so it was almost impossible in Egypt to carry on any form of Christian work with Moslems except medical work. As a consequence, nearly all the work of the American United Presbyterians (by far the largest missionary body in Egypt) has been with the Egyptian Christians—the so-called Copts. And the one visible piece of work for Moslems was the great Church of England hospital at Cairo.

But already before the war, schools for boys and girls had begun to include Mohammedan children and there was even a small amount of work done in distributing the Scriptures. Today, however, if you have reasonable common sense and tact, you can really engage in evangelistic work. That is, you can aim more and more directly and openly and with less and less chance of disturbance or ill feeling to present Christ to Moslems. Not only are there several Christian schools and colleges where the Moslems outnumber the Christians, but outside the sphere of schools there begin to flourish under brave leadership new enterprises wherein followers of Christ are reaching out to touch and win the Moslem—through boys' clubs, through discussion groups and forums, and through smaller Bible study classes for enquirers. Today, a brave and consecrated common sense prompts the missionary to make generous and trustful use of every avenue of approach, and makes the conversion of Islam no longer baffling impossibility, but a real and credible program, bristling with difficulties, it is true, and as yet fearfully slow of tempo, but in the long run just as sure of fulfilment as our Master is greater than theirs.

Some Finalities and Open Doors in the Christian Faith

By STAMO S. SPATHEY,
Editor of the Book Reviews.

THERE HAVE BEEN, and still are some extremes in the Christian religion. The one is the claim that there is nothing final in doctrine or creed, but everything is a question mark. This is fallacious beyond dispute, for two thousand years of Christian history and experience bear overwhelming witness to the fact that there are certain realities in the Christian make-up that are final whether we accept them or not. These are so real, by their own nature that it takes more faith to deny than to believe them. The human mind does not find food for its life in negations. Negations are more or less artificial and temperamental rather than real and fundamental. A mere denial of a fact does not destroy the fact.

On the other hand, the other extreme is just as fallacious and unnecessary, that is, that everything is clear, every doctrine is perfect, every tradition is beyond dispute; creeds are so perfect that there is no room for improvement in them; the Christian character is perfect and faith is simply a finished product once delivered to the saints of old, no more left for the saints of today. A Bishop of the Church has made a statement within the writer's hearing to this effect, even the Summa Theologia of St. Thomas Aquinas is beyond improvement; the Creeds and doctrines were done so well that there is nothing for the modern mind to think and do; just to accept them without asking questions. These extremes have done more harm to the cause of the Kingdom of God than all external hostile forces put together. They have divided the Church, then drove out some of its best thinkers and created hypocrites of many that are within its household. It is another way of saying that the seraph of theological perfection visited the ark of the Faith once for all, then flew away to be at rest! Jesus Christ Himself has warned against this error as we shall see below.

As in other ways of life which is in the making, there is a happy medium to be found between extremes, so with the Christian thinking and believing. We are reminded of the Greek ideal of Beauty which is not a landscape, nor the blending of colors by the hands of an artist, but proportion, symmetry in everything, religion included. We need to develop this sense in the Church. The motto the old Greeks created out of this sense was "Ou Agan," which means "Nothing Overmuch". In other words, avoid extremes.

Happily, in a living religion as Christianity, we find both finality and progress to be marvelously interwoven. The one cannot stand without the other. This is a paradox of a living faith and wish to point out the most fundamental one, and in using the words of the Apocalypse, "an open door", to enter in to see the glory of God and then His purposes for men.

THE FIRST and foremost finality is the existence of God. This fundamental truth does not need arguments to stand. It stands on its own feet. From the beginning of history which is comparatively a recent event in comparison with the age of man and the world, all man's remains testify of his belief in a supreme being, called by different names, being many in numbers, expressed by many external symbols; but the reality at its basis has always been the same. The saying is true, that if man had not known God by revelation, he would have made one. The Soviets in Russia are sowing the seeds of their ruin in trying vainly to banish God from their country by promoting atheism. Equally as foolish are those discouraged here in the United States who are trying vainly to banish God from America by robbing the poor and ignorant of every bit of hope they have been cherishing through faith in God by promising them social and economic redemption. If these people could create God they could also get rid of Him at wish. How strange, when people are discouraged over human affairs, they deny God!

Old theology has tried with all the might of the intellect to prove the existence of God. It has created so many so-called arguments. Arguments from design, using big words such as Ontological, Teleological, Cosmological, and still recently, Biological and Psychological! Most of these curious mental gymnastics have proved confusing and unsatisfactory, for the existence of God does not depend on the mind alone, for, if so, the intelligent only can know God, and these are always in the minority. But the knowledge of God depends on our human nature. We have been looking for God everywhere in the universe except in human life. We are made and equipped with the religious sense, for religion is to know that we are related to God. This is the meaning or a part of the meaning of the word religion. It is a conscious relation of our life to God. As St. Augustine said, "Thou hast made us for thyself and our souls are restless until they find rest in thee." This is a profound truth. St. Paul also knew of an old Greek poet named Cleanthes who said practically the same thing and quoted it to the Stoic philosophers on Mars Hill, "For we are His offspring." This is found in a hymn to Zeus, but the Apostles changed the false idea of the old Athenians to our relationship of the One and true God, the God of love, who made us to be partakers of His nature and life.

The gradual unfolding of God in human life—not out of it as something foreign to human nature, became perfect in the coming of Jesus Christ. If we go to Him and ask Him to tell us what God is, we will be very much impressed to find that Jesus has no argument for the existence of God for us. God just is and there is no other final statement about Him. He brought us the Parenthood of God and the Sonship of man. He called Him, "Father", in a better translation, "Our Parent who art in heaven". Our relation to God, then, is a parental relation with all its wonderful possibilities. The existence of God, according to the Gospel is the supreme finality of the Christian faith. God made Himself known to us not by an angel, nor by a seraph but by the most perfect Human Being who ever lived on this earth, Jesus Christ our Lord. Man is the perfect channel whereby the Divine makes itself known. The Incarnation is the final and most perfect channel of life's perfection. This is final and we cannot help holding it as such. There is no other rational way that would stand the test of the day. God is and He is known.

BUT WHILE this is final that God is, and that Jesus Christ has no argument to prove His existence, there are certain doors open and necessarily so. We cannot honestly claim that we know all about God, even through Jesus Christ our Lord. We must accept the truth that revelation is progressive. The Bible is the most perfect witness to this great truth. We do not know all about God. How could we! Jesus Christ came to bring us a Parent God, but He is con-

Bits of American Church-Lore

By EDGAR L. PENNINGTON,

Rector of Grace Church, Ocala, Florida.

THE REVEREND THOMAS HALIDAY, of Perth Amboy, New Jersey, in a letter dated December 9, 1712, explains the methods and subject-matter of his preaching.

"Without preface I make it the great end of my business what I have Chiefly in my Eye, That those I am concerned in Rightly understand ye Method & Terms of Salvation, as proposed by Jesus Christ of whose Gospel we are ye Ministers. I lay before them ye Corruption and Wickedness of our Nature derived from Adam and that both by this and our Sins we are obnoxious to the Threatned curse and that this is the Spring of all the Evills of Life and of greater that must be endured. Hereafter for remedy of those Evils and delivery from the Curse I propose our Saviour as haveing in his own Sufferings Endured those Punishments due to us, That it being absolutely Necessary for ye Hon^r^ of God that his Laws be fully obeyed in ye humane nature That our Saviour has done this in as perfect & Compleat a Manner as God himself can require, That all is Communicate to the beleivers of his Religion by vertue of ye Mistycal Union, That relation in which they Stand in to him as Members of the Body to the Head, as the wife to ye Husband, and withall I take care to show ye great Influence that the Christian Religion has to make holy and Righteous in our lives and dispositions that a wicked Immoral Christian is ye most absurd Contradiction as Opposing ye Great End of all that our Saviour did, and Suffered wch was to purchase to himself a Peculiar People Zealous of Good Works, I Proposed ye Doctrines of our Religion, as Setled by ye Articles of our Church in opposition to all Heresies and Errors prevalent in ye place consulting alwayes ye best of our Divines that my subject may not Suffer through my Infirmity."

THE REVEREND WILLIAM ANDREWS, missionary among the Mohawk Indians in New York State, describes some of the difficulties attending upon his work there, in a letter to the Society, from the fort, September 7, 1713:—

"The Charges of the Society at this Place are already great, but this is such a Wilderness Countrey that no body does care to come here without considerable Advantage. There is no manner of pleasure to be proposed by liveing here, but only the hopes of doeing Some good among those poor dark ignorant Creatures ffor in the Winter Season for 4 or 5 Months we can Scarce Stir abroad by the reason of the Extream Coldness of the Weather and deep Snows, and in the Summer tormented with fflyes and Muschetoes, and can't Stir abroad without being in danger of being Stung with the Snakes here are So many of them, Especially the Rattle Snake. In the next place the Transporting of Provisions to this place is very Chargeable, The nearest Towns to us of the Christian Inhabitants, where we buy what we want, is Shectady (Schenectady) and Albany. The one about 24 the other about 44 miles. The Road by Land for the most part, is only a Small rough Indian Path thro the woods where we cannot ride without a great Deal of Danger by reason of the foullness of the Road with fallen Trees, Roots, Stones, high Hills and Swamps. The small River we are upon that runs to the Towns above mentioned, is generally frozen up all the Winter, and almost dry in the Sumer, the Spring and ffall being the times we can make use on't for transporting any thing, and then not without Difficulty by reason of the many Rocks and falls in it. These are some of the Inconveniences That discourage Peoples coming here to live, besides the Trouble which the Indians, who are Constant Visitors for their Bellies, and the fear of Receiveing Mischief from Some of the Worst Sort of them upon any Disgust or their Rebellion in General."

THE inhabitants of St. Helena's parish (Beaufort), South Carolina, are anxious to have a clergyman, as they inform the Society, March 16, 1713:

"This is absolutely the most remote & uncomfortable Parish in the whole Countrey and . . . We have never Since our first Settlement in this Part of the Countrey had a Minister among us."

Music and Religion.

By Thomas F. Opie, D. D.

Rector of St. Bartholomew's Parish, Olney, Maryland.

WHAT a beautiful combination do Music and Religion make! They are two things that are universal. All tribes and clans and indeed individuals have some form of music and are moved by its sweet magic. All have religion and are also moved and swayed by its compelling force. These have been wed for ages—have Music and Religion. Let them never be divorced!

Some who are devoted to Music, however, have not always the spirit of true religion. The sweet divine art of Music has not lifted them into high realms of kindness, reverence, love and patience—and these be outward expressions of Religion!

There are times when there is prejudice and even pride and jealousy in the lives of those who lead in Music circles. This ought not to be. Everyone cannot be the leader. Some must, in the nature of the case, occupy inconspicuous places in the ranks. It is their part to manifest that fine loyalty and devotion to the Cause, both of Music and Religion, which gives them the spirit of Loyalty, Humility and of Willing Service.

"If Music be the food of Love—play on—
Give me excess of it . . . . .
That strain again! . . . . .
Oh, it came o'er my ear like the sweet sound
That breathes upon a bank of violets."

News from the Front

(The Southern Churchman believing that missions constitute the life of the Church hereby invites the missionaries of our Church to write letters to this paper describing the work they are doing in an interesting way, so that our people may know more of what is going on in the mission field.)

From Christ Church Mission, Anvik, Alaska.

Until January, the Rev. Henry H. Chapman was so occupied with the manual labor about the place, carrying water from the river to the houses, etc., that he was not able to make his usual pastoral visits to the Shageluk villages situated to the east, about twenty-five to thirty miles away.

Of the January trip, he writes:

"As the school teacher was away, and the school house closed, I held the service in Robert's house. It was a Communion service, and there were five communicants. The house was packed with people, there having been a series of feasts, and every one from both villages was there, as well as some from Swiftwater and Anvik. Two babies were baptized afterward."

On February 16, 1935, Mr. Chapman writes:

"Since your contributions of money for that purpose came, I have been able to hire a native man to carry water to the dormitory, and so have been more at liberty. Last week I made another trip to Shageluk, hiring Billy Williams to take me over.

"After we started, light wet snow began to fall, which made sledding difficult. It snowed hard and steadily the rest of the day. Billy put on snow shoes and went ahead of the dogs, while I drove.

"Darkness fell while we were crossing the tundra a few miles from Shageluk, and in the dark, we lost the trail. We stopped the dogs, and Billy zigzagged back and forth until he found the trail. A little farther on we lost it again. Billy was bearing off to the right, but I saw that the dogs were inclined to keep to the left. I stopped the team, took a few steps to the left and felt the trail under my feet. It was after eight o'clock when we reached Shageluk. We stayed there all the next day, and I held a service at the school house.

"Most of the men were out at the reindeer camp, but their wives and children came to the service. As a result of this trip, there are five candidates for Confirmation in Shageluk. That makes up for what little discomfort we experienced on the way over.

"Bishop Rowe writes me that he has been obliged to cut our appropriation for mission supplies $1,000, and that as we face an additional cut for next year, I must be prepared to close the school.

"I do not know what is to be done with the children if the school is actually closed. Some have relatives who might take them in, though they are not disposed to do so, feeling too poor to take other children into their family; but there are orphans who have no home of any kind to go to, sixteen orphans. The situation is bad enough. I have a feeling that there is enough money in the church to keep all our missions going, if only people were better informed. There must be many who could afford to give if they had the will to give."

Miss Hazel Chandler, teacher at the Anvik school, writes, February 17, 1935:

"One just cannot think of some of the sickly children of the mission going out into homes where they are not wanted, and are likely to be neglected. It is up to us to try to keep Anvik school open in 1936, if possible. We cannot do it unless the natives in the village are willing to help us in every way.

"The children are busy in sewing class with their Easter dresses. I have not cut all of them out yet. It takes much longer when they are made by hand.

"Alberta Fisher made an apron for herself, and a shirt for Robert. Her work is very neat, the stitching looks as though it had been done on the sewing machine."

During the summer fishing season, Miss Chandler superintends the children of the school in fishing, and preparing the salmon for the winter supply of food, cutting it, and canning, salting or smoking it, or hanging it up to dry for the dogs.

She is also an enthusiastic gardener, making garden beds, planting and caring for the crop, the children sharing in the work. She has a small hot-house where they start seedlings, to be set out in the garden beds when the warm days of summer come. They raise tomatoes and cucumbers under glass.

When the season has been favorable for berries, she takes the children out to the berry patches, where they find red raspberries, currants, both red and black, blueberries, and the small cranberries of the country. They have a good picnic, and bring in sufficient quantities to put up for winter. Last winter, the children put out rabbit snares. Miss Chandler believes in conservation of any food supplies which the country produces, and since the children must make their living off these, when they leave school to make their own way, they should learn to make use of these resources of their own country, instead of depending upon "white men's food," which is expensive, and some of it is utterly distasteful to them.

Mrs. John W. Chapman.

St. Mary's Hall, Shanghai.

Concerned about the fact that the teaching staff of St. Mary's Hall, Shanghai, has been diminishing as a result of reduced appropriations, Miss Caroline A. Fullerton, the principal, writes:

"The attitude of students and teachers, Chinese and foreign, is all that one can ask. We have little friction in the day's work and St. Mary's is a happy place. The only reason for this is that it is a Christian school —a missionary school. If the time should come when it is not an avowed missionary school I believe the excellence of the institution will be greatly lessened. It is impossible to run a missionary school without missionary teachers. The supply of new teachers has apparently ceased.

"Unless there is sufficient genuine missionary enthusiasm constantly renewed, the school will lose the one quality which distinguishes it now from most other high schools. When that is lost there seems little reason why the Church at home should make sacrifices to run a Chinese high school on this property. There are plenty of good schools, if one does not desire the quality for which this school strives to stand. The parents of the girls want it, though they do not understand what it means. Christian culture and missionary enthusiasm together are necessary for the continuance of the work of St. Mary's Hall."

Of the staff of nine foreign teachers, two were ill and three were on furlough all or part of last year, and one could give only part time.

There were 302 girls last year, in senior and junior high school. The gate school for village children enrolled twenty-eight. In faculty and student body together, there were 118 baptized persons and seventy-one confirmed, of whom five were baptized and fourteen confirmed during the year.

Of the attitude of the Chinese government, Miss Fullerton writes:

"As an unregistered school we might expect some interference with our work, but no such has arisen to the present time. If reports are asked for, we furnish these as courteously as possible, and none have been required except routine reports of work covered, texts used, qualification of teachers. By following the requirements, which are reasonable, we meet with no criticism at all from the authorities.

"The past year has been one of great satisfaction to us all. The chapel is really the center of the school

BOOK REVIEWS

RELIGIOUS PICTURE SERMONS: By Harold Francis Branch, D. D. Published by Harvey M. Shelley, 5513 Larchwood Avenue, Philadelphia, Penn. Pp. 233. Price, $2.

This is a volume containing fifteen sermons on the fifteen masterpieces of religion in art and literature. The volume does not contain the pictures, only discussions on them. They can be easily procured.

It begins with "Jesus in the Temple," by Hoffmann, with a properly selected text. This is from St. Luke 2:46. The next is "The Rich Man and Lazarus," by Dore. The text is from the Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus. There are only three pictures representing Old Testament characters, Ruth and Naomi by Calderon, Moses Presenting The Law to the People, by Raphael, and a beautifully presented picture in words entitled, "Breaking Home Ties," by Hovenden, which depicts Jacob leaving his father's home for the last time. It is based on Genesis 28:5. The rest are based on scenes of the life of Jesus Christ our Lord. The last picture sermon is a fine exposition of the words of Christ to Mary on the Resurrection Morning, "Touch Me Not," by Schonherr. The text is taken from John 20:17, and the author discusses the Resurrection of Christ and the fear of death and the life hereafter.

The book is a fresh presentation of the life of Christ with help of the visual faculty which makes each scene everlastingly impressive. Each picture discussed must be before the audience in order that these picture sermons be used effectively. The book is particularly interesting to the reviewer, because it closes with Dr. W. Cosby Bell's last message to his students at the Virginia Theological Seminary, April 6, 1933. The reviewer is one of Dr. Bell's students. The book could not have a better ending.

BY HIS HELP: By the Rev. Reuel L. Howe, Th. M. Paper. Pp. 16. Published by The Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

This pocket booklet will be of value to those who are seeking a "closer walk with God." There is a page of suggestive texts engaging the reader in the quest for God followed by one which leads a step further on. Sundry prayers succeed which include bodily healing as well as other needs. Scripture readings in line with the plan are set forth and several appropriate hymns lie in fitting order. That the medical profession should be embraced in the scheme of intercession is a worthy purpose. If there were to be any criticism, which one would be loth to offer, it would be that the page on Spiritual Exercises seems a bit too like the Demonstrations of the New Thought and Unity cults. The author opens his heart in the opening question, "How shall Christians regard the relation between spiritual healing on the one hand and medicine on the other?" He answers his query by assuming that the two must go together. In such matters, however, every man must be persuaded in his own mind as to what may be the will of the Lord in any particular exigency. And he who walks with God, will know God's mind, if he seeks Him with all his heart (Jer. 29:12, 13). We do well to hold from committing ourselves to any set plan; neither to flee to the medicine chest or the doctor's office in sheer dismay, nor yet unfitted for it "try" what prayer will do. Unquestionably there is a life for us from the Head of the Body, which may be appropriated in faith. But this should be so regarded, that, evidently our Lord and His apostles, did not encourage people to live a slackly spiritual life and then in an emergency seek Him. The rather, as our writer will allow, they would have the believer in the Lord's power live so closely to Him as to draw from Him needed strength for daily use, and daily health.

activities in a way most surprising when on realizes the large non-Christian element. The doors are always open, girls and servants enter as they choose. The Altar Guild, changed monthly, takes the right kind of responsibility, under the direction of a teacher. Evening services and the gate Sunday school are managed entirely by students, with a faculty adviser. In our offerings we get all the funds necessary to pay our diocesan and missionary district assessment, and to send the amount due to New York for the American Church Building Fund, which helped us build the chapel. We plan on U. S. $100 a year for that Fund. All the school is organized for Christian education, in our Bible classes, and the education given is sound."

SOME FINALITIES AND OPEN DOORS.

tinually now for two thousand years unveiling Him to the world. This inability to know more of God is due to our human nature. Our mind can grasp but so much. "Many things have I yet to tell you, but ye cannot bear them now," not now, but "When He, the Holy Ghost is come, He shall guide you to all truth." This is what Jesus Christ told His disciples on the eve of His departure, that they must not be eager to arrive to undue conclusions about spiritual and divine truth, for the Holy Spirit will guide us while we are able to follow the path that leads to fuller knowledge. He could have told them plenty, but they were unable to hold it as the word in the original text means. Divine revelation, we must realize, depends on the ability of our mind to grasp and make use of it. This makes it not only possible, but absolutely necessary to keep the doors open to grasp new light the Holy Spirit throws upon divine things. To claim that all is known, all is given in detail, is to violate the promise of the Saviour who said, "Greater works than these (these I am doing myself) ye shall do, because I go unto my Father." The greater work of the Gospel is not in the past but in the future. Development of the divine in us through Jesus Christ our Lord will achieve a more full and perfect knowledge of God. We see this in a certain degree now. We call this sainthood, but even this is still imperfect. It must grow. Like a grain of mustard seed, faith must develop as our faculties develop to know God and His nature whom to know is "life eternal". "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent," continued the departing Saviour. Spiritual life is a growing thing.

We are well aware that the knowledge of God is still mixed with many superstitious and cruel ideas and primitive beliefs even in our Christian preaching and teaching. Think of the cruelties traced to God that have created the hell fires and future tortures that have been preached in the name of the Christian God! Preachers have taken the short cut to lead people to be good and frightened them to join the churches, forgetting the words of St. John of old, who made one of the truest and most fundamental statements ever made of God and His relation to human beings when he said, "Fear has torment (hell), but perfect love casts out fear." Perfect love only makes us better. Fear has no goodness in it; it does not develop Christian character. Fear is disease, how can a disease help people to be good? "The love of Christ constraineth us," said the Apostle Paul. We need to reform our idea about the Christian God and get rid of the pagan ideas that mar the perfect picture in Jesus Christ.

It is a fact of history that the preaching of a cruel God has inspired most of the cruelties and persecutions that have disgraced the very Gospel of His love. How could it be otherwise? How can faith in a cruel and angry God make kind and peaceful men? The idea of an angry God is the main theme of most of our modern revivalistic preaching. The real and final revelation of the Christian God has not been preached yet. The Fatherhood of God and His love for men is still mixed with many pagan and primitive ideas. If any revival of religion should come, certainly a revival of the Christian revelation of God must be at its roots that it may bring the desired fruit in our broken and confused human life and thinking. "God is love," wrote St. John long ago.

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

COMPARATIVE RELIGIONS.
II. The Norse Religion.

The scene was a small town. There was great excitement. A certain minister had announced that he was going to preach on the "Sin of Christians Keeping the Heathen Festival of Easter." As our Church had been devoting special attention to Easter Music, as always, and had advertised the fact well, both services were well attended. The minister went on to describe every possible connection between the Spring Festivals of the Heathen and our own Queen of Seasons Bright.

The joke of it was that most of the things he said were true; that the very name of Easter came from the Norwegian goddess of Spring, Eostre; that she was the flower goddess, so that on her festival the heathen had strewed the land with flowers; that rabbits, symbols of abundant life, had drawn her chariot and that the giving of Easter eggs was done originally in her honor. The trouble was not so much in what she said as in what she left out.

For Mother Church has always had two types of thought in her midst. The one was the Puritan type that wishes to have the strictest interpretation to everything. The other I will call the Tolerant type, though in History they usually went under the name of the Catholic Party. Of course, we must be careful not to confuse this latter with either the Roman Church or the modern group which usually is associated with Ritualism.

The minister, of whom we were speaking, was a typical Puritan. The first time the group appeared in Church History was when they wished to make every Gentile become a Jew through the rite of circumcision. But St. Paul led the Tolerants and at the First Council of the Church, held in Jerusalem, it was decided that "We trouble not the Gentiles". In other words, the Tolerants won. They decided then that a Gentile need only be baptized in order to come into the Church.

Later on the question came up as to whether a person who, under persecution, had denied Christ, should be allowed to come to the Holy Communion. On this occasion the Puritans got so wrought up about it that they went off and formed a Church of their own, where they could be exclusive. Eventually, this got so exclusively run that it lost all its members. The Tolerants won the day. The next question was what should be done about Heathen Festivals and Customs. The Puritans said that Christians ought not to have anything at all to do with anything that would remind anyone of Heathenism. But the Tolerants said, 'Why not?" Especially did the Tolerants think that it would be a good plan to adopt the heathen feasts, if there was nothing inherently wrong with them. The Tolerants won the day, so that the Church took over the Spring Festival in honor of the Resurrection of Christ. People gave Easter eggs to children in the Church, just as they had always done. The difference was that instead of saying that they were to be thankful to many gods for the return of Spring, we were to be thankful to the One God for the Resurrection of the Master.

Not only did they take over the Easter feast, but they also took over a great number of other customs. The best known of these were the Christmas festivities that were taken over bodily from the Feast of Balder the Beautiful, that came at the same time. Such were the use of Holly, Mistletoe, the Yule Log, etc.

In Rome and Greece the festivals and customs were, naturally, taken over from the Greek and Roman mythology. But in Northern Europe, where our ancestors lived, they had an entirely different set of gods and customs. So that when the missionaries came there they naturally took over the customs and feasts from it. Just what this Northern mythology and religion was is the subject of our program this evening.

The Norse Religion is the only one which we shall discuss in these Programs, that is, what we call a dead religion. That is to say, that it is dead, because it now has no one that believes in it. Every now and then some one in Nazi Germany says that they ought to revive it, but we consider that they are only talking to see whether their jaws are still in good working order. In ancient times it was the religion of most of Northern Europe, beginning at the Rhine and extending through Germany, Norway, Denmark, and Sweden. It later was brought to France and England and to parts of Russia and Poland. But France, England, Russia and Poland had different religions originally that were much closer to Animism than the Norse Religion. As our ancestors were the English, who came as Angles, Saxons and Jutes from the German forests, it was the religion in which they believed before they were converted to Christianity. It has thus had a greater influence on English literature and art than any other religion save Christianity and possibly that of the Greeks and Romans.

Description of the Norse Religion.

According to the Norse Religion, the world was made by a number of gods who slew a giant. From his blood they made the ocean and rivers and lakes. From his teeth they made the cliffs, and from his hair the trees. The gods then went to live in a place called Walhalla. In this land the chief city was Asgard. The giants they sent to live in another place called Jotun-heim, whence they sent cold and snow to annoy the gods and men.

The gods were ruled over by Odin, or Wodin, the All Father, and Frigga, or Freya, his queen. It is interesting to note that Wednesday, Woden'sday, and Friday, Freya'sday, are called after these two. They were the father and mother all of the gods, and many were the stories told of them and their family. As examples, we shall tell two of these:

The first of these concerns Thor. His name, incidentally, gives us Thursday, Thor'sday. He was their war god. He once paid a visit with a friend to the home of the giants. There he was entertained and asked to prove his strength by three deeds. The first of these was to out-eat the giant's cook. This feat Loki, Thor's friend, tried but without success. The second was to drain the cup of the giant at one draught. This Thor tried, but, though he took three draughts, he could not empty it. The third feat was to run a race. This another of Thor's friends tried and was defeated. Thor was asked to wrestle with the giant's old nurse. This he tried, and nearly accomplished. As they were leaving the next morning they were told who their opponents had been. The eater was Fire, the racer had been Thought, the cup was attached to the ocean, but Thor had drunk so much that the ocean had gone down several inches. The old nurse was Old Age, whom no one can conquer.

The next story is of Baldur, or Tiw, as he was sometimes called. His name gives us Tiw's day or Tuesday of course. Baldur was called the Beautiful. His story was an attempt to explain winter and summer. He was the god of summer, innocence and light. One night he had a bad dream. He told Odin, his father, about it. Odin told his wife. So Baldur's mother sent out messengers to ask every stone, metal and wood not to hurt Baldur. All were asked and promised, except one wood that was so insignificant that it was overlooked. It was the mistletoe. When the gods heard of this they all began to throw things at him. For they were sure that nothing could hurt him. Baldur had a brother, Hodur, god of winter and of darkness as he was blind. Loki, god of evil, found out about the mistletoe and made a weapon of it. This he gave to Hodur who threw it at Baldur and killed him. So Winter kills Summer, and Night kills Day. So also we honor mistletoe at the Feast of Baldur, lest it again feel hurt by being overlooked. After a while Baldur was avenged and so came back to earth, symbolizing another day and another summer.

So much for the stories of the Norse religion. Now as to their worship. It was a glorification of war. Thor, though not the chief of the gods, was the favorite. The battle axe, or hammer was his symbol. Soldiers who died in battle were assured of everlasting feasting. So cruelty and fighting were the great characteristics of this religion.

The brightest spot in the Norse religion was the place they gave to womanhood with its honor. Freya, the Queen of Heaven, was goddess of love, but she, like a true Norse woman, rode into battle and fought like a man. Her chariot was drawn by cats, the emblem of petting.

Comparison With Christianity.

Unlike the Romans, the Norse peoples seldom, if ever, persecuted the Christians. This was not always understood as its worshippers, considering that stealing was the act of a warrior often carried away property from Christian churches and monasteries as well as from Christian homes. Thus the hammer of Thor was considered the great opponent of the Cross of Christ. Its symbol was a T, or a cross without its top piece. For many years the T and the Cross contended throughout Northern Europe.

Eating horse meat and drinking from the skulls of their enemies were for the Norsemen like the Holy Communion was for Christians. But when the religion of Love was presented to them with the proof of the love of God as shown by the death of Christ on the Cross, little by little the Gospel won its way, until today the Norse Religion is entirely a think of history with its beauty and its horror. When we look back on it in its cruelty I think that me may breathe a Prayer of thankfulness that it is dead.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

THE DEAD SEA.

We quote the following from The Church and the Jews, a Quarterly Record of the East London Fund for the Jews, January, 1935, issue:

"From time immemorial the Dead Sea has been a synonym for all that was useless and unproductive, and the expression 'Dead Sea fruit' had denoted bitter disappointment, while travellers' tales had made it out to be a spot where the climate was unbearable and deadly, and where it was impossible for human beings to live.

"Now we know that the Dead Sea represents hope and hope fulfilled. The Dead Sea is, in fact, a thing of life, and today is pulsating with health and conferring benefits on thousands of human beings.

"The Dead Sea is, indeed, becoming a health resort beyond compare. The air contains more oxygen than elsewhere. The sun heals without scorching. No germ can live in the water of the Dead Sea, and to bathe therein is health-restoring, youth-renewing, life-giving.

"Approximately one-third larger than the lake of Geneva, its waters of a maximum depth of 1,300 feet, the Dead Sea has an ever-increasing mineral content, which is deposited by the inflowing Jordan and various streams and springs along its banks. The salts of the Dead Sea which are only now being made available for the world's use, are, beside common salt, magnesium chloride, calcium chloride, potassium chloride. Easily and cheaply obtained by water pumping and sun evaporation, the salts are transported by road and rail, via Jerusalem to the port of Haifa, in a manner simple and speedy. The monetary value of the vast quantities—thousands of millions of tons—of these salts contained in the small area of forty-seven miles by ten miles, makes the Dead Sea easily the most valuable spot in the world.

"This Dead Sea wealth, because so vast in amount and so easily obtained, is destined to play an ever more important role in the world's economics, as well as in the world's politics. In the world's militarism, it may even be! War calls for potash in particular, and potash exists in the Dead Sea in such quantity that 'if no other potash from any other source were used, the quantity existing in the Dead Sea would last the world (for normal needs) for over two thousand years'."

A SERVICE OF PRAYER FOR THE CHURCH AND THE JEWS.

(Pubished by the Missionary Council of the Church Assembly, Westminster S. W. 1.)

I. An Act of Penitence.

For the centuries of cruelty and hardness of heart in Christian people towards the Jews, our Lord's peoples after the flesh.

Forgive us, we beseech Thee, O Lord.

For the persecution of soul and body meted out to the Jews today in Germany and other lands.

Forgive us, we beseech Thee, O Lord.

For words and deeds which have often made the name of Christian symbolic of oppression and hatred.

Forgive us, we beseech Thee, O Lord.

For racial arrogance and exclusiveness rampant among Christians in many lands, and showing itself in our own country and empire.

Forgive us, we beseech Thee, O Lord.

For the indifference which keeps us unconcerned in the presence of the agony of our brethren, for all easy judging of ourselves, and alertness to the faults of others.

Forgive us, we beseech Thee, O Lord.

II. An Act of Intercession.

Let us pray—

For the Jews of Germany and Eastern Europe subject to persecution and contempt.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

For little children, Jews and Christians of Jewish ancestry, in the countries where they are persecuted in the schools.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

For Jews and Christians of Jewish birth excluded from the universities and the professions, and for all who have taken refuge in our own and other lands.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

For Jewish families, our fellow citizens, living in our own towns and in our parishes.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

For all governments which have to deal with Jewish questions, and for the officers of the League of Nations, that they may have the will and courage to do what is right.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

For the leaders of the Churches in Europe and America, that they may show forth the spirit of Christ in all their dealings with the Jews.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

For the Jewish missions in our own and other countries, that their work may be blessed and prospered, and that they may be given the men and the money that they need.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

For the Anglican bishop in Jerusalem, that he may be given grace and wisdom in his work.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

III. An Act of Thanksgiving.

Let us thank God—

For the writings of the Hebrew prophets, for the Scriptures sacred alike to Jews and Christians, and for the Israel of God, the chosen people of His purpose.

We praise and bless Thee, O Lord.

For the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to be the Saviour of all mankind.

We praise and bless Thee, O Lord.

For the willingness of many Jews to forgive the grievous wrongs which they have suffered, and for the generosity of the Jewish community throughout the world.

We praise and bless Thee, O Lord.

For the turning of many Jewish hearts to Jesus Christ, and for the numbers who have confessed Him in baptism.

We praise and bless Thee, O Lord.

Finally, let us praise God for the one Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church, the Body of Christ, the fulfilment of the ancient Israel of God, upon which are descended the promises—wherein is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcised nor uncircumcised, barbarian, Scythian, bond or free, but Christ is all and in all.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son: and to the Holy Ghost;

As it was in the beginning, is now and ever shall be: world without end. Amen.

The Jew and the Church.

The above Service of Prayer, which was intended for use during the Lenten period, is supplemented by a noteworthy and definite Call to Penitence and Prayer, which has been prepared by the Rev. William Paton. We are glad to note that this Call to Penitence has been reprinted in a number of Christian and Jewish missionary publications and would recommend it to all readers.

CAROLINE STUCK DIES.

All friends of the Church in Alaska who remember Hudson Stuck or who know of his work wil lregret to learn of the sudden death of his sister, Caroline Stuck, aged 68, at her home in Heathfield, Sussex. For the past twenty-five years she had lived with a close friend, Miss Helen Smith. They went for a time as volunteer workers in a North African mission until ill health sent them home. Financial difficulties have made the later years increasingly difficult. All who have read Hudson Stuck's fine books on Alaskan life, which are even more noteworthy as the self-revealing record of a rare spirit, will be glad to know that the very slender royalties from their sale have helped a little to ease his sister's life.

ANNUAL SERVICES OF THE HUGUENOT SOCIETIES.

The Federation of Huguenot Societies will hold its annual congress on Saturday, May 11, at the Robert Treat Hotel, in Newark, N. J., and will have its annual service on May 12, at the French Church du Saint-Esprit, 239 East Sixty-first Street, New York City, at 4 P. M.

This congregation is the only one founded by the Huguenots in America, which has maintained the use of the French Language. Like most of the Huguenot congregations here and in England, it has become part of the Episcopal Church. It had an Episcopally ordained minister, Pierre Daille, as early as 1682.

The afternoon service will be held in English. The preacher will be the Rt. Rev. Frank Du Moulin. A tablet, erected to the memory of the Rev. A. V. Wittmeyer, rector of this church from 1879 to 1925, will be unveiled at that service.

Under the direction of Mr. K. Walton, Psalms in the ancient French manner will be sung by the choir.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS TO PARTICIPATE IN NEW JERSEY CELEBRATION.

Captain Sir Edward Colpoys Midwinter, K. B. E., C. B., C. M. G., D. S. O., and the Rev. Canon Stacy Waddy, D. D., both of London, England have arrived in the United States to participate in the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Episcopal Diocese of New Jersey. Both are officers of the S. P. G. (The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts), which is the oldest organization in the Church of England, which sends missionaries to foreign fields.

Sir Edward Midwinter has been Controller of the Sudan Government office in London since 1925. During the World War he served in the Nile campaign, including the battle of Omdurman. From 1906 to 1925 he was General Manager of the Sudan Governmental Railways and Steamers, and from 1913 to 1925 he was a member of the Governor-General's Council.

A distinguished layman of the Church of England, Sir Edward is Secretary of Archives of the S. P. G., having in his care records of early missionary activities of that Church, including records of the early Church of England missions to the American Colonies.

Canon Waddy was formerly Archdeacon of Palestine and Chaplain of the Order of St. John. He is a member of the Missionary Council of the Church Assembly of the Church of England, and is Secretary of the S. P. G., which office accounts for his interest in the New Jersey anniversary celebration. The S. P. G. was founded in 1701 to meet the religious needs of English folk who had settled in the American Colonies, and in the West Indies, and most of the early parishes, including St. Mary's, Burlington, New Jersey, owe their origin to the efforts of the early S. P. G. Missionaries.

During their stay in the United States, both Sir Edward and Canon Waddy will address various bodies and organizations of the Episcopal Church, and on May 5, at ten o'clock, Sunday Morning, Eastern Daylight Saving Time, Sir Edward will make an address by radio, through the Episcopal Church of the Air, using the facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System.

SECOND PROVINCE HOLDS ANNUAL MEETING.

Under the leadership of the Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, D. D., its Chairman, the Social Service Commission of the Province of New York and New Jersey held its annual meeting at the House for Retreats and Conferences, at Bernardsville, New Jersey, April 24 to 26. The opening Quiet Hour, conducted by the Rev. Thomas A. Conover, was followed by a vital paper, "The Church's Part in Developing a Christian Social Order," presented by the Rev. Daniel A. McGregor, Ph. D., Executive Secretary, Department of Religious Education, National Council of the Episcopal Church.

The question of the Church's responsibility in a period of financial stringency for direct social service to her own members and members of other or no church affiliation was outlined in a paper by the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, Executive Secretary, Department of Christian Social Service, National Council of the Episcopal Church. The discussants of this theme were Miss Marguerite Marsh, Executive Secretary, Church Mission of Help, Diocese of New York, and the Rev. Harold P. Kaulfuss of Trinity Church, Whitehall, New York.

The theme, "How Can Diocesan Social Service Departments Help Parish Clergy Find and Use Available Social Resources?" was discussed by the Rev. Floyd Van Keuren, D. D., Executive Secretary, Social Service Commisison, Diocese of New York, and the Rev. George W. Dawson, Canon Missioner of Social Service, Diocese of Newark. The Rev. Robert W. Searle, D. D., newly-appointed General Secretary of The Greater New York Federation of Churches, presented the subject, "Practical Methods of Cooperation With Other Religious Groups for Social Betterment."

Plans were laid for the social service conference which will be held in connection with the next meeting of the Synod of the Province, to be held within the Diocese of Newark at a date not as yet announced.

BELL NEEDED.

The little Mission of St. Peter's at Rincon, New Mexico, the Rev. Hunter Lewis, Missionary-in-Charge, feels that a bell would greatly aid its work.

Is there a friend anywhere who could supply this need?

About a year ago a S. O. S. call of "Pews Needed" was sent out through the Southern Churchman, at the request of this missionary. The Jewish Rabbi in El Paso answered immediately, and gave the pews.

The Rev. Hunter Lewis' address is St. James' Church, Mesilla Park, New Mexico.

GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY COMMENCEMENT PROGRAM.

Dr. Clarence W. Mendell, Dean of Yale College, will deliver the address at the one hundred and fourteenth annual commencement exercises of the General Theological Seminary at the Seminary, Wednesday, May 22.

The Seminary commencement week program will open Monday evening, May 20, with the baccalaureate sermon, which will be preached by the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., Bishop of New York, in the Chapel of the Good Shepherd.

On Tuesday, May 21, the annual meeting, memorial service and luncheon of the Associate Alumni of the Seminary will be held. The Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, '15, Executive Secretary of the Social Service Department of the National Council, will be the speaker.

Among the classes which have already made arrangements for reunions are those of 1910 and 1915. The Class of 1910 will hold its twenty-fifth reunion, arrangements for which are being made by the Rev. Charles P. Otis, S. S. J. E., while the Rev. Gregory Mabry is in charge of arrangements for the twentieth reunion of the Class of 1915.

ITINERARY OF ARCHBISHOP OF YORK DURING VISIT TO AMERICA.

Early in the winter, the Archbishop of York accepted my invitation to visit America next December and January and requested me to arrange in detail the itinerary which in my invitation had been proposed to him. During the past two years there had gone to the Archbishop from dioceses, parishes, universities and missionary organizations many requests for sermons, courses of lectures and student missions. He had been unable to accept these until they could be combined in a program of one month, the utmost for which could be arranged in his calendar for the winter.

I have received and submitted to the Archbishop many invitations from dioceses and educational institutions which he has had regretfully to decline because of the limited time for his visit. The schedule of his appointments now nearly complete will include the following:

December 7, 1935—Arrival.
December 8—Washington Cathedral.
December 9-12—College of Preachers, Washington, D. C.
December 14-16—Cathedral of St. John the Divine, Diocese of New York.
December 17-18—Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.
December 19-23—Boston, Mass.
December 24-26—Providence, R. I.
December 27-January 1—Indianapolis, Ind., Student Volunteer Jubilee.
January 4-9—Diocese of Chicago and University of Chicago.
January 11—Sails from New York.

It is hoped that this schedule will leave sufficient time also for conferences with American representatives of the Conference on Faith and Order and the Universal Christian Council on Life and Work; also for public meetings in the interest of Church Unity in which the Archbishop is officially and personally concerned.

James DeWolf Perry,
Presiding Bishop.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. G. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., Coadjutor.

———o———

May 1, 1935.

To the Rectors of Parishes and the Presidents of Parish Organizations:

You will find enclosed a copy of the Program of the Sesquicentennial Celebration of the Diocese of Virginia, to be held on May 14, the day before the Council. We hope to have such an outpouring of our people from every parish as will make our Celebration a red letter day in our church life.

May we ask the cooperation of the rector and the presidents of parish organizations in every parish in announcing the Sesquicentennial Celebration and in arousing the interest of members of the congregation.

With your help we look for an enthusiastic and notable celebration.

Very sincerely yours,
The Sesquicentennial Committee,
G. MacLaren Brydon,
Secretary.

The Sesquicentennial Celebration of the Diocese of Virginia.
1785-1935.
Tuesday, May 14, 1935.

To be held in Old St. Paul's Church in King George County and at St. George's Church, Fredericksburg.

Services at St. Paul's Church, King George County:

11 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Address by the Rt. Rev. Arthur C. Thomson, D. D., Bishop of Southern Virginia.

Intermission for basket luncheon.

2 P. M.—Address on The Early History of the Diocese of Virginia, by the Rev. G. Maclaren Brydon, D. D., Historiographer of the Diocese.

Unveiling of Tablet in Memory of the Rev. Joseph Raphael Andrus, first Rector of St. Paul's Parish after its revival, and the first missionary of the Episcopal Church in Virginia to a foreign land.

Address—The Missionary Motive in the Life of the Church in Virginia by the Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese.

Service at St. George's Church, Fredericksburg:

8 P. M.—Evening Prayer and Address, "The Challenge of the Future to the Church," by the Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., LL. D., Rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond.

* * *

St. Paul's Church (erected about 1766) is on the Potomac side of King George County about twenty-five miles east of Fredericksburg on Route No. 205. It is near the Naval Proving Grounds at Dahlgren. Cars coming by Fredericksburg should cross the Rappahannock River and turn east on Route No. 3. Turn left into Route 206.

It is hoped that pilgrimages of Church people from every part of the Diocese will come to the Sesquicentennial Celebration. Those who come should bring basket luncheons. At moderate driving the trip to St. Paul's should not take more than three hours from any parish in the Diocese. The services at St. Paul's will be over by 4 P. M., and those who cannot stay to the evening service at St. George's Church in Fredericksburg, can reach their homes before dark. Delegates to the Council can reach Fredericksburg in ample time to register before the dinner hour.

There is another very interesting old Colonial Church on Route No. 3 between Fredericksburg and St. Paul's Church. This is Lamb's Creek Church, erected in 1769-70. It is about fourteen miles east of Fredericksburg on the left side of the highway. The road leading from the highway to the church will be plainly marked. All who come to the Sesquicentennial services are invited to stop for a few moments and see Lamb's Creek Church.

Spring Meeting of the Valley Convocation Auxiliary.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Valley Convocation will meet at Upperville, Thursday, May 23. It is hoped that every Branch of the Auxiliary, including, of course, Juniors and Little Helpers, will send a delegate and many visitors to this all-day meeting.

At ten o'clock there will be a celebration of the Holy Communion, followed by an address by Bishop Tucker. Other speakers will be Mrs. Barton, Mrs. Batcheller, Mrs. Welbourn, Mrs. Chambers, all Diocesan officers. After lunch Mrs. John E. Hill, President of the Woman's Auxiliary of Pennsylvania, will speak.

Anna K. Cummins.

The Meaning of Lent.

At St. George's Church in Clarendon, this Lent has been so beyond the usual that it has caused some of us to think through what it has meant to us.

At the very beginning we were conscious of deep thought and planning, designed to make every detail of the Church's ministrations helpful in bringing home to us the meaning of Lent. The flowers were gone from the altar and the gleam of brass from the chancel. There were a cross and candlesticks of dark wood. The night Lenten services especially were like the church, ripped bare of distractions, concentrated on bringing us into real touch with God. There was no music, no lights in the church, except candles in the chancel, and an illuminated cross high overhead.

Some of the prayers were made by the rector out of his knowledge of our needs. Litanies and searching questions which we put to ourselves in silence on our knees, showed us definite ways in which we were really "miserable sinners". God began to show us to our discomfort what He wanted us to do about it. The reality and presence of Christ became more vivid to us, and the level of His life reduced us to penitence for our own.

To help us take into our hearts more deeply than words often can, the Passion of Christ, on Good Friday night our rector prepared for us a service of a kind new to most of us. With the church in darkness except for candles on the altar, and the lighted cross above, the rector followed the reading of passages from the Gospels by organ music, to help us think more clearly and feel more deeply something of the meaning of the Cross.

The contact with God and penitence and prayer which this Lent has brought, have laid a foundation upon which Christ can surely build to transform our lives and then to use us in changing the world.

Descendants of "Colony of New Sweden."

Swedish citizens of Philadelphia and vicinity, including American-born descendants of the early Swedes, who formed the Colony of New Sweden along the Delaware River before the arrival of the English, last Sunday took part in a Swedish Pilgrimage to historic St. James' Protestant Episcopal Church, one of the group of Swedish Churches founded by the early Swedish colonists, all of which subsequently became parishes of the Episcopal communion.

In connection with the Pilgrimage there was a commemorative service at four o'clock in the church, at which the Rev. Dr. Julius Lorimer, pastor of historic Zion Evangelical Lutheran Church, made a special address on "The Spiritual Heritage of the Swedish Colonists". Mr. Albert Duncan Yocum, President of the Swedish Colonial Society, made the address of welcome. The famous Swedish Vasa Chorus, under the direction of Mr. Valdemar Olsen rendered a special program in Swedish. The rector of St. James' Church, the Rev. William Roberts, the choir and members of the congregation of the parish also took part in the commemoration service.

Following the coming of the first group of the early Swedes to the Delaware River, one of their first acts was to build a church, the famous Old Swedes of Wilmington, Delaware. This was in 1639. As the Swedes extended their settlement further up the Delaware River, they founded a congregation at "Wiccacoe" in South Philadelphia, which they named Gloria Dei, worshipping in the Block House they had built to protect them from attacks by the Indians. This was in 1677 and in 1700 the present Gloria Dei was built alongside the old Block House. Subsequently St. James' Church was buitl in the district then and since known as "Kingsessing". Pushing up the Schuylkill River to the Upper Merion section in what is now known as Bridgeport, they erected in 1760 the present Christ Church, Upper Merion.

With the coming of the English colonists the English language largely superceded the Swedish, and the Swedish pastors in the succeeding years were frequently aided in their ministrations and in their church services by the clergy of the Church of England. A strong bond of friendship was formed between the Swedes and the English, and as the years passed, the Book of Common Prayer of the English Church and its services came into more general use and the Swedish language had virtually disappeared.

The Rev. Dr. Nicholas Collin was the last of the Swedish pastors to have oversight of "The United Swedish Lutheran Churches of Wiccacoe, Kingsessing and Upper Merion" as the three churches in Pennsylvania following the erection of the State of Delaware were known. During Dr. Collin's pastorate of forty-five years, he was assisted by a considerable number of clergy of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Pennsylvania, which had been organized in Philadelphia in historic Old Christ Church, 150 years ago next fall.

In 1931, following Dr. Collin's death, the congregations of the three Swedish Churches called the Rev. John Curtis Clay, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, to be their rector. Eleven years later the United Swedish Churches became separate congregations of the Episcopal Church, and have continued as such since that time.

St. James, Kingsessing, which was the center for the Swedish Pilgrimage, became a parish of the Episcopal Church in 1843. In the past ninety-two years of its history as an Episcopal Church, St. James has had but five rectors. The Rev. C. S. Brinkle served from 1843 to 1848; the Rev. J. Brinton South from 1848 to 1856; the Rev. Charles Maison from 1857 to 1895; the Rev. S. Lord Gilberson from 1895 to 1930. The Rev. William Roberts, the present rector, took charge in 1930 following the death of Dr. Gilberson.

Easter Pageant.

An Easter pageant, "The Story of the Resurrection" was given in St. John's Church, Yonkers, Sunday, April 28, at four o'clock. The pageant was written and directed by Mrs. George Arthur Smith. The pageant adhered as closely as possible to the Miracle and Mystery Plays characteristic of early Christian medieval time. Much of the Bible text was incorporated into the composition. The story covered the events which took place from Good Friday night to the time when Christ appeared to the Disciples on Easter.

Diocesan Meeting Woman's Auxiliary.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese will be held on Tuesday, May 7, at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. There will be a Corporate Communion at ten o'clock, at which the contents of the United Thank Offering boxes will be presented. This will be followed by the annual meeting in Synod Hall. In preparation for this annual meeting, many parishes will hold their own presentation services for the United Thank Offering.

Overcoming the War Habit.

The following paragraph entitled, "Overcoming the War Habit," is carried on the leaflet of the Church of the Transfiguration for Sunday, April 28:

"Remember that war is futile! No one gains by war. Everybody loses. The great World War is proof of this. Each nation that fought in the war lost more than it could have gained by complete victory. Killing and hating cannot destroy war. Only love and good will can do away with war. Let us begin at once to be practical peace makers. Let us begin at once to radiate peace and good will and love. Peace begins at home! Peace begins in the individual!"

Cathedral to Receive Memorial Alms Basin.

A handsome silver and jeweled alms basin for use in Washington Cathedral at important religious services presented by Mrs. William S. Claiborne, of Chattanooga, Tenn., will be dedicated by the Bishop of Washington, the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., at evensong on Monday, May 6, at four o'clock. The gift is being made in memory of the donor's mother, Mrs. Violetta Claggett Marlow.

Mrs. Claiborne's husband, who served for many years as Archdeacon in Tennessee, was one of the leaders at DuBose Training School in Monteagle, where laymen are trained with a view to entering the ministry.

The date for the dedication was chosen because it is associated with events in the history of Mrs. Claiborne's family. She is a descendant of the Rt. Rev. Thomas John Claggett, First Bishop of Maryland, and First Bishop to be consecrated on American soil, who is buried in the Crypt of the Cathedral by action of General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

The beautiful alms basin has been made from silver and jewels belonging to Mrs. Claiborne and her deceased daughter.

Successful Pastoral Work.

One of the most notable pieces of pastoral work now being done in New England is carried on at the Cathedral of St. John, Providence, by the Rev. Arthur H. Beaty, the minister of the congregation. In a parish which, on account of extreme changes in the character of the neighborhood, was been doomed by practical prophets to waste away, Mr. Beaty, not yet two years in service there, is presenting record-breaking Confirmation classes and organizing church attendance in such surprising fashion that he is posting new figures on his bulletin after almost every major religious occasion.

It was upon the recommendation of the Rt. Rev. Granville Gaylord Bennett, auxiliary bishop of Rhode Island and lately resigned bishop of Duluth, under whom Mr. Beaty has labored for years, that the highly skilled pastor was called from that diocese in the summer of 1933.

His latest achievement is a Confirmation Class of seventy-three, exceeding in size any presented in the days when the parish was the religious home of many old families and every department was flourishing.

Upon request of your correspondent, Mr. Beaty explained his technique, in this way:

"Well, in the first place, it is work—calling nights as well as days. It is knowing the parish intimately and having a record of every one in the parish—if confirmed or not. Following up new people right away—getting their records and attaching them to the church by Confirmation, if possible.

"In Lent I make Confirmation my major work—call on prospects every week or oftener. It is surprising how luke-warm and indifferent people gradually come to the services and grow enthusiastic about the church.

"In other words, it is putting your time on the 'fringe' and making the 'fringe' into real church people. Many of the 'fringe' I missed last year and could not get, came to me this year and asked to be confirmed. Many of these I had to baptize first.

"Men and women make up the larger part of the class—I would say about forty—and I do not recognize a single name of a regular attendant before the present year. They are well prepared, too; come to services Sundays and week days during Lent and meet me at least once a week for instructions.

"I have a list now started for next year. I like this sort of work, but I do feel that unless we can keep adding a goodly number each year to the Cathedral congregation, we have no real future. Our pledges numbered 239 when I came and now we have 580—practically all new people." (Remember Mr. Beaty hasn't finished his second year here yet.)

"We had eighty-four at early service last Sunday, and an average of seventy-five during Lent, and I should think that half are new people. We started from scratch with three or four.

"The congregation did not get the class. The minister did.

"Lastly, it is not hard work—anyone can do it."

Favor Legislation to Prevent Hasty Marriages.

The Diocesan Council in session on April 23, adopted resolutions urging the Illinois Legislature to enact legislation now before it requiring a three-day notice for the issuance of marriage licenses in the State.

The proposal now pending is aimed at so-called "marriage racketeers" and is proposed as a means of preventing hasty marriages, which so frequently result in divorces. Under terms of the proposal, a three-day notice would be required throughout the state for the issuance of a marriage license.

The resolutions before the Diocesan Council were offered by the Rev. Howard E. Ganster, rector of Christ Church, Waukegan, one of the favorite spots for "midnight" marriages by justices of the peace. The Rev. C. Carleton Story, rector of Mediator Church, Morgan Park, spoke strongly in favor of the measure.

Million Dollar Campaign Starts.

The Million-Dollar-Centennial Campaign of the Diocese of Chicago is under way. St. Mark's Church, Glen Ellyn, the Rev. Gowen C. Williams, rector, started the drive this week, seeking as its goal $15,000.

Grace Church, Oak Park, seeking $100,000, launched its part in the campaign on May 1, followed closely by St. Paul's-by-the-Lake, Roger's Park, on May 3. In rapid succession the more than one hundred parishes and missions which are joining in the drive, will begin their drives.

Plans now laid out call for completion of the campaign the first week in June. Some work will be done after that, but the major portion of the drive will have been finished

In his final word to the Diocese, Bishop Stewart stressed the importance of the partnership phase of the campaign, its relationship to the future work of the Diocese, and its significance from a centennial point of view.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Resolutions Adopted on the Resignation of Rev. Allyne C. Howell, D. D.

Whereas, Dr. A. C. Howell has been the rector of St. Stephen's Church for a period of more than twenty-five years; and,

Whereas, during this period the church's membership has increased from 156 to over 800, with a corresponding growth in power, dignity and influence, due almost entirely, we believe, to Dr. Howell's untiring efforts and to the charm and forcefulness of his personality; and,

Whereas, Dr. Howell, by reason of physical incapacity to continue to bear the ever-increasing burden, has been forced to tender his resignation, now, therefore, be it

Resolved:

That with the deepest regret we accept Dr. Howell's resignation, the same to be effective May 15, 1934.

That at the same time, we ourselves and for each and every member of the church, acknowledge and now express our appreciation for the splendid service he has rendered to this church and to this community; for his unselfish devotion to duty, coupled as it always has been, with a friendly and invigorating cheerfulness which made every contact a pleasurable companionship; for the magnificence of his sermons, reflecting as they did the application of the mind of a cultured scholar to the results of tireless research—sermons never to be forgotten, each one an individual masterpiece which left with every sincere listener thoughts to be preserved and cherished; and lastly and above all for the inspiring example of a true Christian life.

Further Resolved: That we say to Dr. Howell and to his family, Godspeed, good luck, peace and contentment, with the earnest hope that we may have from them the privilege of frequent visits and the joy of frequent reunions throughout the years to come.

Procession to the Cross.

At the fifteenth community Three-Hour Service, held in St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Wilkinsburg, on Good Friday, the congregation was so large as to test the seating capacity.

In the same church, on the evening of Easter Day, the Church School Festival was held. The Church was again crowded with the parents and their children. For the twelfth year, an eight-foot wooden cross, with niches in it, from base to top, was filled with two hundred and eight Lenten Mite Boxes. Beginning with the very youngest members of the Church School, and continuing throughout the grades, ending with the rector of the parish, there is a procession to the Cross, in which each box is placed. The sum-total of the contents of these boxes proved to be well above what was given on Easter Day, 1934. This wooden cross is erected in the afternoon of Easter Day, in the chancel, and the interest in this plan of presenting the Mite-Box offering is as keen as ever. The boxes are distributed the Sunday before Ash Wednesday, and missionary stories, to maintain the interest, are told the whole school each Sunday in Lent.

St. Paul's Method of Raising Funds.

I hereby enroll as an individual contributor to The Repair and Renovation Fund of St. Pauls Episcopal Church, Louisville, Ky., and agree to use my influence to extend our work among my friends and in my church.

( ) I will be one of thirty additional Pence Can Contributors to give to said Fund through my Pence Can 1c per meal for three years.

( ) I will be one of fifty to give to said Fund by adding 60c per month or 15c per Sunday to my yearly pledge for three years.

( ) I will be one of ten to give to said Fund $30 per year for three years.

Mark "X" opposite the Plan you select in effort to cooperate. Every member may share in the plan in some way.

A test of my sentiment and generosity. We will do it.

Sign and place your "sharing plan" on alms basin today. St. Paul's to be repaired and renovated for Easter.

The Federal Housing Administration is encouraging the renovation and modernization of churches and offers us a credit-plan whereby we can borrow up to $2,000, repaying the loan in installments over a period of three years.

The rector wishes this congregation to decide, by a rising vote, whether it wishes the vestry to request a loan to pay for urgent repairs that must be made at once. We will have to pay back the loan at the rate of $30 per month for three years.

This loan will enable us to

Repair roof	$ 225.00
Paint, repair plastering and put cap on pilaster, 2 coats wall paint in sanctuary, chancel, nave and 2 vestibules	808.40
	$1,033.40

Entire set of new bulbs throughout the church will be extra, while scaffolding is in position.

We can have our church put in first-class condition and dressed up for Easter if Church School, Woman's Guild, Altar Guild, and the men of the parish will put their shoulders to the plough and push hard and faithfully.

(1) We can finance the entire plan if thirty additional members of the congregation will take our Pence Cans at once and use them honestly and conscientiously, as per instructions, dropping one cent in the can every time they eat a meal and bring them in regularly every three months.

(2) If fifty members will give 60c a month additional to what they are now giving for the next three years.

(3) If ten members will give $30 each year for the next three years. The rector will give $30 for three years, provided the vestry will canvass and get ten other persons to give $30 annually for three years. This ought to be the easiest thing in the world to do, provided an earnest effort is made and real work done to find nine other $30 contributors annually for the next three years. (A vestryman to make a motion after this announcement is made by the rector on Sunday, March 24.)

(I move that the members of the congregation present, authorize the vestry to proceed with the repairs to the roof and painting the interior of the church, the sentiments of this congregation to be conveyed to the "called" meeting of the vestry to be held immediately following this service. A second to the motion to be made and rector to put the motion to the congregation.)

Those desiring to cooperate and to have a part in renovating and saving this church from tumbling down upon our heads are asked to accept either one of the three plans suggested.

Remember, we celebrate our centennial in 1938. Commence now to preserve your church and get it in shape for this glorious event.

Henry L. Durrant, Rector.

More than enough pledges were secured and placed on alms basin last Sunday before going to the "called" meeting of the vestry immediately following the service.

Seventy-first Year Celebrated.

Brownell Hall, Omaha, the Episcopal Church Girls' School, celebrated the seventy-first year of its contribution to the educational life of the city on Wednesday. Miss Abba Bowen, the principal and the staff received guests from 3 to 5 P. M., and a very large number of alumnae from outside points as well as Omaha people met in the attractive grounds, where many fine old trees made a fitting setting for the event.

The work of the united organizations of Cathedral women in serving meals at the National Flower Show in Omaha recently resulted in approximately $1,500, which it is planned to apply on the Cathedral debt.

Street Car Strike Did Not Deter Church-goers.

What was expected to be a serious handicap to attendance on Easter Day in Omaha proved to have little effect on devout members. A strike of street car employees, so that no cars were available, was neutralized by the numerous "jitneys" and taxicabs and the "picking up" of church-goers by passing motorists. All churches in Omaha reported large numbers and successful Easter services. In one out-of-town church, St. Luke's, Plattsmouth, the choir has grown to the extent that it was necessary to resurrect a discarded pew from the basement and clean it up and put it into commission again.

Cathedral to Be Restored.

You will be interested to learn that the Parishioners of St. Mark's Cathedral are starting out at once to restore the Cathedral, which was ruined by fire on March 31. The sanctuary and choir were a total loss and the plans for restoration include a new chancel in memory of Bishop Tuttle. There is no memorial to Bishop Tuttle in the Cathedral.

St. Mark's Cathedral was the first Gentile Church to be built in Utah and is one of the earliest churches in the West. In Utah it is the same age as the Mormon Tabernacle and twenty-five years older than the Mormon Temple. In point of continuous use for worship it is the oldest of all the churches, Mormon or Gentile.

It is the hope of the Utah communicants to restore St. Mark's in accordance with the original architectural plans, but to enrich it and make it a more modern building.

COLLECT FOR SECOND SUNDAY AFTER EASTER.

Almighty God, Who hast given Thine only Son to be unto us both a sacrifice for sin and also an ensample of godly life; Give us grace that we may always most thankfully receive that His inestimable benefit, and also daily endeavour ourselves to follow the blessed steps of His most holy life; through the same Jesus Christ our Lord. UPWARD.

Jesus, Thy Name is known afar,
Unfailing as the morning star
To guide the wond'ring tribes of men
Back to the heart of God again.

Thy way is known along the years
Unbroken through a vale of tears,
And forward still it leads the soul
Upward to a celestial goal.

And they who follow Thee are found
Wherever mortal woes abound,
For Thou art come, O Son of Man,
To save in love's eternal plan.

And they who scorn the upward way,
And they who wait another day
Must walk in darkness and alone,
And hear no voices but their own.

Lord, bid me follow Thee, I pray,
And by Thy Spirit led alway
I shall ascend the mountain road
That leads to liberty and God.

Completing Christ's Victory.

We are accustomed to think of Easter in terms of victory. We celebrate with thanksgiving our Lord's "victory" over sin and death. But it is well to remember that the value of victory depends on its context. It is only in so far as it is the prelude to constructive action and a reconstructed life that it has permanent moral value.

It would be ungracious to cast doubts upon the reality and sincerity of the great Easter services of the Church, and there is no need to make any such suggestion. Multitudes of simple folk have taken part in such victory services and have felt the emotional thrill which they produce. A smaller number perhaps have grasped the mighty implications of the Resurrection story. But the rejoicing has been genuine enough, and even in those who are only on the fringes of the Church and who hold loosely to any convictions whatever, some indeterminate sense of victory has been aroused.

Can this sense of victory be made the starting-off point for what we call rather clumsily "constructive action in the sphere of morals" and what the Apostle calls with attractive simplicity "newness of life"?

St. Paul gives us a very definite hint as to how the victory of Christ can not only be turned to account but converted into a forward march. He was under no misapprehension as to the real meaning of victory. It did not mean for him any laying down of arms, any quiescent resting on "the finished work of Calvary." He was not so foolish as to confound victory with rest. To him it was only a jumping off place for a new kind of life, the door of which had been thrown open to him by his risen Lord. There is almost a touch of sternness, as if he feared the lassitude which victory often brings, in his words to the Christians of Colossae, "If ye then be risen with Christ"—if indeed you claim to share in your Lord's victory over sin and death—if indeed you have arisen and are not still buried as some appear to be—"Seek those things where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God." Thus only can His victory, so far as you are concerned, be consolidated in your life.

The warning is worth while. So long as the Incarnation at Bethlehem or the Sacrifice on Calvary or the Resurrection on the third day remain as events which, however much we believe them, we regard as external to ourselves, they have no power to change our lives. The victory that is inherent in this world process of redemption remains inoperative over the area which we represent. Christ has lived and died and triumphed so far as we are concerned—in vain.

So we turn back with sobered feelings, perhaps even with misgiving, to the victory celebrations in which we took part so happily on Easter Day. Did we realize that we were celebrating not the end of a battle but the beginning of a new campaign? Did we realize that the inaugural victory of the first Easter Day over the world's hopelessness and despair was only the prelude to the march of redeemed humanity against the forces of evil? Henceforth with sure conviction we must seek those things which are above, knowing that they alone possess ultimate value. The quality of life which shone in the life of Jesus still shines above the stars. The redeeming love which He brought to bear upon the world and which was slain and crucified still lives imperishably in the Person of the risen Christ. This is the unique and inextinguishable glory of the first Easter Day.

But this quality of life and this redeeming love in action has to be transmitted to the world in each succeeding generation. It can only be conveyed through those who have become so filled with the Christ-spirit that it would seem as if they had gone the self-same way as Christ Himself by dying unto sin and rising unto God. Christ's victory needs to be repeated over and over again in the personal experience of men and women through succeeding generations.

Then, and not till then, is the way open for the onward march, in our own day—or any other day—of the Church of Christ. It is when we have known "the power of His Resurrection" that we can begin to exploit His victory for the redemption of mankind.

This victory still remains to a large extent to be assimilated and to be made our own even after the Easter celebrations are over. The world is waiting for the fruits of Christ's victory to manifest themselves in a new order of peace and righteousness and joy and love. Are we holding up the final triumph of Christ because our own Easter is incomplete?—Canon Rogers, in Church of England Newspaper.

"After Life's Fitful Fever."

Eunice Wingate Quimby.

Since it is reasonable to believe that our world is a universe of ultimate progress, the faith that makes Easter joyful should be more universally strong now than at Easter, 1934. Yet we all welcome reassurance. The beloved bishop of Massachusetts, Phillips Brooks, founded his comfort on belief in a loving Creator.

"You are a child of God whom He is training. You have a soul, which is your true value. You are to live forever. Know these truths. By them triumph over the sorrow that He cannot take away, and be consoled."

And he further comforts:

"The calm must come back to you not by the restored presence of your dead friend, but by the new presence of Christ, who brings with Him in His spiritual access the spiritual companionship of all of ours who have gone to Him."

When that pioneer English educator, Hannah More, was dying, one of those experiences occurred that strengthen our belief in heaven. Her face suddenly brightened; she tried to raise herself, and stretched out her arms, crying, "Patty, joy!" This dear sister had preceded her.

The word for paradise, to which Jesus and the penitent thief were going, meant a park or garden. Sometimes the visions on the boundary between the earthly and heavenly life are of green fields. One young girl exclaimed:

"Oh! the beautiful music! Do you hear it, mamma?"

"No, I do not hear it, Mildred."

"I'm not dreaming. It's real. And, oh! the light, the beautiful sunset colors, and in front is green grass—and there is a river—and some one, and he wants me to come."

Celia Thaxter, the Appledore poet, whose centenary occurs this year, wrote of her mother's last illness:

"She lies looking like an angel, talking and babbling of green fields."

Perhaps the author of the old hymn, "There is a land of pure delight," had known of other such visions when he wrote:

"Sweet fields beyond the swelling flood Stand dressed in living green."

And again in the hymn, "On Jordan's Stormy Banks I stand,"

"Sweet fields arrayed in living green,
And rivers of delight."

Even in a recent magazine a modern poet coins the phrase, "Death's emerald garden."

Such regrettably infrequent intercourse with the spiritual world is tentatively explained in some lines by the human Scotch preacher and writer, George MacDonald.

"If gratitude our speech benumb,
And joy our laughter quell,
May not Eternity be dumb
For things too good to tell?"

A pastor recently affirmed his present belief that there is more difference between the spiritual and material world than he used to think.

The two worlds of the caterpillar and butterfly are still suggestive symbols of the material and spiritual life. Wrinkles and whitening hair, dim eyes and stooping frame, are not decay alone. A chrysalis is forming, from which a new embodiment shall rise to fresh surroundings.

In one of George MacDonald's old Scotch stories, "Warlock o' Glenwarlock," he says the soul ought "to keep growing bigger and stronger every day, until it bursts its shell." One dying man experienced this when he said to his watching wife, "My house is getting too small for me, Mary."

In Browning's "Easter-Day," we find the thought that death is more real than life.

"From repose
We shall start up, at last awake
From life, that insane dream we take
For waking now, because it seems."

At the time of her mother's death the faith of Celia Thaxter was not very strong, for she writes, "I hope all things, I believe nothing." But later in life her mind was exactly reversed.

"Death seems such a different thing from what it used, such joy, such comfort; it is so sweet to look forward to... the beginning of a new and beautiful exitence when all your powers are renewed and you begin afresh to live with those you love. . . . It is nó dream, no fancy. I do not think it, I know it is true."

A ROAD SONG.

These to be thankful for: a friend,
A work to do, a way to wend,
And these, in which to take delight:
The wind that turns the poplars white.

Wonder and gleam of common things,
Sunlight upon a sea-gull's wings,
Odors of earth and dew-drenched lawns,
The pageantry of darks and dawns;

Blue vistas of a city street
At twilight, music, passing feet,
The thrill of Spring, half joy, half pain,
The deep voice of the Autumn rain.

Shall we not be content with these
Imperishable mysteries?
And jocund-hearted take our share
Of joy and pain and find life fair?

Wayfarers on a road, where we Set forth each day right valiantly,
Expectant, dauntless, blithe, content,
To make the great experiment.

"What's Dolly Doing Now?"

An energetic little girl of four lives next door to us. From morning until night Dolly is running, skipping or hopping about, brimming over with the vitality of perfect health. As her mother expresses it: "She's always into things!"

But alas! the penalty for this natural exuberance of physical energy is a series of spankings, scoldings and threats. So now this child is already showing defiance and a battling spirit as her defense. If not used against her mother, it is shown towards others.

When her mother spanks her and sends her out-of-doors to "be good, now", she goes to her little pup, and if he doesn't do her bidding at once, slaps his ears. Or, fresh from a battle with her mother, she may appear on the front sidewalk to strike with a stick, or her jump rope at some passer-by.

At a stranger's exclamation, she laughs in glee, and as the saying goes, "gets a kick out of it." All of her most valuable energy is being wasted. Even now, to the suggestion that she is a good girl, she defiantly explains she is a bad girl and proceeds to demonstrate the truth of her words.

Her reaction is no different from that of hundreds of other human beings who, without sufficient cause, get a "bad name" and afterwards live up to the reputation given them. At first, it is only a matter of misdirected energy. Fortunately, as far as little children are concerned, there's a remedy. Wise mothers will keep boys and girls busy at useful, harmless tasks.

My sister and I have enjoyed trying our own tactics with this little neighbor whose mother labels her as "unmanageable". The other day she espied the heavy wire door mat by our back steps and with a gleeful cry, ran and picked it up. Glancing back at us triumphantly, she called out, "I'se going to take it home," and started trotting down the driveway. Hearing no threat or admonition called after her, she paused at the front walk and looked back again.

To her surprise, my sister exclaimed: "My, what a big strong girl Dolly is!"

"Yes," I answered, "she can lift that heavy mat and carry it down the walk. I wonder if she can carry it all the way back and put it right by the steps exactly where it was before!"

She listened, considered a moment and then gravely marched back and replaced the mat where it belonged. We praised her and she scampered off, without having been scolded for "doing something." And it's this matter of "doing something" which requires ingenuity and patience on the part of mothers.

But how much better to spend a few minutes each day, planning little tasks or pleasing occupations, than to spend them punishing a lively youngster for inventing tasks of which you disapprove. Most little "Dollys" are happy when they are busy, and when they are busy in a worth-while way, they are good.

There is a pamphlet published by the Office of Education, Washington, D. C., called, "Some Educational Activities for the Young Child in the Home." It costs only five cents but it must be paid for in coin. Stamps are not accepted. Mothers of little children are advised to send for this pamphlet and to read it carefully.

Energetic boys and girls are eager to show what they can do. The earlier they are given opportunities to do things that are useful, the surer they will be to find continued satisfaction in worth-while activities.—Theodora Brownfield, in National Kindergarten Association Release.

God With Us.

God has not forsaken us; but we need not expect Him to appear suddenly in rending heavens and flowing mountains. He has been with us historically in the Person of Jesus; He remains with us spiritually through the enduring influence of Christ, the Prince of Peace and God of Love. He does not force Himself on us; we may ignore Him if we wish, but we ignore Him at our peril. According as we hearken to the words of Jesus, and yield our unruly spirits to His guidance, will we succeed in beating our swords into ploughshares and our spears into pruning-hooks. Those individuals and nations who ignore or flaunt Him, whose souls are not upright, will most surely collapse. It is quite certain that the next quarter-century will witness either the spiritual rise or the spiritual and material downfall of the peoples of the world. The issue lies in our hands.—Rev. H. R. Hunt.

His Priority in Love.

He puts Himself alongside the dearest relationships of earth, and says, in unforgettable words, "You must hate all these, or you cannot be a disciple of Mine." The force is upon the word "My." Thy word "hate" is a relative word, it is not absolute. It cannot be that Christ contradicts Himself. He tell us that we are to honor our father and mother. He cannot mean that we are to hate them while we honor them. When He said He was going to send fire on earth, and cause divisions amongst men, and set father against son, what was the reason of it? Because the fire of a great love would come into the heart, a love that would be brighter and more glorious than the most fervid earthly affection.—W. Y. Fullerton.

Anchors That Hold.

The writer knew a manufacturer of anchors and chains, who was exceedingly proud of a large photograph in one of his rooms, representing a ship riding at anchor in a tremendous storm. Some twenty vessels on that fatal day parted with their anchor and made shipwreck; whilst the anchor forged by my friend bore triumphantly all the stress of the terrible tempest. Thus the Apostle gloried in the firmness and victory of the much-tried Thessalonians. The anchor held. One of the actors in the French Revolution, who was asked what he did during several awful weeks of peril, replied, "I lived". Sometimes it is just enough to live. Let us hold confidently by the great truths, promises and hopes of our faith, and they will not fail us in the great crises of life and death.—W. L. Watkinson.

SINGING FOR GOD.

Magda Brandon.

The little birds are singing
High up in the trees,
But I cannot see them
Through the many leaves.

I wonder little birdies
If me, you cannot see,
For leaves that come between us
Must hide me, too, you see.

Then you, your song are singing,
Not knowing I am here,
But God, who made you, sees you;
It's Him you're singing there.

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter XVII.

M. L. G.

"Look, Aunt Mollie, violets!"

"Lovely, Winnie! What could be sweeter—" Aunt Mollie put her face down to the fragrant handful Winnie carried, for a good whiff.

"I wish Miss Sarah had told me to draw flowers instead of books and jars."

"No, child, she was quite right. Straight lines and planes first, then will come the curves and the concave surfaces. Lots of time for that. Put them in a low bowl—this green glass one will do, just the color of the stems."

"I wish Claire could see them," said Winnie, as she arranged the violets. "They'll be all gone before she comes. Is there any way to send violets to a person, Aunt Mollie?"

"Let's see. We could use the tin ginger-box Mrs. Innis left—scrub all the ginger smell away first! Then a little moss and damp newspaper. I'm sure we could do it by gathering them just before train-time and so give them a quick start."

"I'll get the ginger-box right now' Aunt Cindy will help me get it clean and fresh. Then I'll pick them—purple ones and white, too, and I know David can drive Frank again, if Uncle Danger still feels bad."

"Where is David, Winnie? I hope not hiding away somewhere. I have seen him only at dinner."

"I think he is—you know, Aunt Mollie, 'barrassed about not going to school. He's been out in the barn, in the hay-loft. He told me when I came back."

"Well, I hope Brother Kent will see to having that child's rights upheld. The very idea! Doubting David's word, I never in my life—wait, Kent, honey, don't roll over that way, you'll have that arm broken again."

"Father has gone to see Dr. Blackburn now. He believes David, so Dr. Blackburn soon will." And Winnie went contentedly to get the ginger-box.

A little later David crossed the yard from the barn, with Roy and Noel at his heels. The three had had a romp, and David felt less nervous than he had all day. Seeing the carriage turn into the driveway he ran to meet it. Roy and Noel, delighted at a beginning again of activity, ran bounding and barking at his side.

"Well, what's this, the animal fair?" cried Father, as he stopped Frank so that David might climb in.

"Was it all right, Father?"

"Entirely all right, my son. Your good conduct and record have stood you in good stead in this crisis. Dr. Blackburn was very ready to believe that my estimate of you is a true one."

"That must be because he knows you're true," David said, "for he didn't treat me differently from the other three last week."

"And he can't now, David, unless in some way we can find how the little book—they call such things 'ponies'—came to be in your desk. Have you told me all you know about that?"

For the first time David was silent. They had reached the house, and now Philip rushed out.

"Father, they's violets for Claire, to go—and can I go too?"

"What, Phil, all the way to Claire?"

"Violets all the way, but me just to the twain to help David put 'em on. Wight on the engine!"

"Run in the house a moment, son. Lots of time before we need meet the down train, if Winnie has some scheme of sending violets to Claire. I'll see about it later. Well, David?"

"Father—I don't know what to say."

"What you say to me, son, is confidential if you wish it to be."

"I can say I had never had it in my hands before—that's true. And the night you came I told you I had no idea how it came there—that was true then. But now—there's an idea come into my head—but I'd rather be suspended all over again than tell Dr. Blackburn!"

"It is a fact, son, that to protect another in a wrong may be hurting instead of helping him."

"Another?" David said in a low voice.

"Haven't I guessed it? Somebody put it there."

"Well, Father, I can't tell on him, I just can't! If it's wrong, I'm sorry—"

"I'm not going to urge you to. It must be only a suspicion. Let's forget it for now. It is true you must stay out of school this week since you cannot explain the matter. But keep up your work, and we'll have some good drives together. Your own self-respect is the thing you mustn't lose. Now let's find out what's this notion of Philip's about violets on the engine."

David and Philip were soon driving to the village; to the post-office first to have the box weighed and stamped, then on to the station.

"Will you take it wight to the engine-man, David? An' say, 'Here, engine-man, here is violets for Claire'?"

"Oh, no, goosie. Mr. Acres will hand it to the man in the mail coach for me."

"I'd wather climb wight on the engine and say to the engine-man, 'Engine-man, dese is—' "

David's thought drifted from Philip's chatter and went, as they had done so often in these days, back to his school trouble. Quite suddenly as he lounged in the hay-loft, trying to read, something that he had seen two or three weeks before, had flashed into his mind. Four of his school-fellows at recess were in a group under a large oak tree at some distance from the school; seeing them there David had run up to ask if they would join in a game of prisoner's base.

"No, go 'way, David, we're studying, can't you see?" grumbled Bill Donnell.

"Oh, come, on, we won't have enough big boys unless you do," David had urged.

"I say let's go," spoke up Hamilton Brist; "we've done enough—no need to work too hard, now."

"Hush!" Jim Engle said, scowling. "Hush up, Ham. Here, I'll collect all the books and take them back to the school; you boys go on, start the game. I'll join you."

Jim had quickly gathered the books, and in thinking of it in the hay-loft, David remembered, along with the familiar "Caesar's Gallic Wars", some little paper books. His unsuspecting thought had made no note of it, only the seeing part of his mind kept the memory until this morning. Bill, Hamilton and Jim—these were the three boys in whose desks, along with his own, the little books had been found!

One boy, David remembered, had not spoken, Pat Donovan. But Pat had not joined in the game, either. When they reached the impatient boys on the playground, Pat said he did not feel well, he would just sit and watch. Pat had entered the school only after the Christmas holidays. He was the son of the manager of the new knitting-mill on the edge of the village. He worked very hard on his lessons, but with the handicap of his late entrance it was hard for him to keep up. David had heard Mr. Price suggest to him that he drop back into first-year Latin, but Pat had answered quickly, "Oh, no, Mr. Price, I must keep up. Dad and Mama, they want me to get on, and go to College—and I'm fiffiteen now. I'll work hard—try me a while yet!" And Mr. Price said, "Well, Pat, if your work improves."

All this came back to David, and made him twist uncomfortably. Poor Pat, who tried so hard! Father had said there might be harm in shielding him. And David thought, with a quick feeling of indignation, "He's letting me suffer all right!" But only to go back to his first thought, "Maybe it just seems to me that it is Pat. Anyhow, I can't tell on him, and that's all."

A Bag of Gold.

Founded on Fact.

Joseph was going back to his sleeping quarters in the compound of the big rubber plantation, on which he worked. He was a fine, honest Kaffir boy, a member of a tribe in South Africa, very different from the usual lot of them, for Joseph was a true Christian.

As he hurried along to the place where he slept, Joseph stubbed his toe against something hard, lying on the soft, muddy path. Stooping down to rub his foot, he saw a small canvas bag. He gave a low whistle of surprise when he found it full of gold coins. It was too late to tell about it that night, and indeed the boy was so bewildered at the sight of so much money that he felt he must think what was best to do about it.

Hiding it carefully in his clothes, he went to his bed and was glad to find most of his room companions asleep. Only his chum Paul was waiting for him, and Joseph could trust him. Paul was not yet a Christian, but Joseph had many hopes of him. In the darkness he showed him his find.

"Say, Joe, you're lucky, what will you do with all that?"

Together they softly counted sixty golden English sovereigns, being careful to make no sound at all.

"I must find the owner first thing in the morning," said Joseph.

"If I were you I'd take the money you honestly found and run away to your old mother in Natal. Of course there's danger, but you can lie low and they can't catch you for theft, for you just found the stuff. I'll never tell—you know that."

"I know it, Paul, but that's not the way a Christian acts. I must give it back."

Paul argued awhile, and then went to sleep, but Joseph dared not follow his example, he was too frightened.

Next morning all the men in the compound were excited because the overseer had lost a bag containing a large part of the workers' wages, and being afraid of losing his job he did not want to tell about his own carelessness. What a relief it was to every one when Joseph was able to save them from suspicion and punishment. He hoped that the bag had contained just the sixty coins, and that none had been taken before he found it. There were plenty of men who would do this, being afraid to steal more for fear of being caught.

When the money in the bag was counted and they found that it was all there, the overseer allowed Joseph to go, but without a word of approval. Paul, however, took care to tell others about his friend, and somehow the head of the rubber company heard about Joseph's honesty.

"Something new among Kaffirs," he said. "I must watch this boy, for there are not many like him."

Some time after Joseph was told to go with the old bank messenger on his daily journeys, and probably some day he may get his job, which is much better paid. At any rate he feels very proud and pleased that he is being trusted by his chief, and most of all that he has not displeased his Lord and Master.—S. S. Times.

OUT AT LAST.

Maria Brandon.

A chicken cried, "I'm out at last!"
Then out he fell, he jumped so fast.
"I'm glad I'm out of egg alive;
I pecked for hours to arrive.
I'm glad I pecked and did so well,
That egg-shell broke, and out I fell,
Or I would have no tale to tell—
I'm out at last and all is well.

Dissatisfied.

A chicken ran away to play
On the pond with baby ducks, one day;
His frightened mother clucked to him—
"My darling child, you cannot swim;
Your feet are not like theirs—come here—
Or you will drown," she clucked in fear.
The chicken sighed, "That's just my luck;
Why couldn't I have been born a duck?"

The Best Dog Team.

A football came twirling through the air. Walook caught it in his hands, tucked it under his arm, and began to run. He had only gone a few steps when Toorack caught his knees. Flop-flop Walook went, down into the snow. Up he got, laughing, and ran off in the gray twilight to kick the ball to Toorack.

Just as Walook tossed the ball in the air to kick it, some one called, "Toorack! Toorack!"

In one of the snow igloos a little girl stood. "Toorack," she called, "you can't play football all the time."

Toorack ran off towards his igloo and Walook followed him. "Tomorrow, you start with father to trap white fox," his sister said when they reached the igloo. "Before you go, mother needs more ice."

"I'll get it," Toorack said. He began to harness the dogs to the large sled that stood by the igloo. "Can you come, too?" he asked Walook.

"I'll help," Walook helped put the leather harness on the dogs.

Soon they were off. "See how these dogs can run," called Toorack. "They are the swiftest dogs in the village."

"Oh, no they aren't," said Walook, as he ran beside the sled. "My father's dogs are the swiftest."

Toorack pulled his dogs up beside the piles of ice that were cut from the lagoon, ready to be hauled away. "This is our pile," he said, as he began to drag the big blocks of ice to his sled. Walook helped him.

"Well," Toorack looked at his friend. "You're wrong. My father's dogs are the fastest. Didn't the white doctor choose my father's dogs to take the long trip out on the tundra? And didn't the doctor make the trip swiftly?"

"Yes," Walook stopped pushing and lifting the block of ice toward the sled. "But doesn't my father take his dogs and travel many days to the south to get our mail? Doesn't he take the letters the people write? Doesn't he bring packages of gifts back to the Eskimos?" Walook laughed. "So you see, his dogs must be the swiftest and best. It is the big chief at Washington who thinks his dogs are best and asks him to carry the mail."

Toorack shook his head. "He does not always use the same dogs. My father's are the best."

Walook had no answer; he turned and ran away.

Sliding the ice on to his sled was not nearly so much fun for Toorack without Walook. He wished he had not said his father's dogs were best. When his sled was piled high with ice he hurried back to the igloo, hoping he would see Walook. But Walook had disappeared.

Toorack was so busy helping his father pack the two sleds they were to take on the trip across the tundra that he did not have time to run to Walook's igloo and talk with him.

Early the next morning, when it was time to start, Toorack looked for Walook, but Walook did not come until Toorack had cracked his whip and had started off ahead of his father. Then he saw Walook standing beside the entrance to his igloo. As Toorack went by, Walook shouted, "My father's dogs are best."

And Toorack turned and called over his shoulder, "Wait and see. My father's dogs are best."

All morning long they traveled. At noon they stopped to eat and to feed the dogs chunks of meat. Then Toorack's father said, "The igloo where we shall live is just a few miles ahead on the tundra. I shall turn aside here to see if there is a fox in the first trap. You go ahead and wait for me."

Toorack was proud that his father would let him go ahead alone. He shouted to his dogs and set off. As he stood on the runners of the sled and bumped over the uneven tundra he thought, "I should not have shouted back to Walook. His father's dogs are also swift. They could not carry the mail were they slow."

The air had been clear, but now Toorack was surprised to feel snow in his face. He looked up at the great, gray sky. He could not see the stars shining. Snow was coming.

Suddenly the sled struck a great bump in the tundra. Toorack, who had been gazing at the sky, did not see it coming. As the sled went over the hole Toorack was bumped off. He came down onto the tundra, head first. His head cracked against the ice, and he lay there stunned. The dogs ran on. Many minutes later, Toorack sat up and held his hands to his head. How it hurt! And how it was snowing!

He stood up and tried to walk in the tracks of the dogs and the sled. His feet were so heavy he could not lift them high. He dragged along. The gray winter day was fading. Soon it would be night. There would be no stars. But Toorack knew he must keep on walking. He made his feet take step after step.

At last he stumbled and fell headlong. He lay there without trying to get up. Then he heard dogs barking, and he saw dogs flash by him. He heard a voice calling them to step, and he heard footsteps coming back. But he could not sit up. Some one's arm lifted him up, and then some one's voice said, "Toorack!"

Toorack opened his eyes. It was Suvlu, Walook's father. He heard Suvlu say, "I am late with the mail and I should go on. But first I must take Toorack to his father." He laughed. "My dogs are swift. The extra hours will not count against my record."

He picked Toorack up in his arms, and carried him to his sled. Gently he laid him on top of the furs packed over the mail. He called to his dogs, "Swiftly now."

Then Toorack closed his eyes and he thought he had not had them closed a minute before he heard his own dogs barking and his father's voice.

"I found him on the trail," Suvlu said as he watched Toorack's father lift him from the sled. "He is safe. And now I must go on with the mail."

Early the next morning, Toorack's father turned back toward Barrow. Toorack lay quietly, bundled in furs, on the sled. His head still hurt.

That night, when he lay in his own reindeerskin bed, glad to be at home, Walook came to see him.

Walook came slowly over to his bed and sat down on the floor beside him.

Toorack took his hand. "Walook," he said, "I think your father's dogs are the fastest."

"No, no," cried Walook.

"Yes, they are," said Toorack. "If they had not been the swiftest, he would have had to leave me lying by the trail. For the mail cannot be late. Because his dogs are swift, I did not freeze."

Walook laughed. "It does not matter," he said, "whose dogs are swiftest, if you are still my friend."

Toorack laughed, too. "I am," he said. "When tomorrow comes, my head will feel better and we shall play football."

"Yes," said Walook. "It is my turn to kick."—Dorothy Jastram, in Alabama Christian Advocate.

JENNY WREN.

Here's little Jenny all so sweet,
In natty suit of brown;
She's quite a social figure
In the whirl of Feather Town.

Her home is all a home should be;
A model nest—but then,
You'd never find it otherwise
With little Jenny Wren.

Serene and stout, she hops about,
A worthy little birdie,
And if her children favor her
They should be plump and sturdy.

Her eyes are clear and quick and bright,
Her neatness an obsession,
For nothing's ever out of place
With Jenny in possession.

DEATHS

MISS POLLY CARY RANDOLPH.

After a long and beautiful life, suddenly, on January 31st, POLLY CARY RANDOLPH was called to that higher life—that life eternal, where God's "peace which passeth all understanding" shall be hers forever.

The memory of that life, rendering faithful, loyal service at all times to the Master, whom she loved so dearly, will always be—not only an inspiration, but also a blessing to those of us who are left and who miss her so sadly.

With grateful hearts the members of the Leper Society of Christ Church, Millwood, desire to express their love and appreciation, and their belief that such a life cannot die—it will live always in our midst.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord: their works do follow them."

HATTIE N. GILPIN,
AGNES R. PAGE.

WALTER B. FERGUSON.

Resolutions.

WALTER B. FERGUSON, Junior Warden of this Church, and a faithful and loyal member of the Vestry and the Church, departed this life on the 11th day of April, 1935.

Mr. Ferguson was, from boyhood, a member of, and active in the work of the Church, and otherwise contributed generously and unostentatiously thereto. He was a member of the Executive Committee of the diocese, and has, from time to time, been appointed on important committees representing the diocese in the National Councils.

He was gentle by nature, and a man of sound judgment and strong convictions. He rendered able and faithful service to the Church, the city and community.

We are convinced that he earned the plaudit "Well done good and faithful servant".

We will sorely miss his presence, his influence, able counsel and sound advice, yet he has, by his life and example, left with us an inheritance, for which we thank God.

Now therefore, be it resolved by the Vestry of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church of Suffolk, Virginia, that our sympathy be and hereby is extended to the bereaved ones in their great loss. May God comfort them in their sorrow.

And be it resolved further, that a copy hereof be sent to his widow, a copy to his sister and brother, a copy be spread upon the records of this Vestry, and a copy be published in The Southern Churchman.

Faithfully and sincerely,
VESTRY OF ST. PAUL'S P. E. CHURCH.

Expansion. Gifts. Services.

Lenten services were about the same as usual. Inclement weather interfered frequently.

The Discipleship pamphlets were used by many as the basis for Lenten talks; some stressed evangelical preaching, some Bible study, some Henry VIII.

The Okolona Industrial School (colored) is rejoicing in a new brick classroom building. They also appreciated very highly the gift of a complete communion set of silver and linens from the New York Auxiliary. They were used for the first time Easter. Combination hymnals and prayer books were given the school recently by the Bishop White Society. The school observes the Church year whole-heartedly. During Lent, in addition to the regular services the students held their own daily Lenten devotions.

The Rev. R. E. MacBlaine, of St. George's, Clarksdale, had a daily sermon in the local paper.

The rector at Aberdeen, C. G. Hamilton, spoke in thirty schools in Monroe County during Lent. He is the first Episcopalian to ever speak in these thirty places.

New prayer books have been given to St. Paul's, Corinth; Our Saviour, Iuka, and Grace, Okolona. They had been using the old prayer book.

A beautiful altar set of cross, candles and vases has been added at All Saints, Tupelo.

The TVA development is still bringing new members to Corinth and Iuka Churches.

Nativity, Greenwood, is continually adding new memorials.

Dr. Capers and Bishop Green both were Lenten speakers in Memphis for a week.

Easter services were well attended everywhere. Your correspondent held five services and assisted in two others, traveling 165 miles.

St. John's, Aberdeen, has organized an organ guild as a step towards getting a new pipe organ.

The day of prayer for each minister brought a sense of deepened fellowship.

Union Friday services at West Point, Amory, Aberdeen, and other places show the increasing observance of the day among all denominations. Greenwood closed schools and stores for the service.

Plans For Daily Vacation Church Schools.

Formal announcement was made by the Ven. Leonard P. Hagger, Archdeacon of the Diocese, of the 1935 Daily Vacation Church School plans of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education. Archdeacon Hagger is the Chairman of the Committee responsible for the Schools, and states that last year more than forty such Schools were conducted in the diocese. The response to the Manual prepared by the Committee last year, "The Story of Worship", was so enthusiastic as to lead the Committee to prepare another Manual along a similar plan for 1935. In one way this year's Manual, "The Master's Way", is a sequel to the 1934 book, as "The Story of Worship" was drawn from the Old Testament, and the 1935 Manual deals with the earthly life of Jesus. It can, however, be used independently.

The material is arranged to meet the needs of a School operating from two to three hours a day over a period of ten days, but can be used in other ways. The 1934 and 1935 Manuals may also be used together to provide a four-weeks' School. The main plan in both Manuals is the provision of dramatized Bible scenes, and the daily program consists of worship, note-book, hymn practice, rehearsal for the next day's scene, manual work (for which explicit directions and helps are given), and recreation. The material is suitable for all children eight years of age and over.

Archdeacon Hagger states that the Committee is prepared to arrange for demonstrations of the Vacation School in different parts of the diocese if requests are made for such demonstrations. The other members of the Committee are Miss Elizabeth S. Thomas, Diocesan Director of Religious Education; the Rev. L. E. Midworth of Trenton; the Rev. C. C. Jatho of Royal Oak; the Rev. Edward Green of Tecumseh; the Rev. A. E. DuPlan of Port Huron; the Rev. Van F. Garrett of Flint, and the Rev. Harold McCausland of Bay City.

THE REV. N. B. GROTON,
St. Thomas' Rectory, Whitemarsh, Penna.

The Rev. H. Ralph Higgins, rector of St. Mark's Church, Grand Rapids, returned to St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, as preacher on the morning of April 28, for the first time since his resignation in November, 1933, to take his present rectorate. Mr. Higgins came to St. Paul's as Senior Curate in 1930 with the Very Rev. Kirk B. O'Ferrall, D. D., Dean of the Cathedral.

Personal Notes

The Rev. W. S. Turner, Canon of the Cathedral of St. Philip, Atlanta, and rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Atlanta, spoke before the Annual Convention of Army Chaplains on Wednesday, April 24, in Louisville, Ky. His subject was, "The Advisability of Using Local Ministers in Place of Chaplains." Chaplains of both the regular army and of the reserve corps attended this meeting. Canon W. S. Turner will act as Brigade Chaplain in reviewing the Brigade Maneuvers at Fort Benning, Ga., from May 6 to 20. He is president of the Chaplain's Association of the Fourth Corps Area.

The Rev. C. O. Smith, D. D., has resigned from Trinity Church, New Haven after a profoundly interesting and influential ministry of forty-three years, in the most important parish in this diocese. The resignation is to take effect in September.

Call Accepted.

The Rev. C. Stanley Long, D. D., has accepted a call to the rectorship of Brandon Parish in the Diocese of Southern Virginia. Dr. Long will be remembered in the South as Dean of St. Luke's Cathedral, Orlando, Florida, from 1921-1927. During his Deanship the new Cathedral was built. In 1927, Dean Long resigned his appointment to accept a Chaplaincy in the United States Navy. Since his retirement from the Service, Dr. Long has acted as Minister-in-Charge of Trinity Parish, San Francisco, California.

Ordinations.

Priests.

The Rev. Frederick A. McDonald, assistant curate of St. Stephen's Church, Providence, R. I., was ordained priest last Tuesday morning in that church by Bishop Perry, acting for the Rt. Rev. S. Arthur Huston, D. D., Bishop of Olympia, with which the ordinand is canonically connected. Bishop Bennett, Bishop Perry's assistant, read the Gospel. The Rev. Harold N. Renfrew of the General Theological Seminary, New York, was sub-deacon. Canon B. I. Bell read the Litany. Fr. Spence Burton, D. D., of the Order of St. John the Evangelist, Cambridge, Mass., preached the sermon, and the rector, the Rev. Charles Townsend presented the candidate. The newly-ordained priest is chaplain of St. Dunstan's School.

The Rev. Thomas R. Marshall and the Rev. R. Dunham Taylor were advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Stevens of Los Angeles in St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles, March 16. The Rev. William Cowans preached the sermon.

The Rev. Mr. Marshall was presented by the Rev. Thomas C. Marshall, and is vicar of St. Andrew's Church, Los Angeles.

The Rev. Mr. Taylor was presented by the Rev. W. E. Maison, and is vicar at St. Stephen's Church, Beaumont-Banning, Calif.

Is by the sparrow's dying bed;
Therefore it is a blessed place,
And the sparrow in high grace.

Citizenship in the Kingdom of God brings inspiration and consolation, but also conflict, desolation and rebuff. In both directions Christ says, "Follow Me."—Canon Streeter.

A man must seek his happiness and inward peace from objects which cannot be taken away from him.—W. von Humboldt.

It has been said that St. Paul in his preaching and letters did not merely preach the Resurrection; he shouted it. And in this he is true to the mind of the first Christians, who had themselves known Christ in the flesh. The hallmark of early Christianity is above all else the certainty that the Lord, who had been dead, was alive for evermore.
—Rev. Francis Underhill.

Risen, not to stir the curiosity or arouse the amazement of multitudes; risen, not to win admiration by a baffling demonstration of miraculous power; but risen to enthrone a disheartened group of loyal disciples; risen to lead His consecrated followers to a world-wide victory for righteousness and human brotherhood; risen to give to men the assurance of immortality. "Because I live, ye shall live also."

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

THE OLD CHURCH

What an image of peace and rest
Is this little church among its graves!
All is so quiet; the troubled breast,
The wounded spirit, the heart oppressed,
Here may find the repose it craves.

See how the ivy climbs and expands
Over this humble hermitage,
And seems to caress with its little hands
The rough, gray stones as a child that stands
Caressing the wrinkled cheeks of age.

Here would I stay and let the world
With its distant thunder roar and roll;
Storms do not rend the sail that is furled,
Nor like a dead leaf, tossed and whirled
In an eddy of wind, is the anchored soul.

—H. W. Longfellow.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To All Ministers.

Mr. Editor:

We ask you to read this letter on Sunday, Mother's Day, to your congregation in order that true tribute to mothers may be accomplished.

Recently certain child health and child welfare committees from such Statewide associations as the Medical Society of Virginia, the Virginia Tuberculosis Association, the Virginia Pediatric Society, the Cooperative Education Association, Virginia Branch of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, and the Virginia Education Association met in a joint conference here in Richmond. Advising this committee were such leaders as Dr. I. C. Riggen, State Health Commissioner; Dr. McDowell, President of the Virginia Pediatric Society; Dr. B. B. Bagby, Director of the State Bureau of Child Health; Mr. L. L. Watts, Director of the State Commission for Eye Conservation; Dr. Hall, Commissionery of Labor and Industry, and the Directors of the Child Bureaus of this Department and the Department of Public Welfare.

This central committee, composed from all these associations, adopted the name of the State Child Conservation Committee, and after much deliberation arrived at the conclusion that there were four immediate and intense needs for the conservation of mothers and children in the State. They arrived at these conclusions because:

1. Seventy-five per cent of our Virginia pupils do not reach the minimum standard of physical fitness, and certain remediable defects, such as vision, hearing, tonsils-adenoids, teeth are seriously handicapping their progress in school and for later life. That these defects cost the State probably several millions in repeated costs for these pupils.

2. That Virginia has an unduly high maternal death rate even for the United States, and that only two or three Southern States have a higher rate of death for babies than Virginia.

3. That Virginia has the fifth highest tuberculosis death rate in the United States, and that she is not keeping up the average rate of decline even for the Southern States. There are approximately 20,000 people in the Sate who have, or have had, tuberculosis, and about 2,000 people die annually from this disease.

4. That the State Bureau of Vital Statistics estimates that there are 50,000 new cases of venereal disease annually in the State.

Something must be done to deal with these conditions. This State Child Conservation Committee, described above, will sponsor certain bills at the next Legislative Assembly which would provide funds to remedy these conditions described—

1. Funds for the correction of specific remediable defects in indigent children.

2. Funds for specific measures to control tuberculosis.

3. Funds for the control of venereal disease.

4. Funds for a post-graduate service to Virginia doctors, to secure better obstetrics and an earlier diagnosis of tuberculosis.

The request for these specific funds will not be exhorbitant demands, but practical, good economy and worked out by special studies by those prepared to make these studies.

The all important question faces us: "What will your representative in the State Legislature do when these bills are presented?"

The real tribute you can pay mothers is to find out their views, convince them, and when the bills sponsored by this State Child Conservation Committee are presented, have them prepared to vote for them. It is too late when the Legislature has assembled—do it now.

Words may be surface manifestations—deeds come from the heart.

Use Mother's Day for this service.

R. Cary Montague.

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., MAY 11, 1935. No. 19.

Fear God. Honor the King.

The celebration of King George, which is being observed in England, calls upon many of us to rejoice that our Mother Country has had for twenty-five years as fine Christian characters as the present monarchs. Regardless of our own political creeds, we sometimes wonder in our country if the British Royal Government is not, after all, really more democratic than our own.

But on the Third Sunday after Easter with the Epistle for the day in our ears, we cannot help but wonder what type of government is best for humanity.

There are many of us in the Church who feel that the present social order is a great failure. In our zeal for reform we have at times made the mistake of speaking as though political reformation was all that was necessary to bring about the social changes that are needed. Certainly Christians should not make such a mistake. At the basis of all human relations stands the spiritual note that either makes a government good or bad—depending upon the vision of the people and their leaders. There have been good monarchies in the world, and there have been good republics. There have been corrupt kings and there have certainly been corrupt administrations in the most democratic of states. The spirit of the author of the Epistle would seem to be that those who became Christians need not worry about the form of their government as long as they held for that which was true spiritually.

While certainly every preacher should be a prophet and cry out against the social injustices of the day and while we have sometimes forgotten that Old Testament Prophets denounced wealth in much more severe terms than Karl Marx ever used, fundamentally we should be very careful to differentiate between forms and methods and spiritual forces.

While on the whole we can say with fairness that monarchies are more apt to be corrupt than democracies because selfishness is apt to be the chief guidance, it is a pleasure to recall that our own Mother Country has had the best of monarchies, and we hope that not a little of the spiritual influence of his reign can be attributed to the spiritual influence of our Mother Church.

Mothering Sunday.

We have become accustomed to celebrating Mother's Day on the Second Sunday in May. The idea of a Mother's Day appeals to us in spite of the fact that in the observance, the day often has been made too sentimental, and too commercial. As a church day it has not taken deep root in the Episcopal Church.

It is interesting to note in this connection that there is a Mother's Day that has the traditional sanction of the Church of England and other Churches. It is the Fourth Sunday in Lent, called Mothering Sunday. Other names for this day are, Son's Sunday, Refreshment Sunday, Fig Pie Sunday, The Sunday of Five Loaves, Flowering Sunday, and The Feast of Violets. Each name tells some particular custom connected with Mothering Sunday. Some relate to food, some to flowers.

Mothering Sunday and The Feast of Violets are particularly appropriate names for this day that is being revived in many parts of the World. They go together, because everywhere people wear violets and buy violets to mothers on Mothering Sunday. The custom has produced in England such saying as "Who goes a-mothering finds violets in the lane", and "The violet is well hid that stays in the lane on Mothering Sunday".

Mothering Sunday is a home-coming Sunday, when sons and daughters meet in person, if possible, or in spirit, to pay tribute to their mother. And they come bringing violets.

It is a religious festival when the family go to church together to give thanks to God and to unite the family in worship.

It is a day of Remembrance when many go to God's acre to place violets on a peaceful spot.

Recently the Archbishops of Canterbury and York have sanctioned a special service for Mothering Sunday. At many of these services children are given violets to take to mothers. Each child takes them to the best mother in the world.

It seems to us that there is a great deal of value in this old day. We would like to see it developed here in America. We would like to keep it The Feast of Violets, too, for violets are beautiful to associate with Mothers.

"Violets, their fragrance sharing,
With Immortal Flowers above,
Sweet and Pure and Everlasting
Emblems of a Mother's love.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

The King, God Bless Him!

The Canadian Churchman, May 2, 1935.

The Church of England in Canada unites with our Nation and Empire, and in fact with the men of good will in all the world, in rejoicing with our King on his twenty-fifth anniversary. Never was the throne more firmly set in the hearts of the people and as this is due to our King, no greater tribute could he receive.

He was called to the throne on May 6, 1910, by the death of his father. He has lived and served as selflessly and generously as any sovereign ever has. As a result the monarchy holds a place today that it never before occupied. The King and the Queen, by their devotion to duty and by their exemplary lives, have won the respect and affection of the whole empire.

The twenty-five years in which his Majesty has been our King have been troublous times. There was the general strike in England, the World War and latterly the world depression. During this time the three monarchies which claimed to be heirs of the Roman Empire, whose rulers bore the titles of Caesar, Kaiser or Tsar have disappeared but our King stood forth after the conflict more firmly fixed in the hearts of the people than ever before.

He has shown all that is best in a British Sovereign, the strictest regard for constitutional practice, whole hearted devotion to the welfare of the realm and what lies beneath and is fundamental to the whole, a home life beyond reproach. One of his humblest and yet most glorious titles is "Defender of the Faith." He defends it first and foremost in his own religious life.

OUR GRACIOUS KING
1910—1935

"Give the King Thy judgments O Lord, and Thy righteousness unto the King's son."

All thanks and praise be unto Thee, O Lord,
For all Thy grace;
Through all the passing years Thine arm hath kept
Men of our race;
So now we meet, and of Thy goodness sing,
Whose love has sheltered our beloved King.

'Tis not our might, our armies, or our means,
But righteousness,
That through the changing order shall suffice
Our race to bless;
Thy love, Thy goodness, and Thy truth alone,
Can still maintain the honour of our Throne.

Bless then, we pray Thee, with Thy judgments, Lord,
Our gracious King;
And grant us here the grace to serve Thee well,—
So shall we sing
The songs of those Thy truth and peace who bless,
And own Thee still the Lord our Righteousness.

—Arthur J. Patstone.

General Ludendorff and Christianity.

The Guardian, April 18, 1935.

Last week we quoted the seventieth-birthday declaration of General Ludendorff—"I am anti-Christian and heathen and proud of it." A correspondent of the Morning Post on Wednesday of last week threw some light on the General's strange decline since the end of the War. He was then not only Army chief but practically dictator of home policies. He gave up his seat in the Reichstag in disgust when the Dawes Plan was ratified, married a psychiatrist and faith-healer, and, with her, set to work by pamphlet, magazine and newspaper, to "educate Germany back to health." There is a weekly Ludendorff organ entitled "At the Holy Source of German Strength: From the Thought World of the House of Ludendorff." It has a circulation of about 50,000, and the birthday number offers an illuminating commentary on the General's vigorous Nordic outlook. The goal, he says, is "to create so firm a spiritual unity in the German people that it must guarantee victory to a strong army and a strong field-marshall." This will be impossible by Christian teaching—possible, indeed, only "in frank opposition to Christianity." There must be "a purely German conception of God"; "I must reject the Bible from the bottom of my soul," for the Old Testament ordains that the Jewish race shall achieve world domination, and in the New Testament the fulfilment of the Jewish laws is proclaimed by Jesus. Christianity, in fact, must be rooted out in favour of the Ludendorff's ghastly "Hundred per cent Teutonic religion."

Mr. Adolphus Ochs.

The Guardian, April 18, 1935.

Mr. Adolphus Ochs, the famous proprietor of the New York Times, who began life as a poor immigrant from Bavaria, has not long survived his brilliant managing director, Mr. Louis Wiley. Mr. Ochs made the New York Times a huge success against what seemed to be all the chances. When he took it over in 1896 the popular, or "yellow", papers were the only sort that promised prosperity. Mr. Ochs was intent on an old-fashioned solidity and he showed all the other papers how to take an interest in foreign affairs which at that period engaged the attention of few Americans. He was indeed much more interested in providing the news than in pressing his opinions. He was not without strong opinions, and a regular reader of the New York Times was well aware what they were, but he felt that his real mission was to offer all the news that he could collect at home and abroad and to present it with perfect honesty. His motto, "All the news that's fit to print," was as good a motto as a newspaper could have.

A Peace-Loving Government.

The Record, April 18, 1935.

The large and increased amounts set aside in the Budget for our army, navy, and air forces are almost sure to revive the outcry of those extremely vocal pacifists who are anxious to make the country—and other countries also—believe that the Government is hurrying, or at least drifting, into war. If anything could convince them of their error it would be that speech which Mr. Baldwin delivered at Llandrindod Wells early in last week. Mr. Baldwin's character is such that it is impossible to believe him capable of double-dealing, while the prominence of his position as the head of the largest party in Parliament, and as all-but Prime Minister, give great weight to his utterances. On that occasion he reviewed the situation in Europe, which he compared to living in a madhouse. He said he would gladly see the submarine and bombing abolished, and arms reduced to a minimum—"I have not lost hopes yet," said he. Later he said this country did not want war, and did not mean to have war,

The Physical and the Spiritual

The wonders of the radio reveal to us means of communication which were undreamed of only a few generations ago. That a human voice can be heard the other side of the world from the point where it is spoken, is quite as wonderful, if not more so, than any of the miracles which have been put on one side as incredible by many people in this age of ours. The radio serves as an illustration of the possibilities of prayer as a spiritual influence, which, however, passes far beyond the utmost limit reached by the radio. For in the first place, prayer can enable us to pass into the very presence of God and to receive a response from Him, which is something far more wonderful than any thing which the radio has revealed to us, or is ever likely to reveal.

The Possibilities of Prayer.

Prayer to God is not a mere act of presumption on our part, since it is God who has taken the initiative by many wonderful promises and has thus invited us to draw near to Him, and to cast all our care on Him. Even so, it would be impossible for us to reach Him by means of prayer, if it were not for the fact that we have a spiritual nature which is capable of holding communion with God, though the words that we utter with our lips may me a mere whisper, and can not even be heard by those kneeling beside us in the House of God. All of what has been said clearly implies the existence of spiritual laws and forces which transcend the merely physical ones, and it may be said that the radio not only makes known to us a deeper meaning in Nature, but also suggests to our minds the nearness of the spiritual world, and the vast possibilities which the clearer consciousness of its presence will more and more fully open to us, as time goes on. It may be that the greater works referred to by our Lord as being possible to those who should believe on Him, had reference to spiritual miracles which were to be exercised by His followers through the possession of that spiritual power which He promised that they should receive.

The Emphasis on the Material Side of Life Exaggerated.

Men of the present day have been so fascinated by, and absorbed in, the discoveries and development of the physical world, that they have forgotten for the time being, that the spiritual world is man's true home and that a far vaster knowledge of it will come to those who enter into closer relations with that world, and take possession of the riches it has in store for them. We shall never know what we are really capable of, nor the possibilities of our spiritual nature till that day arrives. And the world is losing its true blessedness because we have turned away from the King's Highway of real progress to follow a bypath which, however attractive it may be, leads out into the wilderness. This by no means implies that there should be any suspension of the development of the resources of Nature, which God has given to us to use.

The Main Issue a Spiritual One.

But what is implied is that the resources of the spiritual world should most certainly not remain undeveloped, since their value to mankind is vastly greater than the other, and is absolutely necessary to yield to human life the means for its finest and richest development. For in spite of the fact that this age of ours has seen the most wonderful discoveries ever made for the improvement of the outward conditions of the world, in which we live, yet at the same time these discoveries, wonderful as they are, have not served to deliver us from some of the greatest evils that we have to endure. In fact, modern progress has meant, not only an increase in many blessings and advantages unknown to our forefathers, but also an increase in the destructiveness of war to the extent of being an actual menace to civilization; to say nothing of the minor evils which afflict our national life.

The Spiritual Essential to Human Welfare.

It has become quite evident that the development of the spiritual side of human life is not only important, but absolutely essential to man's happiness and general welfare. Just as the individual is made up of a higher and a lower nature, and if his lower nature controls his life and actions, his character is deteriorating all the time; so it is with Society as a whole. A community, a nation or a civilization concerned chiefly with material ends, is in a state of decadence, as history has shown again and again through the ages, for "He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption." Christ said to His disciples: "Ye are the salt of the earth," because if they were true to their mission, they would be able to save the world from corruption.

The Fruit of the Spirit.

"The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." This is the contribution which Christianity offers to the world as the remedy for its evils: as containing the necessary and essential elements which alone can create the type of human character which will regenerate mankind. It is all the greater blessing because it comes direct from God Himself, through the inspiration of His Spirit, and is therefore the real working out of the divine ideal in the life of man. We have come to regard Social Service as one of the main duties of the Christian Church, and no greater kind of social service can be rendered to a community than the spiritualizing of human society by Christians living the life of the Spirit, and thus creating an atmosphere or climate in which the fruits of the Spirit, love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness, temperance, are most perfectly produced.

The Regeneration of Human Society.

It would be impossible for war or the other evils, so prevalent at the present time, to exist in such an atmosphere, and yet this priceless contribution, which Christianity should be making to bless mankind, is still in so large a measure, lacking, to the sorrow of the world. The radio is one of the greatest wonders of the age, but it sinks into insignificance in comparison with the Prayer of Faith, which brings Heaven and earth together. If all Christians would only use it with a strong faith in God, the atmosphere of Heaven would be with us and would help to sweeten and purify and enrich human life, so that this earth would become the Garden of the Lord.

"The Resurrection of the Body"

By JOHN MOORE WALKER,

Rector of St. Luke's Church, Atlanta.

AN EVIDENCE of the vitality of Christianity during its earliest days lies in the fact that men still held firmly to their faith in spite of the failure to materialize of one of their greatest hopes, to wit: the Second Coming of Christ. Christians of the first generation universally, in all probability, looked for this event in their own day. But it never came. At any rate, it never came in the outward manner they had confidently expected. Still their faith withstood the shock of this disappointment and Christians remained loyal and steadfast, thereby proving that their religion had firmer foundations to rest upon than whether or not the Second Coming was to occur in the manner and at the time they had believed.

Now, St. Paul's discerning exposition of the Resurrection contained in First Corinthians, Chapter 15, assumes a close connection between his doctrine of the resurrection body and that General Resurrection at the time of the Second Advent. So likewise does the Apostles' Creed, its framers doubtless sharing St. Paul's earlier conviction in this regard. St. Paul, however, apparently changed his ideas as to the imminence of The Second Coming, probably also as to its nature. Certainly, in his later writings there is not noticeable the same emphasis on the Coming as theretofore. And it is undoubtedly the case with large numbers of Christians today that a belief in the outward return of Christ, accompanied by a general resurrection of all the dead, is not looked upon as intrinsic to the Faith of the Church. In the same way that earlier generations of Christians found their essential loyalty to their Saviour in no wise lessened because The Second Coming (in the outward form they expected it) never occurred, so present-day Christians are not aware of any disloyalty to Him or to their brethren of earlier generations in exppressing belief in "the resurrection of the body and the life everlasting" without connecting the same with the thought of a general resurrection "at the last day".

The average Church-goer, as he thoughtfully and devoutly declares his belief in "the resurrection of the body", has in mind the broad, deep Christian conviction of the life of the world to come, uncomplicated by any associations with The Second Advent. The average Christian layman has but vague acquaintance (and more probably no acquaintance at all) with what scholars call eschatology; but he has an abiding conviction of the Christian truth that the episode of physical death cannot destroy the God-created life of the soul. This faith is simple, as the trust of a little child is simple; but it is also profound as dealing with the vast deeps of our own nature and of our relation to the Infinite God.

What shall we say, then, that "the resurrection of the body" as a component of simple Faith expresses? First, it expresses for us continuity. "How are the dead raised up and with what body do they come?" is a question St. Paul essays to answer. "Thou foolish one," he declares, "that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die. And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain. It may chance of wheat or of some other grain. But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased Him, and to every seed its own body." In the same way that the life contained in the seed continues into the plant after the seed has perished, so the soul's being continues in the realm of the life beyond the grave, after the body which has been its organ of expression in this world has perished.

SECOND, "Resurrection of the body" expresses for us our faith in the continuance of the individual existence of those we have known and loved in this life. True the physical body reverts to the earth whence it came; but we had come to love those very physical bodies. We know our friends and dear ones only as through and by means of their material bodies. The loving eyes, the sweet smile, the kindly handshake, were the faithful manifestations of the soul within; and as such they were true components of the individual personality. These physical accompaniments to the indwelling soul were, therefore, an emblem, a value, which in God's great economy are not to be cast away as rubbish. Though they were indeed the outward and visible of an inward and spiritual, the association between the outward and the inward was so closely bound and intimate that the outward partook of the inward and was accordingly precious. And precious things God will not allow to be destroyed.

> "A baby's eyes, ere speech begin,
> Ere lips learn words or sighs,
> Bless all things bright enough to win
> A baby's eyes.
> "Love, while the sweet thing laughs and lies,
> And sleep flows out and in,
> Sees perfect in them Paradise.
> "Their glance might cast out pain and sin,
> Their speech make dumb the wise,
> By mute glad godhead felt within
> A baby's eyes."

St. Paul, in the course of the exposition above referred to, states: "If there is a natural body, there is also a spiritual body." That is: as a physical body is necessary to the soul's expression under mundane conditions, a body adapted to the circumstances of that other realm will likewise be provided. If so, what more in keeping than that the values associated with the material bodies of dear ones in this life shall be maintained in the bodies wherewith they shall be clothed upon in that other life, thus contributing to the conserving of the individual personality? In this way is belief in "the resurrection of the body" a component of the Christian's faith in that other mansion of his Father's house.

CHURCH AND WORLD PROBLEMS AS OTHERS SEE THEM.

an if war can only be stopped by letting the aggressor know that war will not be permitted in Europe, this country would play her part with the rest of Europe to see that no aggression took place. In his opinion the best way of securing peace was by some means of collective security, and to that end, inside the League of Nations, the whole of Europe must play its part. Everyone who heard or read the speech must have been convinced that the speaker was whole-hearted for peace, and therefore that the policy of the Government in which he bears so high an office must be likeminded.

A Religionist Looks at Birth Control

By THOMAS F. OPIE,

Rector of St. Bartholomew's Parish, Olney, Maryland.

WHAT IS THE USE of discussing, debating or legislating any question, until the question of birth control has had sane and reasoned consideration? Why try to solve any of our problems, until this, the fundamental of all problems, has at least had an inning? All of our vexed questions are centered in this one problem, it seems to me, namely, the social planning, the regulation and the spacing of children, according to the best religious and social reasoning we can bring to bear on the matter.

Certainly, if the welfare of humanity is of concern to us, then I submit that this question should have our full and earnest thought. It is a matter about which we have, as religionists, been entirely and disproportionately prudish, evasive and handoff-ish!

Are we concerned with the unemployment problem? Do you know that the birth-rate among the unemployed has jumped up sixty per cent? What of these hundreds of thousands of infants—many of whom are not wanted; most of whom must be undernourished and handicapped from the very first, in the nature of the case—and all of whom are being introduced into social, educational and moral chaos. It simply is not fair to the unborn!

Are we concerned with the question of poverty, of housing, of over-populated slums? Are we concerned with the question of crime and of crime-prevention? Then we had better put on our thinking-caps and see that these, too, have their roots right down in the bed-rock of birth control.

I quote from the March, 1935, issue of the American Journal of Public Health:—"The bugaboo of religious intolerance of medical advice for contraceptive purposes can no longer be honestly quoted in the face of publicly declared positions of a number of important organizations which have expressed a favorable attitude towards the dissemination of birth control information under appropriate conditions." The following organizations and conventions have approved of the spreading of birth control information, through medical and hospital and clinical channels: The Universalist General Convention (1929); Central Council of American Rabbis (1929); Lambeth Conference of Bishops of the Episcopal Church (1930); Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America (1931); General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches (1931); New York East Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church (1931; Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends (1931); Y. W. C. A. National Board (1934); Protestant Episcopal General Convention (1934); National Hebrew Sisterhoods (1935)—and numerous other religious conclaves.

A diocesan paper recently carried a column article, "Making Maternity Safe," in the interest of the work of the Maternity Center Association of New York City. It cited six principles of adequate maternity care, as follows:—"A competent medical examination early in pregnancy; regular and frequent medical supervision; an aseptic delivery under the supervision of an obstetrician; supervision, care and instruction until the mother is able to resume her work; examination of the mother at six weeks, three months, six months and one year after the baby is born and arrangements for continuous medical supervision of the baby." What a fine topic this affords for a Mother's Day editorial. And yet there is one obvious omission here, without which, this schedule is not only incomplete, but sadly crippled, namely, that every mother in the country, be recognized as entitled to proper information from reputable professional sources, as to how she may space her unborn children, so as to insure them comfort, nourishment, care and educational and moral guidance.

Listen to this statement:—"With a marriage rate in the United States today of about eight per 1,000; with one in six marriages ending in divorce; with at least one abortion for each three pregnancies, with 15,000 maternal deaths a year from criminal abortion (personally I think it is more like 25,000!)—and a large amount of maternal mortality related to conditions in one or both parents of a preventable character, and with disproportionately high birth-rates among the less competent part of our population, we may well consider whether there are no lessons for us to learn and apply in the example of some European nations which have incorporated the protection of women against pregnancy by appropriate medical advice in their public health services." This is from the American Journal of Public Health—and is a conservative expression, not a radical one.

NOW LOOK at the legal situation, by reason of outmoded statutes and persistent unreadiness to deal with this, the most vital of public questions that can possibly engage Congress—or any group of humanitarians. By the way, why are we so bent on legislating the amenities and ignoring the humanities? Section 211 of the United States Penal Code prohibits the sending or receiving by or from the United States mail information or supplies pertaining to the prevention of conception. There are no exemptions—but, believe me, a host of modern-minded humanitarians are now pressing for certain rightful exemptions—despite recent suggested legislation that would tend to tighten rather than to loosen the restrictions in this regard. By reference to Section 245 of the United States Penal Code, it also appears that sending or receiving information or supplies pertaining to the prevention of conception by or from Express Companies or other common carriers, is forbidden. Of course, the law is not being observed—especially by those who have unworthy intentions in this particular—and yet the honorable medical profession and the standard hospitals of the land are prohibited from placing, professionally and rightfully, proper information in the hands of those who deserve and should have it—namely, the hundreds of thousands of married women who are no less than frantic over the matter of too many children or children who come at inopportune times—most notably in a period of moral and financial depression.

Doubtless you are familiar with the fact that Birth Control Bill S.600 would amend the above Penal Code, with a view to making it lawful for accredited physicians and for hospitals and clinics to give and extend such information as they might deem needful to such persons as they might judge in need of it. Birth Control Bill H. R. 5,600 (formerly Bill 2,000) would amend the Criminal Code, as follows: "The provisions of this section shall not be construed to apply to any book or information relating to the prevention of conception, or article," etc., intended solely for the prevention of conception, as follows: (1) for use by any physician licensed to practice medicine; (2) for use by any druggist in filling any prescription of such licensed physician; (3) for use by any Medical College legally chartered; (4) for use by any hospital or clinic or governmental agency duly chartered under the laws.

Surely when as conservative a body as the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America brings itself to favorable action on the subject of Birth Control, any group of religionists may well consider whether or not it should not fall in with this trend. Editorially, The Nation had this to say:—"The present federal laws against birth control tie

"Behold the Man!"

By JAMES E. FREEMAN,
Bishop of Washington.

Bishop Freeman.

A PETTY Roman governor occupies a conspicuous place in history, not because of his fame or distinction, but because of his weakness and cowardice. In Munkascy's great painting, "Christ Before Pilate," he portrays the Roman governor as a weak and vascillating man. The scene is the mock trial in the governor's palace and the central and kingly figure in the drama is the humble Nazarene. As one studies the great picture one can almost hear the governor uttering the memorable words as he declares concerning the meek and lowly prisoner, "Behold the man!" Little did Pilate realize that in this utterance he was proclaiming a truth of vast significance. It is a curious kind of immortality, and a doubtful one that Pilate thus gained, by being identified with the greatest scene recorded in the annals of history. Down through the long ages these challenging words of the Roman governor have arrested the thought and serious consideration of men the world over. Through succeeding ages the Master who stood in Pilate's court on that memorable day has been the central figure before every tribunal where men have debated the high claims of this incomparable Saviour of Mankind. Each generation has appraised the man and His mighty teachings. At times, the verdict has seemed to be in doubt, and yet, He has emerged from every test and trial as the supremest figure the world has known. To the man Christ Jesus, individual or corporate judgment has been directed, but down to this latest hour He holds His unchallenged place as the "mightiest among the mighty", who, by His life and ministry, to use the language of another, "raised empires from their foundations, turned the stream of history from its channels, and still continues to rule and guide the ages." Upon His teachings great systems have been builded, and He who was "despised and rejected of men" has millions of reverent adherents in every part of the world.

This kingly figure stands once again in our day to be appraised by the men of our generation. What we think of other great figures and how we appraise them affects little our philosophy of life or our habit of living. Not so with Christ. What we think of Him, how we appropriate His teachings, has a determining effect not only upon our philosophy of life, but upon our habit and ultimate destiny. In every place where men are seeking to find a way out of their confused problems whether they relate to their individual or corporate interests, He stands today, and their judgment of Him and His teachings must affect their purposes and plans. As we consider Him in the light of our domestic, social and economic practices, we are compelled to heed His voice and obey His will, or else to assume the responsibility for our course of action.

"Behold the Man!" is the challenging note that arrests the thoughtful consideration of every age, and upon our appraisal of Him who stood in Pilate's court we base our ideal of what we have come to call Christian civilization, a civilization that at least by implication is founded upon His life and teachings.

In these critical days of unrest and unsettlement, days fraught with threatening perils, we are confronted with the question as to whether we are to be led by the Man on the Cross, or the so-called super-man, the "man on horseback." Are we to have an orderly and peaceful world, or are we to return to the ways of barbarism, in which the rule is to be the rule of might rather than the rule of right? This Prince of Peace with His message of love and good will, this great teacher who gave to men His ideal of a world brotherhood and His conception of the "abundant life", is pressing his claims today in a world that is distracted by conflicting aims and purposes, that is shadowed by war clouds and alarmed by the arrogant designs of those who press the selfish claims of nationalism. Men may refuse, as did Pilate, to recognize either His purpose or His message, but ultimately He must prevail. Sooner or later those who will not heed Him will be compelled to cry out as did one of old: "O Galilean, Thou hast conquered."

"BEHOLD, THE MAN!"

A RELIGIONIST LOOKS AT BIRTH CONTROL.

the hands of the medical profession and drive the distribution of contraceptives underground. The bootlegging of fake methods makes for tragedy and endangers public health. There are approximately 1,000,000 abortions in this country each year; 30,000 women die as a result of pregnancy or abortion—and 200,000 infants die or are born dead." If that is not a challenge for us to bestir ourselves, especially in the light of approaching Mother's Day, which we shall all observe in one way or another, I do not know a challenge when it is flung in my face.

HAVE YOU read Margaret Sanger's book, "Motherhood in Bondage"? Or her book, "My Fight for Birth Control"? Here are two books which, in my opinion, every pastor should not only peruse, but seriously ponder. Either one of them is calculated to convert to this impelling cause any reasoning and open-minded humanitarian on earth. Dorothy Bromley's book, published not long ago by Harper and Brothers, "Birth Control; Its Use and Misuse," is also timely.

I cannot close this paper without a word of tribute to Margaret Sanger, herself a Churchwoman, preeminently the one conspicuous authority in this field—and the most vigorous crusader for the cause of birth control, in season and out. Here is a woman who knows how to suffer and to agonize for a cause—for, not her own personal cause, but for the cause of millions of distracted mothers—for humanity itself, since this cause runs like a scarlet thread through the whole fabric of human life and public weal. Eight times arrested and once serving an actual jail sentence, she has been unrelenting in her sacrifice for her convictions in this particular matter. Her own story, already referred to, constitutes a classic in pressing for an ideal and shows beyond quibble that she is in heart and spirit as truly a martyr for a high and worthy end as were the followers of the Nazarene who suffered at the hands of a Nero or a Caesar. She has not had to die for her cause, thanks to a somewhat softened public opinion—but she has done better—she has lived for it and has carried in her own soul the marks of a suffering womanhood—a struggling humanity.

The King's Churches*

By Elissa St. John.

KING GEORGE, as all the world knows, is a deeply religious man, although he does not believe in exhibiting it unnecessarily. Ever since he was sixteen he has read a chapter of the Bible every day —the fulfilment of a boyish promise made to his adored mother, Queen Alexandra, fifty-five years ago.

Their Majesties the King and Queen are among the greatest churchgoes in the country and only severe illness or something very urgent will make the King miss his weekly church service. His Majesty is generally regarded as an Episcopalian but as a matter of fact this is not quite correct. When in Scotland the King becomes a Presbyterian and attends the kirk. During his autumn stay at Balmoral he worships every Sunday at Crathie Church, which is the parish church of Balmoral, Crathie and Braemer, a combined parish which extends to forty miles in length and twenty in breadth.

Crathie Church stands nearly 1,000 feet above sea level and with its central tower, octagonal spire and white granite construction, makes a notable landmark. The present church was built on the site of an old one and was opened on June 18, 1895. The style of the architecture is modified Early Gothic and its architect was Mr. A. Marshall Mackenzie.

A beautiful stained glass window in the north transept commemorates the Diamond Jubilee of Queen Victoria, who was so passionately fond of the district and the little parish church. The south transept is reserved for the king and the royal household—and during the king's residence at Balmoral the public part of the church is crammed every Sunday morning. His Majesty invariably drives to Crathie Church in Highland dress and he follows the plain Scottish service with devout interest.

When staying at the palace of Holyroodhouse in Edinburgh—the ancient home of his Stuart predecessors—the King attends divine service at St. Giles' Cathedral in the historic High-street. St. Giles is rather a sombre building from the outside, but this old collegiate church has had a stirring history and His Majesty likes to worship in it.

The royal pew at St. Giles takes the form of a magnificent dais fitted with a superbly decorated throne chair over which is a fourteen-foot canopy. Fifteen stalls for the royal suite are also on the dais, which is thirty-two feet long by eight and one-half feet broad and is raised four and one-half feet from the floor. An elaborately carved desk stands in front of the oak throne and altogether the Scottish cathedral gives all possible honour to its royal worshipper when he enters its historic walls.

Irregular in shape and rather gloomy in its interior, St. Giles is yet full of interest to the student of history. Here lies the beheaded body of the Marquis of Graham, executed in Edinburgh for his Stuart loyalty in 1650 and whose remains, unceremoniously buried beneath the gallows, were exhumed in 1661 by order of the restored Charles II and re-interred with pomp and splendour in St. Giles' Cathedral a few yards away from here his executed ancestor lay buried.

It was in St. Giles in July, 1637, that Jenny Geddes, an Edinburgh housewife, threw a stool at the dean for reciting the Episcopalian liturgy. It was in this church that John Knox preached. James VI of Scotland said farewell to his Scottish subjects when he set off for London in 1603, and where the ill-fated Charles I often worshipped.

The beautiful little chapel of the Knights of the Thistle is in St. Giles and the stalls of the knights make a wonderful display. The sovereign's stall is in the centre on the right of the entrance and it is flanked by those of the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Connaught. Being a lover of history and tradition, it is little wonder that His Majesty takes a very great interest in St. Giles' Cathedral.

It is common knowledge that the King, like his parents before him, regards Sandringham as his real home. The official name of Sandringham parish church is St. Mary Magdalene, and as its register dates from 1557 it will be seen that it had its own history and traditions long before King Edward bought the Sandringham estate from Lady Harriet Cooper for £200,000 in 1861. But the British royal family have been staunch friends of this picturesque church for over half a century. King Edward restored it at his own expense in 1890 and again in 1909, while the present king in 1921 defrayed the entire cost of a magnificent new oak roof. The pulpit—an exquisite erection in oak and silver, was presented to Queen Alexandra on her eightieth birthday in 1924 by Mr. Rodman Wanamaker and it took over two years to construct.

Stained glass window memorials to Sir Dighton Probyn, Sir Archibald Davidson and Viscount Knollys, trusted friends and servants of the royal family, add a rich glow to the interior. But, indeed, the church is crowded with artistic memorials of dead royalties and their friends. In the east wall of the sanctuary is a silver tablet placed by King George in memory of his mother, Queen Alexandra.

Sandringham Church only holds 150 and the living is in the hands of the king. The present rector is the Rev. Arthur Rose Fuller, domestic chaplain to the king and his stipend is £316 a year with residence.

In Sandringham churchyard are buried Prince Alexander, the infant son of King Edward VII, who died in 1871, and Prince John, the youngest son of King George, who died in January, 1919. Sandringham Church with its intimate sidelights on royal affections and friendships, is well worth a visit.

Windsor Castle, with all its dignity and splendour, does not greatly appeal as a residence to the king and queen, but custom and tradition demand that they should spend a certain time there every year. The glories of Windsor are world famous and in St. George's Chapel there exists surely the most regal looking church in the world as far as interior goes. With its beautiful side and adjoining chapels, St. George's, Windsor, is a worthy memorial to the monarch, Edward IV, in whose reign it was founded, although Henry VIII completed it!

To describe the treasures of St. George's Chapel would need a stout volume. Memorials, all of them ornate and expensive, abound, and Queen Victoria appears to have had a fondness for them. A cenotaph erected by her is a tribute to Louis, Prince Imperial of France, and son of the exiled Napoleon III, who was killed fighting for Britain in Zululand in 1879. There is also a memorial to a Prince Alamagu, son of Theodore, King of Abyssinia. Two massive brass candlesticks in the Rutland Chapel were presented by the present king and queen to "The Glory of God and in Memory of their Parents".

The elaborate stalls of the Knights of the Garter each surmounted by the banners, helmets and insignia of the knight owner, are most impressive sights, and the richly carved vaulted roof and the magnificent stained glass windows present an unforgettable scene.

The Albert Memorial Chapel, erected by Queen Victoria in 1875, has been described as one of the most beautiful and costly church interiors in the world—the mosaics, marbles, stained glass and precious inlaid stones all being superb. A recumbent effigy of the DEEPER MEANINGS OF PRAYER.

Louis Deschamps.

"All the question is the quantity of thought put into the prayer."—Victor Hugo.

NOT ONLY is prayer invocation and petition, but also meditation. Its deeper meanings are not found in speaking many words. Silent, thoughtful prayers are the most profound and satisfying. The daily repetition of words at the same time is too often crowded with distracting thoughts so that prayer becomes a perfunctory duty. One should not stop there. It is the individual's mental concept of prayer that makes it either a sub-conscious repetition of words or a profound spiritual experience not only at the allotted time, but always present for the unexpected hour of solitude or a moment's meditation.

Meditation in prayer offers much to those who seek its deeper meaning. For some it means a privilege of the highest honor, because it is an audience with the King. Their conception of prayer includes a mental picture of an impressive Council Chamber of royal grandeur, where one finds the wisest and greatest of humanity for conference with the King. What greater appreciation of the worth and dignity of the human soul than to realize that God opens His conference room to all who reverently come! And what an inspiration to the humble and discouraged to find within his own heart the same spiritual powers of the great and good! In prayer the differences of fortune are not present ether to humiliate or to glorify the individual. Greatness of soul knows no man-made limitations. Prayer as an audience with God, the Source of all wisdom and truth, is indeed a privilege no one can afford to neglect. There is no greater Counselor. Through all history the wisest and greatest of mankind have used the same Council Chamber. The most perplexing problems of individual lives find a satisfying answer there. Success and failure acquire new meanings there, because spiritual values are the standard.

AGAIN, to the thoughtful, prayer means the healing ministry of the Great Physician. Fears and anxieties are relieved when the mind acknowledges the presence God. Worry and despondency are essentially self-centered so that prayer is like the fresh air and sunshine outside the narrow walls. Prayerful meditation diverts the attention from self and lifts up the eyes to spiritual things. Remorse and despair admit no other cure than sincere, thoughtful prayer. The peace and serenity of simply "awaiting upon the Lord" in prayer is like the calm of the dawn or the soothing solemnity of the star-lit night. The beauties of Nature are made symbol of spiritual truth by prayer.

Many there are who never dare to approach the outer edge of things, the inevitable valley of the shadow, although they know full well they must pass that way sooner or later. Real prayer fortifies the soul against the unfathomable mysteries that torture the mind. It is like the candle light that shows a path where there was only darkness. It leads the thoughtful pilgrim to the very threshold of the infinite, not in vain and hopeless speculation, but in communion with One Who has passed beyond and overcome Death. Each new departure of friend or dear one is not only an occasion of grief and sorrow, but also a more profound and comforting use of the hour of prayer. A well-established habit of thoughtful prayer unrestricted in time or place satisfies the most inquiring mind as to the ultimate meaning of life. It convinces the most skeptical that there can be no better reason for life than to learn the will of God and perform it to the best of one's ability.

MODERNISM CROSS-EXAMINED: By David Simpson. A companion volume to Evolution Cross-Examined, which the author names "A Critical examination of Modernism in the witness box." Wm. B. Eerdmans. Price 35c.

Modernism may be expressed by the following formula: "Because of the insignificance of the earth in contrast with the immensity of the universe, the reputed truths of God and man as defined in the Bible are inconceivable. That there should be a personal God, having any direct interest in any individual is impossible of conjecture. The theory of evolution effectually disposes of the idea of sin and redemption. The new psychology explains or discards the notion of prayer and spiritual experience. The Bible can have only an ethical value, since its supernatural and prophetical features are untenable. The doctrines of the Christian Faith, from the Virgin Birth of Christ to the promise of His coming again have no foundation for intelligent acceptance. The possibility of a future life is no longer dependent upon Biblical assurances. It may or may not be a reality. And life on earth can have no relative bearing upon expected joys and punishments in that problematical existence."

This attitude towards revealed religion grows more and more audacious, and we come to ask, What shall be our position? Shall we accept James Gordon Gilkey's dictum, "The old religion was founded upon an alleged revelation; the new religion will be based upon reason and experience?" Our author helps us to make a decision. Some of us do not need any enlightenment. We know Whom we have believed; and are content to stake all on Him. But, there are uncertain souls who are standing upon the brink. and who need the bracing which this searching volume offers.

Let us hear once more the challenge of the Apostle Peter, "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and reverence." Testimony to the working of God in the life will do more to cure Modernism as we have defined it, than volumes of argument, and yet, persuasiveness teems in this contribution to the widely-prevailing discussion.

THE KING'S CHURCHES.

Prince Consort bears the inscription, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course."

Beneath the Albert Chapel is the tomb house built by George III in 1810 and here are buried many British royalties. In the '70's, Queen Victoria insisted on inspecting this grim underground chamber, a demonstration of the iron nerve of the great queen.

King Edward and Queen Alexandra were married in St. George's Chapel in 1863, which has been the scene of many royal religious ceremonies throughout the centuries.

It is said that the king much prefers the private chapel at Buckingham Palace to the ornate St. George's for Sunday worship, and as the public are never admitted to Buckingham Palace, this may account for the king's preference! The Buckingham Palace chapel is small and plainly artistic and His Majesty has a private entrance. The king often goes into his private chapel for meditation during the week—and when thus engaged he is never on any account disturbed.

A great deal of His Majesty's courage and vision during his stirring reign is due in his own opinion to his deep religion feelings and his firm belief in a Supreme Power. No man, no matter what his beliefs, can fail to respect a sovereign who in an age of scepticism is a staunch church-goer and believer.

King George is one of the longest-lived monarchs in the history of England. Since 1066 only eleven other had sufficient years to mark a silver jubilee.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

NATIONAL EXECUTIVE BOARD MEETING.

April 26, 27 and 29.

Many times in the past the Executive Board has wanted to get away from the always pressing needs for action on specific cases long enough to consider underlying questions of policy and the character of the work as a whole. This procedure was accomplished, or at least begun, at the April meeting. Of the seven morning, afternoon or evening sessions, six were given to conference on the work as a whole. The desire for further exploration and study was so evident that the chairman asked the board members to continue their work all summer, for report and further conference at the October meeting.

Among the many subjects considered were: the aims of the Executive Board; the Auiliary's relationships with missionaries; field work, past experience, present need and future policy; the best use of field workers; the educational value of the whole program of the Auxiliary, a conception of education as much more than acquiring information or belonging to a study class; promotion of the United Thank Offering, what emphasis should be given to it now, what methods used; program-building; development of the Auxiliary's social service program; the value of professional women's work in education and social service; objectives of the supply department, its methods, its relation to the present-day desire of professional organizations, Federal and State, to administer relief not by giving supplies but by giving money; college students and the Church's college workers, student needs and the character of the Church's work; standards for Church work, recruiting and training missionaries—even the precise question, what is a missionary? is to come up for further clarifying.

The Presiding Bishop, in a brief address, urged the continuing personal activity on the part of every church member as the real basis of the Forward Movement, and Dr. Franklin voiced a warning against a dangerous complacency which may result from meeting the Emergency Schedule, which is only a minimum for 1935.

Ratification of the proposed Child Labor Amendment was favored by a motion on which the roll call showed fifteen in favor, one opposed, two not voting and two absent. Women in States where the Amendment is not yet ratified are urged to secure information on this subject from the National Child Labor Committee, 419 Fourth Avenue, New York City, and, as opposed to the Amendment, the National Committee of the Protection of Child, Family, School and Church, 1218 Olive Street, St. Louis, Missouri. If after study they favor ratification, they are urged to take action. Attention was called again to the statement adopted by the triennial meeting: "As citizens, we must display an active interest in the field of legislation, bringing our individual and group weight to bear on legislative bodies responsible for the enactment of measures for the common good, in accord with the principles of Jesus."

Immediate passage of the anti-lynching bill is urged in a petition to President Roosevelt which the board voted to sign. Further copies of the petition are to be sent diocesan presidents for such use as they can make of them. The petition summarizes the purpose of the bill: "to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing and punishing the crime of lynching."

In accordance with resolutions passed by the triennial meeting on the subject of Christian citizenship, the board urged that effective action be taken in dioceses and parishes, on matters affecting international, interracial or other social conditions. Execution of this action of the triennial falls normally within the province of the Auxiliary's diocesan social service chairmen. Dioceses where as yet there is no such officer are urged to secure action in whatever way seems most effective. (Out of ninety-seven diocesan annual reports recently studied, fifty-three showed social service chairmen.)

Foreign branches of the Woman's Auxiliary, including those of the American Churches in Europe, now have a member of the Executive Board, Mrs. Beverly Ober, of Baltimore, to keep them in closer touch with the board. This applies to branches not already under the care of a provincial representative on the board. Puerto Rico, for example, belongs to the Second Province, Alaska and Hawaii to the Eighth.

After struggling with a pasteboard ballot box at the triennial elections, Miss Elsie C. Hutton, who was chairman of the Election Committee, has presented to the board as a gift from the evening branch of her parish, St. Mark's Church, Mt. Kisco, New York, a handsome and durable ballot box of carved wood with brass-bound corners.

Young people's work and a new religious education department in Hawaii, and college work in general, were subjects briefly presented to the board by Leila Anderson, Woman's Auxiliary field worker, just returned from Hawaii and from visits to several colleges and universities.

Georgia.

The Macon District of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Atlanta will hold its spring meeting at the Auditorium at Warm Springs, Saturday, May 11.

Mrs. McMillan, the Provincial President, will be the guest speaker.

Mrs. A. H. Sterne, Past Diocesan President, will give the devotional and talk on The Power of Prayer.

Miss Louise Starr, Episcopal Student Worker at the University of Georgia, Athens, will talk of her work among the students.

Mrs. Marshall Ellis, Diocesan President, members of the Board and Committee Chairmen will speak for two minutes and there will be a general discussion among all present.

The Macon District, being one of the three districts into which the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary is divided, is composed of Macon, Griffin, Talbotton, La Grange, Fort Valley Milledgeville and Columbus.

Through these District meetings a closer friendship is formed among all members of the Auxiliary, an opportunity is given to discuss local problems and to gain inspiration, so that all may work together in the best way for the Diocese and the Church.

Mrs. Banks Yonge, of Columbus, Vice-President of the Diocesan Auxiliary, is in charge of the meeting.

District of North Texas.

St. Mary's Parish Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, Big Spring, in the District of North Texas, the Rev. P. Walter Henckell, rector, had a triple anniversary, on April 22, in observance of the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the Mission by Bishop Garrett in 1885, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the District of North Texas and the District Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, and the tenth anniversary of the Consecration of Bishop Seaman.

Mrs. V. Van Gieson read a carefully prepared history of this congregation which was made a parish this year.

The rector was with the Bishop, an honor guest, and Bishop Seaman made an address.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

WAR AND PEACE, AND WHAT TO DO ABOUT IT.

The earliest records that we have tell of wars between peoples in Egypt or in Babylonia. Scholars tell us that even before that the tombs show that men had fought among themselves. One man or a group of men would want something that another had and would fight for it. If the offender was an individual in an organized community we called him a robber, but if it was a group that was the offender we called it war.

Sometimes war came because things were in a muddle, so that the leaders considered the best way out was to call in the soldiers to fight it out. In other words, the soldiers were called to stop the war the leaders had started. War is always bad. It is a breakdown of law and order, and all right thinking people are anxious to prevent it at all times. The only trouble is to get a method that will really prevent it.

We often hear that war today is much more horrible than it ever was in the past. But let us see if this really is true. In the Meuse-Argonne Battle in the World War, in the eighteen days' fighting, there was one American soldier in every 1,000 engaged that was killed. This meant about five in every hundred thousand per day. But in the battle of Gettysburg, 1,150 per hundred thousand per day were killed. This was bad enough, but in the battle of Bunker Hill the same percentage would give us 9,091 per hundred thousand. In the battle of Cannae in the Roman Carthagenian War, 91,320 per hundred thousand were killed. So we see that modern war is much safer than ancient war. Yet, modern warfare is bad enough, and we should do all we can to prevent it. For in the World War nearly sixty million men were in the armies of the contending nations. That is about half as many people as we have in the entire United States, and more than one out of every forty people in the entire world. Moreover, nearly eight million of them were killed, and more than twice that number wounded.

One of the first methods of stopping wars was for one nation to conquer the entire known world. In the great empire thus formed people thought that there could be no war. This was practically done in the old Roman Empire. But before we go further, let us see why such a plan could not work today.

It was possible in the past, because one nation could have much more powerful weapons than the others. Also being better organized for war it was able to conquer any one nation. Then, means of communication being so poor, a small nation could be conquered before its neighbor heard the news and was able to come to its aid. But today, with the radio and the news service we have, everyone knows things of importance almost as soon as they happen, so that other nations would "gang up" on any nation that tried to be a world conqueror.

Next there is the Disarmament Plan. This, in its extreme form says that nations cannot fight without arms. Therefore, if we will only destroy all our arms so that we cannot fight, there will be no more fighting. The trouble with this in its extreme form is that the outlaw would be delighted in our own land and would, as soon as they heard that the police nad disarmed, rob all our banks and stores, not to speak of our homes. So we see that we must modify our plans for complete disarmament and keep enough for a police force. But the question then arises: How much would we need for a police force, and if we have just enough to manage our own outlaws, may not some outlaw nation come in and rob us?

As this plan is so popular in these days with so many people, especially in its form of promising that they will never go to war under any circumstances, we should go into it rather deeply, remembering that, as Sherman said, "War is Hell", and that our objective is to avoid war. If we have our people agree not to fight under any circumstances, what would be the result? If we may judge from the East, where Japan was recently warring against China for the possession of Manchuria, we can see what has and will always happen when a nation has wealth, but has not force to protect itself. Some other nation comes in and wars against it. Some people say that we should not provide arms for either side in a war. But if we do this, we are sharpening the teeth of the wolf and muzzling the lamb, lest the poor wolf get hurt while killing the lamb. For an attacking nation has its arms ready and the attacked nation, not suspecting the trouble, has not supplied itself with any arms. So we say that we want disarmament, but only when all nations agree to disarm.

The next plan that has been suggested is Arbitration. This, its advocates claim, is what we have in our law courts between individuals, and we need to have it between nations as well. It has been tried a number of times, and where it has been tried it has been successful. The argument is that after a war, a nation's leaders assemble around the council table and make peace. Why not do it before war has killed so many people? The argument is good, except that often nations will not submit their differences to a third party. The League of Nations was, and is, an attempt to get all the nations to agree to do this. But the United States would not go into it. The League formed a World Court. To it nations may bring their differences. But Japan refused to submit to its ruling. A few years ago much was made of the Kellogg Peace Pact. But as the Honorable Bassett Moore, at one time Chief Justice of the World Court, stated: "It simply renounces War, except when attacked, or when a nation's honor is concerned. And it leaves it to the nation to say whether its honor is affected, or whether it is attacked. Now, it is an interesting fact that no war has ever been started that each nation did not claim that it had been attacked, or that its honor was concerned. So it means simply that the nations agree not to go to war unless they want to do so."

A Practical Plan.

Many people get the idea that the fact that a man has been a soldier is apt to make him in favor of war. But no one can know the horrors of war quite so well as one who has seen it as a soldier. So that to say that a war veteran wants another war is about as sensible as saying that a man whose house has been burned down wants it to happen again.

After the World War a number of veterans from the various allied countries formed what is called the F. I. D. A. C. (Federation Internationale des Anciens Combatants), or International Alliance of Old Soldiers, for the purpose of fighting war, and to have a permanent peace. The Fidac's program is a fairly simple one. It has three sides to it:

First—Good will among nations that will make a will to peace. So they encourage visits between members of different nations, so they will grow to like one another better.

Second: Arbitration and International Justice with a World Court to which nations shall bring their differences before going to war.

Third—An international police force, to which each nation shall contribute its quota of troups. But until this is formed or until all nations disarm, that each nation shall be prepared to protect itself against other nations.

This in modified form is what practically every military man holds is necessary. Some do not believe we can ever get an international police force, so they are most insistent that Preparedness is the real way to peace when combined with the other two.

Next the question comes up of what is meant by Preparedness? Many think that this means simply a big navy and a big army. But that is not correct. The statement was made recently, that though in the Washington Conference on Disarmament it was decided that England, America and Japan might build navies at a ratio of England five, America five, and Japan three; the ratio today was England five, Japan three and Uncle Sam two. So that no one can say that we are a big navy country. Then, in so far as the army is concerned, there are sixteen countries that have larger armies than we, even if we increase our army according to the present bill in Congress. So that no one can say that we are a big army country.

Up until the World War, when we were so unprepared that it took us a year to get into the fighting at all, after we had declared war, there were considered but two ways of being prepared. The first of these was by a large professional army. But this was so expensive that it was practically not in use anywhere. The other way was by universal military training, or as we commonly call it the "draft". By it every man when he comes of age must serve a certain length of time in the army or navy; then after a year or so he goes into the Reserve.

We had always had the volunteer system until the War Between the States. The South had the draft from the start practically but the North had it later. When the World War came England alone of the nations began with the volunteer system, but she soon had to change. When we got into it, we, on the advice of our allies, adopted the draft at the start.

After the World War it was decided that we would try to have a scheme by which we would not be wholly unprepared in case of another war. By our present plan we have three parts to our army. The first is a small Regular Army, 130,000 men. Next comes the National Guard, or State troops; in all, these bring the number up to about 330,000 men. Then there is the Reserve. This last is a group of civilians who are trained and when the authorities are satisfied, are given commissions as Reserve Officers, or else warrants as Non-commissioned Officers in the Reserve. The plan is that if a war should break out these reserves could train the men who would be immediately drafted. The Reserve Officers' Training Corps and the Citizens' Military Training Camps train men for this Reserve.

This means that our Regular Army could be rapidly expanded and officered within a few months after the outbreak of hostilities, to a strength that it took us nearly two years to reach during the World War. This scheme is purely for defense. It is the cheapest method of defense, both in time and money ever devised, and military men are for it. Many people, misled by the fallacy that disarmament would prevent war, are anxious to cripple this scheme by not giving enough money to keep it up in an efficient way. We should remember that the first reason for our Constitution is stated in its preamble as National Defense.

Washington said: "In time of peace prepare for war," and in this way many people believe that war can be avoided. For, as a greater than Washington said, "When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are at peace."

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT.

In the Church it is estimated we have 35,000 young people in our various organizations, and approximately the same number in the Girls' Friendly Society. What will the word "forward" mean to these groups? The leaders of these organizations are already thinking this out. Following the talk of the chairman of the commission, the Rt. Rev. Henry W. Hobson, D. D., to the Board of Directors of the Girls' Friendly Society, in April, the Board voted that the society should undertake, as its part in the Forward Movement, cooperation with the clergy and the Church schools "in a humble and sincere attempt to study and teach the principles of prayer to its girls".

There is perhaps no group which is more challenged by an appeal to go forward than the young people. The Diocese of Minnesota has chosen for the theme of its annual convention "Youth and the Forward Movement". The Diocese of Georgia and the Diocese of Southern Ohio have organized a Young People's Division and The Young Churchmen respectively, in which all the diocesan young people's organizations cooperate as a means of going forward in more effective service.

The Young Churchmen have made their first publicity poster a picture of young people going into a church and the words "Forward Young Churchmen". It is the theme and subject for rallies and speeches. They have written to the Commission on the Forward Movement recommending three things:

1. That young people be given some part in the Forward Movement which they can do as a group.

2. That the Forward Movement Commission encourage parish planning groups and committees to incorporate the youth of the parish in their plans.

3. That some program of leadership training be inaugurated for the group just over twenty-five years of age, in order to keep that group active after they are too old for young people's groups, and in order to provide the trained advisory leadership for youth groups, of which the young people themselves feel the need.

The young people of the Church want to go forward and they want to be used. Full of enthusiasm and unbound by cumbersome habits or traditions, they eagerly offer themselves for a Forward Movement.

It is estimated that there are about 36,000 vestrymen and wardens in the Church. What will a Forward Movement in religious experience, living and service mean to this group? Some one has pointed out that there are approximately 300,000 confirmed male members of the Protestant Episcopal Church, of which 25 per cent, or 75,000, may be said to be active. Including the wardens and vestrymen, the others serving on parish and diocesan committees, and another 1,000 Church school officers and lay readers, we may say there are about 40,000 "trust officers", 35,000 active and willing workers and 225,000 inactive, inarticulate and uninformed "nominal members". If the 40,000 "trust officers" more fully understood their duties, and the 35,000 "willing workers" were instructed how to be channels through which God's plans could work, the 225,000 "nominal members" could soon be brought into a closer relationship with Christ and the millions outside the Church aroused to a realization of its power and purpose.

The following from a mid-western city is a story of a real Forward Movement in a parish, made possible by the devotion of one member of the congregation.

Last September a young woman in a downtown parish in a mid-west city began to interest herself in the immediate neighborhood of her church. The parish had six hundred communicants from all parts of the city, but drew no one from the cheap rooming houses and poor apartments close by. As a result of the personal work of this one member in the neighborhood adjacent to the church, forty-one children and twenty-four adults have been brought to baptism, twenty-nine adults have been confirmed and seventy-four children have been added to the Church school. A guild of forty women has been meeting for five months. And the work has just begun. "Everywhere I go," she reports, "I find people hungry for the Church, its Truth and its Life."

What has been done in this one place can be done in many others. "Ye shall be my witnesses beginning at Jerusalem."

A Lutheran finds help in the Forward Movement literature: "A pamphlet entitled 'Discipleship' has been handed to me by a friend. I am most favorably impressed by its contents and so suitable for distribution during Lent especially. My church is as you note of the Lutheran denomination, but I have yet to find any Lenten literature more self-explanatory and awakening than the pamphlet issued by you."

The Archdeacon of a far western diocese writes: "We have been delighted with the way the clergy have ordered the post-Easter pamphlet. We used approximately 5,000 more than the Lenten one." The same diocese used the Discipleship topics during Lent in a diocesan radio mission.

From a woman communicant in a southern city comes this testimony of the usefulness of the Forward Movement Lenten pamphlet on Discipleship:

"During Lent the women of our parish met every Tuesday morning for Discipleship services based on the booklet of the Forward Movement. I led these devotionals, giving a ten-minute talk each week on the subject indicated."

The Diocese of Western Massachusetts made the Easter number of its diocesan paper, "The Pastoral Staff," a Forward Movement number. It contains history of the movement, personnel, lists of its accomplishments and aims, and three pages of the opinions of prominent members of the diocese concerning it. Bishop Davies writes as follows: "The activity now proposed to the Church might have been called the upward movement, for it is a lifting up of the heart to God. It might have been called the downward movement, for it is a strengthening of foundations and a deepening of faith and resolve. It might have been called the outward movement, for it is a reaching out to share the riches of God's goodness. It might have been called the inward movement, for it is taking our discipleship to heart. It might have been called anything but the backward movement, for it knows no retreat. It is called the Forward Movement, with all its inspiring suggestion of progressive development, increased usefulness, and advance in the Christian Life."

The following testimonies concerning the Forward Movement comes in from bishops of the Church:

One bishop writes: "Did I tell you that the clergy have asked for nearly 10,000 copies of the Easter-Whitsunday manual?"

A missionary bishop writes: "I like the new pamphlet, 'Disciples of the Living Christ,' better, I think, than the other. In the first place, it requires the use of the Bible and the Prayer Book and suggests other reading. And though a small gain, a very real one, it is of the right size to put in one's pocket or enclose in an envelope. I am urging all of our staff to remember the movement frequently in their intercessions. I know that it is often remembered at the altar in the offering of the Eucharistic prayer. You have my unreserved admiration for what you are doing and my faith in the whole enterprise. I do not know when anything has occurred to challenge our lethargy comparable with the post-Easter project."

The Missionary District of Brazil is feeling the impulse of the Forward Movement and is seeking to put it in operation in the Brazilian churches. It is basing its plans upon the Forward Movement in the Church in the United States and the Council has appointed a committee to plan for and develop this work.

The Commission on the Forward Movement has in preparation three courses for use in clergy conferences. These are entitled, I, "The Rector and Parish Management"; II, "The Spiritual Preparation of the Priest", and III, "The Place of Prayer and Meditation in the Life of the Clergy and Laity". As far as possible the commission is seeking to provide summer conferences for the clergy with leaders to conduct these courses.

What the contagion and enthusiasm of one person for the mission of the Church can accomplish has been strikingly illustrated by a missionary exhibit recently held in Boston. A young woman member of St. Paul's Cathedral attended the convention in Atlantic City and went to every missionary meeting. She came home filled with the desire to make her whole parish more missionary-minded, and the result was a most successful and interesting project in missionary education. An original missions exhibit was arranged based on the itemized apportionment which the Diocese of Massachusetts distributes to its parishes upon request. Ten cathedral organizations assumed the responsibility for preparing the exhibits for ten mission fields: The Men's Club chose Honolulu; Monday Auxiliary, Southern Mountains; Tuesday Evening Bible Class, Japan; Young People's Fellowship, Our Diocese; the Dean's Group, Work for Negroes.

In order to prepare for this, each organization made two months' intensive study of the field selected. An exhibit was held consisting of charts showing the growth of the Church in various fields, models of various mission buildings made locally from photographs, charts of photographs exhibiting various kinds of missionary service, articles straight from the mission fields, pictures of missionaries, etc. The exhibit opened with a large dinner attended by 250 people, followed by a missionary address and an entertainment featuring the music or the poetry or the art of a particular field. A Sioux Indian in full regalia delivered the invocation. Dean Sturges and the cathedral staff feel that the project has done a great deal to make the world-wide work of the Church a reality and a personal responsibility in the parish.

THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH HOME.

The Protestant Episcopal Church Home in the city of Richmond has had a continuous existence for sixty years. It was incorporated by the General Assembly on March 25, 1875.

Now on its sixtieth birthday the Board of Corporators has decided to publish a short history of the institution, showing what it has accomplished in the relief of distress and also to put before the public its present needs.

Beginnings.

Early in the year 1875, a dying woman bequeathed all that she had—a legacy of fifty dollars—to Mrs. Caroline Lathrop, of this city. The recipient of the legacy, surprised, yet gratified, determined "solemnly to consecrate the amount to God; and to make it the nucleus of a fund for the relief of indigent women."

A society for this object was organized, and plans for its operation, very humble in their scope, were being made, when Mr. F. W. Hanewinckel, of Richmond, placed at the disposal of the society a large and comfortable house on North Fourth Street. This property was deeded in fee simple to the Protestant Episcopal Church in the State of Virginia.

A Board of Corporators took charge of the financial management, with a Board of Lady Managers to operate the Home. Endowments and gifts were forthcoming sufficient for opening the Home, which for some years was largely maintained by donations of fuel and provisions sent in from all sections of the State.

The Home continued to operate on Fourth Street for twenty-three years, caring for forty-six ladies during that time.

Achievements.

In 1908, the original quarters having been outgrown, a new building was erected at No. 1621 Grove Avenue, a modern structure with capacity for thirty residents. With the fourteen ladies transferred and others admitted this was soon filled. By careful handling of its limited funds, the Board has been able to keep every room occupied and to care for the ladies in comfort as long as they live. Every expense but that of dress is defrayed and, in time of illness, nurses, medicine and medical attendance are provided.

The Protestant Episcopal Church Home, Richmond, Va.

During the sixty years of its existence one hundred and thirty-one ladies have been residents of the Home.

Needs.

However, in recent years, a shrinkage in income has caused uneasiness for the present as well as for the future operation of the Home, and makes it necessary to put before the people of Virginia the needs of this splendid institution. An increase in contributions, or in capital, as permanent endowment, which would provide sufficient income for the maintenance of the Home and the care of the old and feeble, is now a necessity.

"Surely," wrote Mrs. Whittle, the first President of the Board of Managers, "this is a better way to perpetuate the memory of those loved and lost than costly marble or memorial windows, which, though pleasant to the eye, lifts no burden from the weary and gives no home to the homeless."

Gifts.

The permanent endowment and all special funds are in the hands of the Board of Corporators.

Contributions to these funds may be sent to the Treasurer, Mr. W. Meade Addison, Mutual Building, Richmond, Va.

In making a will the following form of bequest may be used:

I, ... hereby give, devise, and bequeath to the Protestant Episcopal Church Home, Incorporated by the General Assembly of Virginia, March 25, 1875, and located in the City of Richmond, ..."

Board of Corporators: Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Rev. J. Y. Downman, Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., W. Meade Addison, Hugh Antrim, Henry C. Riely, O. J. Sands, Lewis C. Williams.

FEDERATION OF YOUNG PEOPLE TO MEET.

The National Commission of the Federation of Episcopal Young People is to meet in Chicago on May 21, 22 and 23. There will be one young people's representative from each of the eight provinces, together with the advisers of the commission, the Executive Secretary of the National Council's Department of Religious Education, and the Secretary for Young People's Work in that department.

UNION OF EDUCATION AND MISSIONS BOARDS TO BE CONSIDERED AT PRESBYTERIAN ASSEMBLY.

A project for uniting the Board of Christian Education and the Board of National Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. will be one of the major questions to be decided by the General Assembly of the Church opening at Cincinnati on May 23.

The two organizations have assets of $47,000,000 and annual expenditures of more than $5,500,000. Between them the two organizations carry on all the educational and evangelistic activities of the Presbyterian Church, except those in foreign lands.

The Board merger, which has been under consideration for several years, is expected to take effect in June, 1936, if adopted by the General Assembly. It is the culmination of a consolidation movement which has been in progress for many years. The consolidation would bring the number of boards and agencies in the Presbyterian Church down to three in contrast to the seventeen boards and agencies of the Church twenty years ago.

The Education Board controls $4,000,000 in buildings, securities and other assets and spends about $2,500,000 a year in its work. Of this yearly outlay about $1,500,000 is for manufacturing, selling and other publishing costs of millions of copies of books and weekly and monthly periodicals. The assets of the National Missions Board total about $43,000,000, and its annual expenditure is approximately $3,200,000.

Representatives from China, India, Japan, Persia, Mesopotamia and other foreign countries will be present at the General Assembly.—N. C. J. C. News Service.

THREE NEW BISHOPS IN ASIA THIS YEAR ALREADY.

I. For Dornakal, India.

Everyone who knows about the tremendously heavy work carried by Bishop Azariah of the Diocese of Dornakal in Hyderabad, India, will rejoice in the fact that he at last has an assistant bishop: the Rt. Rev. Anthony Blacker Elliott, consecrated in Calcutta on January 27. The new bishop, a graduate of the University of Dublin, was ordained by Bishop Charles Gore of Oxford, and went to India in 1913, where he has worked for twenty years with Bishop Azariah. As Bishop Azariah is a native of India, this seems to be the first intance in the Anglican Communion of a foreign assistant for a native diocesan. Visitations will be arranged so that each bishop visits each place in alternate years.

II. For Rangoon, Burmah.

The Rt. Rev. George Algernon West was consecrated at the same service in Calcutta on January 27. He is the new Bishop of Rangoon. He had previously been a misionary for thirteen years among the Karens of Burmah, where he worked out a particularly valuable method of evangelization. Amongst distinctions listed in his biography is the fact that in cricket at St. Bees he was the best bat the school produced in thirty-five years; he also holds a Serbian decoration for distinguished service with the Red Cross during the war.

The Diocese of Rangoon includes all Burmah with some islands in the Bay of Bengal, and is one of the fourteen dioceses of the Church of India, Burmah and Ceylon. This region, where Mr. Kipling's dawn comes up like thunder, is a large and difficult diocese with work among Burmese, Europeans, Eurasians, hill tribes and Chinese. The S. P. G. began work there in 1864.

III. For Hong Kong.

The Rt. Rev. Mok Shau-tsang of Canton was consecrated on St. Paul's Day, 1935, in the Cathedral at Hong Kong. Formerly archdeacon, he is now Bishop Hall's assistant in the Diocese of Hong Kong. He is the seventh living native Chinese bishops in the Anglican Communion. There are now nineteen bishops altogether in our branch of the Church in China and Hong Kong.

Hong Kong Diocese was organized in 1849, and, although six dioceses have since been set off from it, it is still a vast jurisdiction. It is of special interest to the American Church, because it is the nearest Chinese diocese to the Philippines; Chinese in Manila speak the southern China dialects, and Bishop Mosher has always the problem of staffing St. Stephen's and St. Peter's Chinese missions in Manila with clergy and lay workers who speak the Cantonese and Amoy diolects. — Hawaiian Church Chronicle.

VIRGINIA.

Jamestown Day.

The three hundred and twenty-eighth anniversary of the arrival of the first permanent English settlers at Jamestown Island will be celebrated on May 13, under the auspices of the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities, as is the custom of this Association, for forty years.

The usual commemorative services will be held in the Old Church at 2 P. M., with the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, Bishop of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, officiating, assisted by Dr. W. A. R. Goodwin, rector of Bruton Parish Church. The music will be furnished by a choir from William and Mary College, directed by George Small, Instructor of Music at William and Mary College. Loud speakers will be used for those outside.

The services this year will be in the form of a memorial to the late Mrs. J. Taylor Ellyson, President of the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities for the past thirty years; and also to the late Colonel Samuel H. Yonge, U. S. Engineer, who built the sea wall, and who was a member of the Jamestown Committee since its formation, a member of the Advisory Board and the author of "The Site of Old Jamestown."

Colonel Yonge died on the eleventh of March and Mrs. Ellyson on the twenty-third.

In the afternoon, special features will be given on the grounds, and as usual on "Jamestown Day", the gates will be opened free to visitors.

Seminary Notes.

An active program of work among college and school students carried on by Virginia Seminarians this winter and spring has manifested itself in numerous visits to institutions in states all along the eastern seaboard and in a series of visitors to the Seminary from different colleges.

Groups of students from the University of Pennsylvania, the University of Virginia, Williams College, Yale University, Baltimore, and New Bedford, Mass., have visited the Seminary as well as students from as many more different schools and institutions.

Seminarian have visited Virginia Polytechnic Institute University of North Carolina, University of Virginia, Amherst, Hamilton, and Union Colleges, and the University of West Virginia.

Young alumni have been largely instrumental in promoting interest in the ministry among undergraduates. Prof. A. C. Zabriskie is in charge of the student work.

Retreats.

The senior class retreat of members of the Seminary, which has become an annual custom, will be conducted this spring by the Rt. Rev. Benjamin Washburn, Bishop Coadjutor of Newark.

The graduating class, under leadership of Boyd R. Howarth, of Chatham, N. J., for three years its president, will leave May 8 for Orkney Springs, Va., for a three-day retreat. The Rt. Rev. Samuel B. Booth, Bishop of Vermont, conducted the retreat for last year's graduating class.

United Lenten Mite Box Offering.

All the Church schools of Richmond united in a beautiful service of presentation of their Lenten offerings in old Monumental Church Sunday afternoon, May 4. The choir was composed of members of the junior choirs of the various schools, rendering the simple music in a spirited manner. After the opening prayers and hymn, the Rev. Charles Smith, of St. Paul's Church, read a description of the work of the Church in foreign lands, during which reading there were simple tableaux presented to illustrate the educational, medical, teaching and preaching missions in foreign lands. The total offering from the city churches amounted to $5,271.

The exhibit of posters made by the various schools during Lent, illustrative of their studies of Japan and other foreign lands, was interesting, and after the services was visited by a number of people, many of whom expressed their astonishment at the work of the pupils.

Bishop Gribbin Speaks at New River Convocation.

The Rt. Rev. Robert E. Gribbin, D. D., Bishop of Western North Carolina, was the guest speaker on Tuesday evening, April 30, when the Convocation of New River was in session at St. Thomas' Church, Abingdon, Va., the Rev. John S. Wellford, rector. Bishop Gribbin's address was the feature of the missionary service and was built around a question and answer in the Offices of Instruction: "What is your bounden duty as a member of the Church?" "My bounden duty is to follow Christ, to worship God every Sunday in his Church; and to work and pray and give for the spread of His kingdom." The bishop discussed the various sections of the answer in a most interesting and helpful way, and his address will doubtless form the basis of some future sermons in this diocese.

The Convocation opened Monday evening with a sermon by the Rev. John A. Winslow, of Dante. Tuesday morning the Rev. Edward W. Hughes, of Bluefield, led the Quiet Hour, and out of a long and active ministry gave a meditation on some incidents illustrating the reality and power of religion and the Christian life.

The preacher of the Convocation sermon was the Rev. James A. Figg, of Christiansburg.

The Rev. Mr. Wellford was elected Dean of the Convocation for the coming year; the Rev. Mr. Figg, Secretary, and the Rev. Richard R. Beasley, of Bristol, Treasurer. The Convocation accepted an invitation from the Rev. Allen Person to meet next at Trinity Church, Rocky Mount.

United Presentation Services.

Children of the Church schools in South Florida assembled in the several districts on the First Sunday after Easter to present their Lenten mite box offering. This is the first time that the schools in this diocese had united for such presentation. For this service in St. Luke's Cathedral, Orlando, Dean Johnson was assisted by Rev. Thomas E. Dudney, of Winter Park, and Rev. Elred C. Simkins, of St. Cloud. Three groups of choir children, in their vestments, led the music.

PENNSYLVANIA

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop.

Annual Diocesan Convention.

The Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Chicago, and the Rt. Rev. Frederick B. Bartlett, D. D., Missionary Bishop of North Dakota and head of the National Department of Domestic Missions, were special speakers in connection with the one one hundred and fifty-first Annual Diocesan Convention of that Church, which met in this city last week.

The convention opened its session in the Church of the Holy Trinity on Tuesday morning with a celebration of the Holy Communion at 9 o'clock, at which the Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop of the Diocese and Presiding Officer of the convention, was the celebrant. Upwards of 700 clerical and lay deputies represented the nearly 280 parishes and missions comprising the diocese.

Both Bishop Stewart and Bishop Bartlett were the special guests of Bishop Taitt at a dinner in the Penn Athletic Club on Monday, at which the bishop was the host to the clerical and lay deputies, following which there was a diocesan mass meeting in the Church of the Holy Trinity. Bishop Stewart made a special address at this meeting. Bishop Taitt also delivered his annual message. The clerical and lay deputies attended the mass meeting in a body.

Bishop Bartlett made a special missionary address at the convention on Tuesday.

Among the important matters to come before the convention was the report of the Special Committee on Financial Safeguards appointed in pursuance of a resolution adopted at the convention of last year. Since its appointment this committee has given considerable time to the duties assigned its members under the terms of the resolution.

The special committee comprises Spencer Ervin, Vice-President of the Executive Council of the diocese, as chairman, and lay deputy from St. Asaph's Church, Bala. Clerical members of the committee are the Rev. Howard R. Weir, rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, and the Rev. L. Gouverneur Morris, rector of Calvary Church, Germantown. Other lay members are Henry R. Robins, deputy from Old Christ Church, Philadelphia, and Samuel F. Houston, deputy from St. Martin-in-the-Fields, Chestnut Hill.

The preamble to the resolution providing for the appointment of the committee stated that "some non-parochial institutions, societies, committees and other organizations operating in the Diocese of Pennsylvania under the auspices of this church, at present lack adequate protection for their securities and funds, and supervision of their investments".

The committee was directed "to bring about such protection and supervision by the voluntary action of the organizations at present concerned; to confer with the Committee on Canons on the advisability and practicability of regulating the matter by Canon; and to submit to the convention of 1935 a written report of its actions and recommendations". The committee work was limited to the non-parochial organizations designated in the preamble to the resolution and was not empowered to deal with parishes or with diocesan missions for worship, the latter being under the bishop and Department of Missions.

The convention's attention was also directed by the Department of Christian Social Service and Institutions report to bills now pending in the State Legislature in relation to social measures. The department is planning especially to enter an emphatic protest against the group of House and Senate bills which aim to license horse racing, permit betting and wagering on results of horse races, and the bills legalizing the setting up of lotteries to provide unemployment relief. In its report on horse racing and lotteries, which was forwarded to all the clerical and lay deputies, the department says: "The evils resulting to and reacting upon the individual citizen generally from such legalized gambling are entirely apparent. The degrading results of getting something for nothing; of becoming the victims of transactions in which mere chance and not intelligence is the determining factor; of the prostitution and commercialization of the faculty of hope to the sordid and selfish passion for undeserved and unearned gain; of a resulting disregard for the needs and rights of others; of a denial of the rules and requirements of good sportsmanship; on these and many other counts the legalizing of gambling and lotteries would constitute a grave and ethical peril to the individual citizen.

"Economically, we believe that the menace is or would be almost as serious. A gambling transaction does not represent new income or the production of real wealth. It is good money diverted to improper uses. It decreases general purchasing power. It results in placing a tax on those who are often least able to bear it. To quote a former Governor of California: 'Financial benefits to the State from a tax on the volume of money wagered at race tracks cannot balance the broken lives, the ruined homes, the welter of crime and sorrow that race track betting leaves in its wake.'"

RHODE ISLAND

Rt. Rev. J. DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop

A Tribute of Gratitude to Retiring Rector.

The Rev. Charles D. Burrows rector of St. Matthew's Church, Jamestown, for the past thirty-five years, has retired. His parish, which includes the whole Island of Jamestown, a suburb of Newport, gave him and his wife a reception before they sailed for England for a holiday. In an insular community like Jamestown, where parish work is quite as important in the sequestered winter as in the spacious holidays of lower Narragansett, such a ministry counts for more than the city-minded can easily understand. But St. Matthew's understands, inscribing its gift of a silver bowl "To the Rev. and Mrs. Burrows, rector of St. Matthew's Church, Jamestown, R. I. A tribute of gratitude and love for devoted and faithful service most graciously rendered, from the members of the parish."

Assistant in Many Capacities.

The Rev. Robert R. Carmichael completed ten years of service as assistant at Grace Church, Providence, immediately after Easter. His has been an unusual sort of assistanceship. No doubt he has taken care of all the usual detail that is assigned to the junior clergy in a large city parish. One would expect that of him, with all his good nature, energy and zest. But what makes him different is his job, however he got it, of assistant at large. One season of the year you place him as a diocesan leader of young people, and you find a place for him in your mind. There are curates and assistants of whatevername who have such a way with youth in their own parish that they are set over all of the bishop's youth. But when winter comes you notice a change coming over the Grace Church assistant. He becomes an expert in religious education for everybody in the diocese, young and old, and you find him running "schools," "seminars," "institutes" and all the rest that Bishop Bennett, Canon Bell, Dr. Evans, and the imported lecturers address. That's not all the assistant is up to by any means. No wonder they put him on the Council to assist the governing body of the diocese!

Noted Archaeologist Lectures on New Findings.

Sir Charles Marston lectured at Agnes Scott and Emory University, Atlanta, during his visit to Georgia in April.

He discussed the new light which has been thrown on the Old Testament by the recent excavations in the Holy Land, and especially did he mention the findings about Jericho, which bear out the Bible story of the fall of the wall of Jericho. He has found evidence that writing is an older art than the historians had thought. Some things pertaining to the Jewish history are dated 1400 B. C.

Sir Charles Marston, a noted archaeologists and director of the Welcome Expeditions in the Holy Land, is the author of many books, among the most recent being his "New Bible Evidence".

He and Lady Marston, the former Mrs. Mary Bonney, were in Atlanta on their bridal trip. They attended the Easter services at All Saints' Church, where Lady Marston is a member, and then visited Rome, Ga., where Lady Marston, the granddaughter of the famous surgeon, Dr. George M. Battey, was born. Sir Charles and his bride returned to New York and from there will sail for England and then the Holy Land.

Annual Pilgrimage to Appleton Church Home.

The Diocese of Atlanta will make its annual pilgrimage to the Appleton Church Home in Macon, Ga., Sunday, May 12, being Mother's Day.

This Orphanage, founded following the War Between the States, is a real home for the girls, and under the able direction of Miss Fanny B. Duval, Executive Secretary, they live happy lives. The various auxiliaries of the diocese sponsor these girls, thereby establishing a closer relationship between each of them.

A program has been arranged for the guests by the girls of the Home and a basket luncheon will be carried by all who attend.

The Executive Committee of the Home is Bishop H. J. Mikell, chairman of the Board of Trustees; Mrs. E. B. Harrold, Mrs. Carl Slocum, Rev. Mortimer W. Glover, General W. A. Harris, Rev. Randolph Claiborne and Mr. S. T. Coleman.

Y. P. S. L. Convention.

Young people will gather from the entire Diocese of Atlanta for the Annual Diocesan Y. P. S. L. Convention, May 17, 18 and 19, which will be held this year at the Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip, Atlanta. The newly organized leagues in Griffin, Macon, East Lake and Gainesville will be presented to Bishop H. J. Mikell for admission into the Diocesan League at the young people's service on Sunday, May 19, at 11 o'clock. Dean Raimundo de Ovies will preach a special sermon for the young people at this service.

Concerning: Action taken by the Department of Christian Social Service of the Diocese of Long Island, State of New York, at its regular meeting, April 9, 1935.

Action: Be it voted that—

The Department of Christian Social Service of the Diocese of Long Island approve in principle the Federal Government Bills now pending in Washington, D. C. (House of Representatives 5600), (Senate of the United States 600)—to amend sections 211, 245, and 311, of the Criminal Code as amended —to modify the existing laws concerning the dissemination of birth control information.

This action was taken after careful consideration during two regular meetings, at which people properly qualified to speak in favor of and against the bills were heard at length, and after unrestricted debate.

Tenth Anniversary.

The celebration of the tenth anniversary of the consecration of the Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, D. D., S. T. D., was the chief event in connection with the thirty-seventh Annual Council of the diocese, meeting in St. James' Church, South Bend, April 30 and May 1.

More than 200 persons attended a reception and banquet in honor of Bishop and Mrs. Gray, April 30. As an expression of esteem, James H. Haberly, treasurer of the diocese, presented Bishop Gray with a purse from the members of the diocese, which will be used for the purchase of a new automobile.

Clifford P. Morehouse, of Milwaukee, the principal speaker at the banquet, presented the Forward Movement. The deans of the three deaneries in the diocese, the Rev. Lawrence C. Ferguson, of South Bend; the Rev. Dr. Earl Ray Hart, of Michigan City, and the Rev. J. McNeal Wheatley, of Fort Wayne, and Mrs. Robert G. Happ, president of the diocesean Woman's Auxiliary, presented felicitations to the bishop. The Rt. Rev. Wyatt Brown, D. D., Litt. D., LL. D., Bishop of Harrisburg, related reminiscences of college days with Bishop Gray at the University of the South. The Rev. Theophilus Mazakopakas, pastor of St. Andrew's Greek Orthodox Church, South Bend, brought the greetings of his congregation.

Diocesan Council.

The Diocesan Council met May 1. There was a requiem for the Rt. Rev. John Hazen White, D. D., fourth Bishop of Indiana and first Bishop of Northern Indiana. At a Corporate Communion of the delegates, Bishop Brown, who was celebrating the fourth anniversary of his consecration the same day, was the celebrant. Bishop Gray celebrated the Councilar Eucharist.

In the convention sermon, Bishop Brown said: "Has your bishop kept faith? That is the great test. Our Church does not have great prestige and wealth, nor many worldly assets, but it does have what the world needs most today. That is the Faith. I know your bishop has kept faith with you. I knew him as a schoolmate, and you have known him as a bishop, but we both know him as a man."

Officers of the diocese were re-elected as follows: Secretary, the Rev. J. McNeal Wheatley; Treasurer, James H. Haberly; Treasurer of Missionary Funds, Duncan J. Campbell; Chancellor, Gilbert A. Elliott; Registrar, the Rev. E. R. Hart, LL. D.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held at the same time and place as the Council. The principal speaker was Mrs. Paul H. Barbour, of the Rosebud Mission, South Dakota, and a missionary in China for many years.

Dr. Keller Addresses Congregation in Chattanooga.

Making a characteristically strong appeal for Christianity in our Social Order, Dr. W. S. Keller, the director of the Cincinnati Social Service School for Candidates for the Ministry, addressed the Congregation of the Chapel of the Good Shepherd on Look Out Mountain.

"We take," Dr. Keller said, "twenty-one men from the Episcopal Seminaries and give them an opportunity to work in the social agencies in Cincinnati. This enables them to get a picture of a community organized for social work, which they could probably get in no other way. In the twelve years of the school's existence these men have made a real place for themselves in the social agencies of Cincinnati." Dr. Keller outlined the present situation in regard to social reform, and said that the Church must take a more active part in the development of the social conscience. Our School is not a theological school, said Dr. Keller, but it is the result of a desire on the part of certain men to apply their ideas concerning the being and nature of God, to the being and nature of man. "Religion, to some people, is the desire to save one's own soul, while to others it is the desire to express in their human relationships that salvation here and now."

The Church must insist upon some revision of its idea of sin. Sin is not merely the individual transgression of some external law, but it is more often, social inertia, the inveterate proclivity many of our people seem to possess of allowing "George to do it." "There is something wrong with a country where laws can be passed and enforced limiting the number of fish one can catch, from a stream, but which apparently cannot limit the number of dollars men can get at the cost of human life."

On Monday, April 29, Dr. Keller visited Sewanee, where he addressed the student body at noon-day chapel, and afternoon spoke to the students of the Seminary, and spent the afternoon in conferences with those students wishing to attend his school. He returned Monday night to his home in Cincinnati.

Services—Appointments—Repairs.

During Lent, noon-day services were held at Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville, with the following persons as preachers: the Very Rev. Richard L. McCready, D. D., Dean of the Cathedral; the Rev. William H. Langley, rector of St. Mark's, Louisville; the Rev. Frank H. Nelson, D. D., of Cincinnati; the Rev. John Gass, D. D., of Charleston, West Virginia; the Rev. Walter C. Whitaker, D. D., of Bowling Green, Kentucky; the Rev. Franklyn Cole Sherman, of Cleveland.

After the services each day lunches were served in the Cathedral House by the ladies of the Cathedral, assited during Passion Week by ladies from the other churches of the city. Proceeds of the lunches were presented to the Cathedral endowment fund at the early celebration on Easter as a memorial to Canon Hardy.

Centennial Dinner.

Nearly 1,500 churchmen and women assembled at the Hotel Sherman the evening of April 30 for what proved to be one of the outstanding events in history of the diocese. The occasion was the cenennial dinner of the Diocese of Chicago.

Messages from President Roosevelt, Governor Henry Horner and Mayor Edward J. Kelly were among the features on the program. In his message, President Roosevelt said:

"I take this opportunity of expressing to Episcopalians throughout Illinois my heartiest congratulations and best wishes upon this centennial occasion. The Church has in the past and must continue to go hand in hand with the progress of the State. Where there are strong churches there will be strong citizens and strong government. In upbuilding our churches we are upbuilding one of the important factors in our American life. May the next century bring to the Church in Illinois renewed life, intensified vigor and withal a larger service in her field of labor."

The Rt. Rev. John Chanler White, Bishop of Springfield, represented that diocese on the occasion, and the Rev. William L. Essex, pastor of St. Paul's Church, Peoria, represented the birthplace of the diocese.

"Go out and strike a blow for God and Church and country," declared Fr. Essex in his address. "There are no greater problems today than in the early days when Philander Chase came to Illinois. Our problems, in fact, are light compared with those faced and met by the men who established the Church in the State."

Bishop George Craig Stewart, principal speaker at the function, threw out a definite challenge to the diocese to "lighten the ship" by "shifting the cargo of debt", speaking of the Centenary Fund campaign which started on May 1. Now is the time to attack, charged he

BEAUTY.

God, give me speech, in mercy touch my lips,
I cannot bear Thy Beauty and be still,
Watching the red-gold majesty that tips
The crest of yonder hill,
And out to sea smites on the sails of ships
That flame like drifting stars across the deep,
Calling their silver comrades from the sky,
As long and ever longer shadows creep,
To sing their lullaby
And hush the tired eyes of earth to sleep.

Thy radiancy of glory strikes me dumb,
Yet cries within my soul for power to raise
Such miracles of music as would sum
Thy splendour in a phrase,
Storing it safe for all the years to come.

Aeternitatis Candidatus.

The ancient Romans were a conquering race. Their language itself, which many of our young people do not learn any more, to their cultural and mental hurt, carries with it something of their imperial dignity. An old teacher used to say to his students as, with glowing cheeks and shining eyes, he read to them a passage of prose or poetry from the day's lesson—"Boys, can't you hear the tramp, tramp of the Roman legions going forth to conquest in the solid compactness of those lines!" And we thought we could. The English Essayist DeQuincey somewhere calls attention to the solemn and mighty significance in the mere resonance of the phrase—Senatus populusque Romanus—"the Senate and the Roman people." I have always been profoundly stirred when, as I have imagined it, Paul said to the Roman soldier about to apply the lash to his back—"Civis Romanus sum"—"I am a Roman citizen!" The lash did not fall, and I have felt that it was the Latin itself that saved Paul's back on that momentous occasion. These Latin phrases have a power all their own—a power that seems to vanish when they are turned into our less stately, more homely Saxon speech.

Another one of these phrases caught my attention just recently, and the effect was to stir me again and to remind me once more of the glory that was Rome even in the genius of its speech. The president of a Catholic College was addressing his faculty, and he told them this among other things: "The student entrusted to our care is not only a citizen and a man, not merely a candidate for academic honors, for social prizes and civic rewards; he is as Tertullian masterfully says, 'aeternitatis candidatus', a candidate for eternity."

"Aeternitatis candidatus," a candidate for eternity—is not this Catholic educator daring to place the emphasis where some of it ought to be placed in the matter of education? At least he is placing it where it has not been placed in much of our recent educational thinking. Our schemes, systems, methods, courses of study are arranged to prepare the young student for life here and now as a social, economic, and political being. He is being trained to make a living as an industrial unit, to adjust himself cooperatively in the social order, and to become an intelligent citizen. No education is quite complete that forgets these purposes in getting youth ready for a satisfactory life. As fundamentally important as these purposes are, however, they are not the whole matter in the aims of education—perhaps not even the most important. After a man has been prepared to make a living, to be an intelligent member of society, and to be able to meet his political duties in a reasonable way, there is yet something behind all of this, and, that is, the kind of man he is. For after all, what he does with his education, how he applies it to the various relations of life, depends upon the sum total of the motives and sentiments that govern and direct his activities. And these represent the quality of his personality, the kind of man he is in the deep citadel of his nature.

The major question, then, is—Can this personality be enriched, developed, trained? Is it of very special worth because there may be attributed to it qualities that give value and dignity to human nature beyond those qualities belonging to any other phase of it? The Christian religion affirms that it does possess such qualities, and it is quite refreshing in the midst of much of our present day chatter about education, to hear this Catholic educator calmly call us back to the Christian view with Tertullian's majestic phrase—"Aeternitatis candidatus," a candidate for eternity. That is what we have in hand when we accept the boy or girl into school and college to give him, as we say, his chance to be adequately prepared for life—indeed, for the life that knows no end.

It may be well to let this educator speak a little further—"If we are to prepare the student for his immortal and glorious destiny, we must teach him what life is and what he must do with it; intellect trained under the unflickering beacon light of our Catholic faith; intellect and will grandly applied to life; character moulded to Christlike perfection under the purifying influences of Catholic morality." A courageous statement like this, expressing the Catholic view of human personality and the aim of education, ought to serve as a tonic to the wabbling uncertainties of Protestant conceptions of Christian Education. As a matter of fact, do we really think of "preparing a student for his glorious and immortal destiny" so much as for some inglorious, mortal self-supporting job? Have we an "unflickering beacon-light of faith", to offer him while he is in the midst of a process of "moulding his character to a Christlike perfection" under the influences of a definitely wrought-out system of Christian morality? While we are trying to train him for a smoothly adaptable social efficiency, have we felt that the major duty is "to teach him what life is and what he must do with it?"

And so with Tertullian's great phrase ringing in our minds, we come to the conception that the real content of education depends upon the understanding we have of human personality. If it is to be trained just for the day, for acquiring the creature comforts of life, for the "full barns" and "soul take thine ease," then the Christian Church has greatly missed its Founder's estimate of the potential worth of personality. Certainly, to Him each human being was a "candidate for eternity," and they who think with His mind about education must hold the same view.—Dr. H. N. Snyder, in Southern Christian Advocate.

VICTORY.

We came not in with proud,
Firm martial footsteps in a measured tread,
Slow pacing to the crash of music loud;
No gorgeous trophies went before, no crowd
Of captives followed us with drooping head.
No shining laurel sceptred us, nor crowned,
Nor with its leaf our glittering lances bound;
This looks not like a Triumph, then they said.
With darkened faces in the battle flame,
With banners faded from their early pride,
Through wind and sun and showers of bleaching rain,
Yet red in all our garments doubly dyed,
With many a wound upon us, many a stain,
We came with steps that faltered—yet we came!

Not Endured, But Done!

It is not Thy will be endured, but Thy will be done, and give me grace to do it. Not with the bowed head of the mourner, or the cry of defeat of the broken-hearted, but as a body of keen and ardent young knights, with their heads and chins well up, riding out on the roadway of life to express the will of their King in all the common intercourses and relationships of life. That is what it means. It is active, not passive. Not may it be endured, but may it be done. And to sit down helplessly before the sins and sorrows, and injustices and the cruelties of life, and bleat out these are the will of God, and do nothing, seems to me to be blasphemy. Christ was always fighting against these things. God's will is that the world should be saved from all these things. God's will is His Kingdom should be here, a Kingdom where love, fellowship, and peace should be no longer catch-words but facts, and where all men, women and children should have a fair chance of enjoying His free gifts. That is God's plan, and in that plan you and I have our part to play. But if through slackness or indifference, through fear or cowardice we do not play our part, then we are doing our best to wreck the plan, and are delaying the victory and work of Christ.—Rev. W. M. Selwyn, in Church of England Newspaper.

Thanksgiving and Consecration.

The world is full of lepers who have been healed and who have straight-way forgotten the Great Physician. As Father Faber says: "Our own interests drive us obviously to prayer, but it is love alone which leads to thanksgiving. There is little enough of prayer, but there is still less of thanksgiving. And yet there is no redeemed soul that cannot echo the Psalmist's words, 'O that men would praise the Lord for His goodness and for His wonderful works to the children of men.' 'O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is gracious and His mercy endureth for ever'."

When we consider the long list of mercies which we have received through no merit of our own, we must make a part of our worship the prayer: "O Lord God, what shall I render to Thy Divine Majesty for all the benefits Thou hast done unto Thy servant?" It is well that frequently we should recite in the silence of our time of communion with God the blessings that we have received at His hands, since we left our mother's knee. He has been our hope from our youth. He has saved us from temporal and spiritual danger. And each one can recite the list of these deliverances, for which his gratitude must be forthcoming. There are special spiritual mercies which have been granted to us, for which our thanksgiving and our consecration are the least return that we can make. There are special times when such thanskgiving should characterize our prayers. Samuel Johnson, on his birthday every year, recognized the claims on him of the Divine Love, and prayed that "I may use Thy bounties according to Thy Will, through Jesus Christ our Lord." John Wesley made these anniversaries also the occasion of special thanksgiving. We do well to have days when we say to ourselves, "I will remember the years of the Right Hand of the Most High."

The conclusion of our prayer must ever be an act of consecration. When we think of the infinite and innumerable mercies of God, we must be led to say with Fenelon: "I adore all Thy purposes without knowing them. I am silent. I offer myself in sacrifice. I give myself to Thee. I would have no other desire than to accomplish Thy will." Before we return to the work of our daily lives, let us say with Augustine: "Let my soul take refuge from the crowding turmoil of worldly thoughts beneath the shadow of Thy Wing; let my heart, this sea of restless waves, find peace in Thee." Let us go forth to the battle of life, as Sir Jacob Astley went, before the battle of Edgehill, when he said: "O Lord, Thou knowest how busy I must be this day. If I forget Thee, do not Thou forget me."—The Secret of the Saints.

Urgent Invitations and Open Doors.

It is a real appeal. At the annual meeting of the National Christian Council of Japan, Mr. Yammasu, representing the minister of education, declared, "The government is helpless when it comes to changing the spirit and psychology of the people. You religionists should not want and take the lead from the government but lead out of your own faith and convictions." Mr. Kikuzawa, head of the bureau of religion in the department of education, said: "We are passing through a time of suffering and hardship, and at such a time the human heart turns to religion for comfort and guidance. There can be no doubt that the nation is once more turning its heart toward religion." The Japanese Christians in their council voted, "Mission organizations and missionaries should act from an irresistible sense of mission and not wait for an invitation. The missionary attitude of American Christians motivated by an impelling inner urge should be positive and aggressive. We welcome assistance from abroad which is motivated by a positive urge. We need to be more forthright in our presentation of the essential differences between Christianity and Japanism."

Consider the present oportunity in China. It may be that increasing limitations will fall upon the secondary forms of missionary work, but nothing hinders missions from going about their main business. A recent editorial in "The Chinese Recorder" declares, "The social changes going on in China may gradually limit the scope of, or even supplant, all Christian agencies except that of the Church." A recent visitor with unsurpassed opportunities for observation declares, "I find the Chinese students sobered, heart-hungry and adrift, not knowing which way to turn. The colleges are practically all open and asking for meetings beyond our strength. China is undoubtedly the most wide-open field for evangelism in the whole world at the present time."

Consider the open door in India. "There is no real competitor with Jesus Christ in the mind of educated India. Our greatest obstacle for the future will not be any such competition, but the old absorbing spirit of Hinduism which can in appearance accept Jesus while accepting at the same time something which is a denial of all for which He stands. The Bhagavadgita is supposed to hold a similar place in the hearts of all Hindus to that of St. John's Gospel in the hearts of Christians. But Mr. Hilary Wilson found casually in conversation that of the twelve students residing in his hotel, not one had read it." (From G. E. Phillips' Report to the Directors of the London Missionary Society.)

"The time has come," some recent critics of missions have said, "to set the educational and other aspects of missionary work free from organized responsibility to the work of conscientious and direct evangelism." On the contrary the time has come when every agency, the formal preaching of ordained men, the everyday conversation of Christians, the ministry of the hospital, the discipline and enlightenment of the school, and every human contact, must be made subject more fully than ever before to the one supreme aim of making Jesus Christ and His Gospel, His Grace and Power, the meaning of His life and His death and His resurrection, known to men and women, boys and girls, everywhere, in every land, and without delay.—Dr. Robert E. Speer, in Presbyterian Banner.

Chirst Our Example.

A gentleman had a lovely Chinese plaque with curious raised figures upon it. One day it fell from the wall on which it was hung, and was cracked right across the middle. Soon after, the gentleman sent to China for six more of these valuable plates, and to ensure an exact match, sent his broken plate as a copy. To his astonishment, when six months later he received the six plates, and his injured one, he found the Chinese had so faithfully followed his copy, that each new one had a crack right across it! If we imitate even the best of men we are apt to copy their imperfections, but if we follow Jesus, and take Him as our example, we are sure of a perfect pattern.—Sunday at Home.

FOR THE CHILDREN

For the Southern Churchman.

TODAY IS SUNDAY.

Monica Williams.

Today is Sunday and I'm glad
To come to our Church School,
To try to learn to follow God
In keeping every rule.

Our first rule is to be real quiet
While prayers are being said,
For when we pray we talk with God,
We kneel and bow our head.

And then we must sing every song,
For songs are full of joy,
And God who makes the birds to sing,
Helps every girl and boy.

Then when our teacher says to us
Our lessons now we'll say,
We'll quietly go to classes
And work and work away.

And then when we go home again,
We will be glad to say,
That we have really tried in school
To learn of God today.

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter XVIII.

It's Good to be Free!

M. L. G.

The week of David's exile from school was almost over. In spite of Father's support and the kindness of all at home, David felt very greatly the disgrace of it. When he went out with his father he did not look up to greet friends. It was painful to ride through the village during school hours. He could not ask that people should wait while he explained, and he did not feel sure they would believe him. Better ust not talk, better not be seen if he could help it. Father, seeing his confusion, stopped taking him when he must drive through the village during school hours.

On Thursday afternoon David, in his favorite place, the hay-loft, heard Winnie calling him.

"David! Here's Hamilton come to see you!"

"He's in the barn? Say, I'll just go on there," he heard Hamilton's voice. "Hey, David! Up in the loft?"

"Hello, Ham, come on up!" he called back, though he wished he might not have to see even Hamilton, who had also been suspended.

The other boy was soon beside him on the hay.

"What doing? Gracious, not old Caesar? Why I, for one, have enjoyed a little holiday from all Gaul."

"I'm not so good on Latin, you know, Ham. So I've been reviewing. I've got almost to where we had to break off. I had Treasure Island along, too, you see.

"Say, David," Hamilton said suddenly, in a lowered voice, "You're not in the same fix as the others of us."

David flushed uncomfortably.

"I told Dr. Blackburn I hadn't used the book, Ham. Father's talked to him, too. But I can't explain how it came to be there—anyhow, the week's 'most over, no use to bother now."

"If you hadn't been caught reading off that paper just a few days before—"

"I didn't read off that paper, Ham!" David cried angrily. "I know Mr. Price was never satisfied about that, but I didn't, and if you say I did I'll fight you! Not here—" David added, remembering that Ham was his guest, "but in the road or somewhere."

"Well gracious, I'm not going to get into a scrap over it—don't care that much. What I wanted to say, Dave—I know whose book was in your desk."

"Why didn't you say, then, when Dr. Blackburn had us all in his office?" David was still angry.

"Well, you see, at first we were all sort of bluffing, nobody was giving anything away. And it was over so quick—and the other boys didn't say anything—"

"Well, Ham, let's change the subject," David said, trying to speak gently.

"No, Dave, honest, I made up my mind to ask you if you'd like me to tell old Blacky. It was Pat, you know—did you know?"

"I remembered seeing you all together, and I figured it was Pat. But no, I don't want you to tell. Pat knows himself, let him tell."

"He was talking to me this morning, Dave. He's all worked up about it. But he's afraid he'll be expelled, not confessing right off. His folks are so set on his getting ahead—his father never got beyond the sixth grade, and his mother had less schooling than that. Honest, I felt sorry, when he was teling me."

"Well, let's just let it go. I reckon he won't use the book again. I don't know what else to say, Ham!" David ended miserably.

"Pat said he stuck it in your desk one day when Mr. Price was coming down the hall. His desk is at the back you know, he hadn't time to get to it. He said he didn't even remember which desk he'd put it in. Didn't mean to get you in a fix—"

"Well, we've just one more day to be out. Don't bother, Ham."

"I can't help bothering. Bill and Jim are sort of worried, too. But if you say let it go, I'll let it go."

They talked of other things, and climbed down together when they heard Uncle Danger bring the carriage around to the barn.

"That means Father's home—"

"Well, say, Dave, I'll cut around this way, no need to let him know I've been here."

But just then Father appeared on the back porch.

"Hello there, David, I was coming to find you. Why, Ham, come in, come in!"

"No, sir, thank you, sir, I got to be going, honest—"

"If you could spare a few minutes, Ham, I'd really like to speak to you and David together. Or—I'll tell you! David, get Uncle Danger to bring Frank 'round again; we'll drive Ham home, and talk on the way."

The early spring evening was very sweet as they drove along the pine-woods. David heard the frogs singing, watched the first stars come out. Father had just put a hand on his shoulder with a quiet, "It has all been told me, David. All right, son!" And he had felt the last wisp of misunderstanding clear away.

Father told them of a visit he had paid to the Donovans. He had found that they had not been coming to church in his absence, being so new to the neighborhood, and finding it hard to become acquainted; "Mother's hand needed there!" Pat had come in during the visit, and the talk had turned to school matters. Father did not tell them what was said, but ended:

"Pat told me the whole story, boys. He's had a rough time of it. He came back as far as Dr. Blackburn's house with me, and the three of us talked it over. Dr. Blackburn said for you to come back tomorrow, David."

"Wish I could!" Ham cried suddenly.

"Well, old fellow, the road's clear before you," Father said, "One more day out, and then—be through with all concealments, all dishonesties. Turn in your own work, and have done with fear and watchfulness. It's good to be free!"

"It would be—I know." They had stopped before Ham's gate on the village street.

"You'll try it, son?" Ham found his hand warmly grasped.

"Yes, sir, honest. And thank you!"

"Goodnight, Ham. My love to your folks."

"Father," said David, as they turned back, "I wish you could tell Jim and Bill what you told Ham. Ham said they were bothered, and Dr. Blackburn certainly did say some—some heavy things when he suspended us."

Father's hearty laugh rang out. "I will, David. I'll have an eye open for a chance. But for you, Dr. Blackburn has unsaid all the heavy things. He said he wants to tell you so, before the school in assembly hall tomorrow."

"What, Father! Before the girls and everything—oh! I couldn't let him—I just can't go if he wants to do that—can't you speak to him, Father?"

"I did, son! You won't have to face that, only a few minutes in his office. And besides that, old fellow, you must let your father say he's proud of his boy, and couldn't have wished his conduct to have been different all through this hard week!"

Pancho Coyote's Race.

William Allen Ward.

Once long, long ago, there lived far out on the crimson cliffs and painted wastelands of Western Texas a very young coyote who thought that he was very smart, indeed. The little prairie wolf's father and mother had named him Pancho, for that is the nickname the Mexican sheep herders often give their sons, not that the coyote was a Mexican boy, but simply because his father and his mother liked to copy the ways of men. Naturally, Mr. and Mrs. Coyote did not know Pancho was short for Francisco, and that translated into English, the shorter word meant Frank and the longer Francis.

One day Pancho Coyote was out on the bald prairie that stretched along the lazy Concho toward the captrock of the Staked Plains of Texas. The wind was blowing right out of the northwest and it was filled with sand. Again the sandstorm monster was crawling on its stomach across the arid wastelands, feeding of sand and gravel. The sun was shining in a sickly manner through sand-filled skies—a sun that looked like a big piece of cheese swung way up in the sky. The arroyo was a big base horn through which the wind blew its melancholy dirge, for it was very dry and in the gulch a long-horn was dying as the drought took its toll. Mile high buzzards were circling, watching—ever watching the arroyo waiting with the eyes of ghouls for death to call and the long-horn to pass on.

But the coyote was not interested in death or brooding winds. He was young, full of life and very smart, indeed, so he imagined. Across the plain rolled a huge tumbleweed—one of a vast parade of tumbleweeds, racing across the plains—desert tumbleweeds are vagabonds that steal rides from the sandstorm.

"I'll outrun that old grandpa," Pancho Coyote said to himself. "Why, that tumbleweed last summer was green and lovely, but now it's dead and doesn't know it. That tumbleweed just rolls over and over—it can't run—I'll beat it a mile, or maybe two."

In an instant the fleet-footed coyote was racing beside the tumbleweed. Pancho laughed with glee as he passed the weed and headed toward the painted bluff of the canyon wall. But his laugh was short, for, as he began to tire, he looked back and the tumbleweed still continued coming—ever coming, not slowing down a bit.

"Tumbleweed, don't you ever get tired?" Pancho Coyote said as he sat down to rest.

The tumbleweed did not say a word. But, while the coyote rested, the weed scurried past, racing in front of the sandstorm. Pancho Coyote soon started running again, but it did not do him any good. The grizzled old tumbleweed never tired.

As twilight, like a priestess, walked across the foothills lighting stars for candles before the altar of night, the coyote walked very slowly to the home of his wise old parents in the gulch. Pancho was very weary, indeed.

After knawing a bone for a while, Pancho asked: "Father, why can't I outrun a tumbleweed? I can run faster, but I can't keep going as long—"

Pancho stopped talking as his wise old father laughed and said: "Son, when I was young I also wasted my time trying to outrun tumbleweeds—but that was before I learned that I could never outrun the wind. You see, Pancho, the wind belows the tumbleweed along, and you can't outrun the wind."

That night Pancho Coyote went to bed a much wiser little coyote.

Playing "Seventy Years Ago".

Jane and Freddie didn't know what they were going to do all evening. The electricity had gone off, and the only light they had was from the blazing fire in the fireplace.

"What shall we do?" Jane asked her grandmother.

"I think we can find some candles," grandmother said.

"But we can't read, nor draw pictures, nor play games without good light," complained Jane.

"We can't even listen to the radio," said Freddie.

"Children," grandmother said slowly, rocking back and forth in her chair by the fireplace, "I rather like being without electric lights for a while."

"You do?" Jane asked, surprised.

"How funny!" said Freddie.

"Yes, I like it," grandmother explained. "It makes me think of a long time ago when I was a little girl living on a farm. We didn't have any electric lights in those days, but we had a big fireplace like this one of yours, and we had candles."

"I'm glad I didn't live in those days," Freddie remarked.

"Oh, we had a good time," grandmother continued, as she threw a log on the fire. "How would you like to pretend this was seventy years ago, and that we were living on a farm many miles from town?"

"That might be fun," said Jane.

"I'll play the game, too," added Freddie, not wishing to miss any chance for fun.

"You children go out into the kitchen and stay about ten minutes," grandmother said. "You must remember to knock when you come back. This is 1864, and you two are going to call on your grandmother, who lives in the hills."

Jane and Freddie waited in the kitchen about ten minutes, and then ran around the house to the porch which opened off the living room.

"This is going to be fun," said Jane.

"Oh, look in the window!" said Freddie. "Grandmother has two big candles on the table."

"And tin candlesticks," said Jane. "Those are the candles she keeps in that big box in the attic."

Freddie knocked, and grandmother opened the door. She was wearing a shawl pinned at her neck with a silver pin shaped like a bow.

"Good evening," she said. "Did you drive Dobbins over? He's a fine horse. I hope you put on his blanket. It's a little chilly tonight."

Jane and Freddie both laughed and followed grandmother into the house.

"What nice big candles you have, grandmother," Jane said.

"I made them myself," grandmother replied.

"I never heard of making candles," Freddie said.

"You use kerosene lamps, don't you?" asked grandmother, smiling. "Some folks do nowadays. But I like candles better. You children don't carry a lamp upstairs when you go to bed, do you?"

"Oh, no," Jane answered with a laugh.

"Lamps aren't safe for children," grandmother explained. "Your mother gives each of you a little candle to carry upstairs, doesn't she?"

"Yes, every night," Freddie explained, and Jane was amused at the thought of going upstairs with a little candle in her hand.

"Some folks buy candles," said grandmother. "Your mother buys hers, but I like to make mine. It's cheaper."

"Tell us how to make candles," Jane begged.

"Then sit down by the fire on that rag rug. I made that rug five years ago, but it's still good."

Grandmother sat in her rocking chair by the fire, and poked the logs to make them burn more brightly. Jane and Freddie sat at her feet, and thought it was fun to play they were sitting on an old-fashioned rag rug. They loved to hear grandmother tell of the strange things she did seventy years ago.

"I made the candles just last week," grandmother said, watching the red flames curl around the logs. "I made enough to last all winter, I think. I had saved my tallow for a long time."

"What's tallow?" asked Freddie.

"It's hard fat. I put a big kettle of tallow on the stove to melt. Then I set out my candle-molds. Have you ever seen candle-molds?"

"No," said Jane and Freddie.

"Then just imagine two long, narrow pans with their bottoms together. We'll move them apart the length of the candles. In fact, our pans look as though they were held apart by twelve tin candles, six in a row. The tin candles are not real candles, of course. They are just the hollow molds that the candles will be made in. Our top pan has holes in it, and each hole is the mouth of a candle-shaped mold. At the very bottom of each mold is a tiny hole. You'll find out what it is for later."

"My molds are made of tin, and hold twelve candles. Some folks use iron molds. Some molds hold only six candles.

"While the tallow was melting I cut wicks. Each wick I cut a little longer than the candle was to be. Then I laid a stick across each row of holes and tied the ends of the wicks to the sticks. Each wick fell into a mold. How do you think I kept the wicks nice and straight?"

"I think you worked the wicks up through the holes in the bottom," Freddie suggested.

"And then tied a knot so they couldn't slip back," Jane added.

"You are almost right," said grandmother. "Some folks tied knots in their wicks, but I tied a little nail in mine. The weight of the nail kept the wicks straight."

"That must have been a lot of work," said Jane.

"I don't mind work," grandmother said. "We left our big kettle of tallow on the stove melting, didn't we? The molds were all ready, and as soon as the tallow had melted I poured it into the molds. Then I set the candles away, and that was all for the first day.

"The next morning I set the molds into hot water for a second or two, and then the candles would drop out. I'm always proud of my candles. I mean I'm almost always proud of them."

"Aren't they always good?" Jane asked.

"Not always," grandmother said. "Once I set them in too cold a place to harden, and they all cracked."

"I wish we could make candles," Freddie said.

"I'm afraid we can't tonight, but I know something we can make. Something we often make at night."

"What?" asked Freddie.

"Pop-corn balls."

"How can we make pop-corn without any electricity to heat the stove?" Jane asked.

"I make it in the fireplace," said grandmother. "I have an iron pan with a heavy lid that's just right for a popper. We'll make syrup, too, and we'll have the best pop-corn balls we've had in a long time."

Grandmother arose and started into the kitchen to look for her old iron pan. The children followed.

Just then a bright light appeared in the living room.

"Oh, dear," Freddie said, "the electricity is on again. Now we can't have any more fun."

Grandmother only laughed.

"Of course we'll have our fun," she said. "We'll just turn off that light. This is still 1864, and we have no need of electric lights.

The children and grandmother popped their corn in the old iron pan. There were lots of old maids, but the corn that did pop was very good. They made it into balls that were sticky and hard to eat. But that didn't seem to matter either, for those pop-corn balls tasted just fine.

When bedtime came grandmother gave Jane and Freddie candles to undress by.

"I'm glad the electricity went off," Jane said. "We've had lots of fun playing seventy years ago."

And Freddie agreed with his sister.

GROWING SMILES.

A smile is quite a funny thing;
It wrinkles up your face;
And when it's gone you never find
Its secret hiding place.

But far more wonderful it is
To see what smiles can do;
You smile at one, he smiles at you,
And so one smile makes two.

He smiled on someone, since you smiled,
And then that one smiles back,
And that one smiles, until, in truth,
You keep in smiling track.

And since a smile can do great good
By cheering hearts of care,
Let's smile and smile and not forget
That smiles go everywhere.

DEATHS

MARGARET WARD WEDDELL.

Entered into life eternal, March 29, 1935, at Richmond, Va., MARGARET WARD WEDDELL, second child and eldest daughter of the late Penelope Margaret Wright and Alexander W. Weddell, D. D., rector of St. John's Church, Richmond, Va.; beloved sister of Elisabeth Wright Weddell, Alexander W. Weddell, and William Sparrow Weddell.

A TRIBUTE.

Entered into eternal life on Friday morning, March 29, 1935, MARGARET WARD WEDDELL, second child of Reverend Alexander W. Weddell and Penelope Margaret (Wright) Weddell. A happy, sunny disposition, always ready to help those who needed help, a reverence for age, devotion to her family, loyalty to her friends, and above all an abiding faith, these are a few of the many characteristics which endeared her to a large circle of friends. She loved the beauty of this world, the trees and birds especially. The gentle, tender side of her nature was strongly brought out in her love for her "Little Helpers", and each little child was to her a personal friend. Reared from her earliest years in an atmosphere of love of the Church, she carried this early training with her all her life. Saint Paul's Church and its work were very near to her heart. The Woman's Auxiliary of Saint Paul's Church feels keenly her loss, and shall ever cherish with affection her association with this organization.

"Father, in Thy gracious keeping
Leave we now Thy servant sleeping."

SALLY ARCHER ANDERSON.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolutions passed at a called meeting of the Board of the Colonial Dames of America in the State of Virginia.

The joy of discipleship, so coveted by all in the daily routine of life, was vouchsafed to MARGARET WARD WEDDELL in large measure heaped up and running over. To her the joy of giving was greater than that of receiving, and her loyalty to and interest in all endeavors made her assistance invaluable to those who worked with her.

She brought to this Board all of these qualities, and in addition a clear perception of what it means to be a Dame and what is necessary in choosing our Associates in the organization. The term "gentlewoman" she appreciated in its fullest sense and her wise and intelligent thought given to the work of this Society made her an invaluable member and one whose loss we deeply deplore.

She had a spirit of youthfulness which endeared her to all and she carried always into any work which she undertook an enthusiasm which will remain an inspiration to each one of us. This enthusiasm was strikingly shown in her love of the beautiful, especially in her great appreciation of Nature, and in her devotion to children.

To her bereaved family we extend our loving sympathy and move that these Resolutions be spread upon our Minutes and a copy sent to her sister.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

bishop; there can be no standing still or retreat.

The Rev. Alfred Newbery, rector, Church of Atonement, represented the clergy of the diocese in a concise presentation of the Centenary plan and its advisability at this time.

At the conclusion of the meeting, Bishop Stewart announced the first report on the Centenary drive. St. Mark's Church, Glen Ellyn, three days previous had launched its campaign, and at the first meeting nearly half of the $15,000 sought was in sight. The report was received with great applause.

Mr. Austin J. Lindstrom, of St. Luke's pro-Cathedral, Evanston, was named president of The Church Club of Chicago, sponsor of the centennial dinner, as part of the program. He succeeds Mr. John D. Allen, for six years the president of the club. Mr. Allen becomes chairman of the board.

Laymen's Missionary Movement Congress.

With representatievs from every major missionary field in the world in attendance, the National Congress of young men sponsored by the Laymen's Missionary Movement opened at the Stevens Hotel here Friday, May 3. Bishop Stewart was among the speakers.

The economic and political upheavals in the present world were termed "signs of God shaking the earth", by Bishop Stewart in his address.

"The larger universe has not destroyed God, but enlarged Him. We need a bigger God than we have dreamed and today the world leaps to receive Him."

Several thousand delegates from all parts of the country were in attendance at the Congress, which lasted through Sunday, May 5.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Bishop.

The Diocesan Convention will be held in Trinity Church, Florence, the Rev. William Thompson, rector, on Wednesday, May 15. There will be a supper of the Laymen's League on Tuesday night, and the Department of Religious Education plans a meeting for Tuesday. The House of Happiness will have an exhibit in charge of Miss Nettie C. Barnwell. The Tri-Cities are hoping for good weather and a large attendance to partake of their hospitality and to enjoy the sights of the Tennessee Valley.

NEBRASKA.

Losses Suffered From Storms.

Two windows of fine art glass were blown out in the Decatur Church in the recent storms, and a window in the Indian Mission Church at Winnebago. All three were insured in the Church Properties Fire Insurance Corporation, and will be replaced as soon as possible.

Walked Twelve Miles to Be Confirmed.

An Indian boy of the Ponca reservation walked twelve miles from his home during one of the worst dust storms of the season in order to be confirmed when the Bishop visited the mission last month.

Rev. Percy Houghton, of 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, conducted the three-hour devotion at Trinity Cathedral this year for the second time, on Good Friday.

A congregation, which taxed the capacity of the building, gathered on Monday in Holy Week for the first of the Community Holy Week services in St. Luke's, Plattsmouth. The sermon was preached by Rev. G. A. Pahl (Evangelical); the lesson was read by Rev. H. G. McClusky (Presbyterian); the Psalm by Rev. C. O. Troy (Methodist).

Summer Conference plans are well under way. The opening exercises will be on June 17. The Conference will meet at Doane College, Crete, Nebraska, with Bishop E. V. Shayler acting as and a well rounded list of leaders.

Wm. J. H. Petter.

Personal Notes

Dr. Gavin Appointed as Representative at Bucharest.

At the quarterly meeting of the National Council last week, the Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry, D. D., Presiding Bishop, announced the appointment of the Rev. Dr. Frank Gavin, of General Theological Seminary, as representative of our Church in conversations on "Anglical Orders" with the hierarchy of the Rumanian Orthodox Church at Bucharest, Rumania, during June.

Bishop's Granddaughters Meet.

An interesting moment in the centennial dinner in Chicago was that when two great-granddaughters of Philander Chase, first Bishop of Illinois, met for the first time. Neither knew of the presence of the other.

The two were Mrs. James Trottman, of Milwaukee, and Mrs. Charles T. Hull, wife of the Rev. Charles T. Hull, of Chicago.

When it was learned the two descendants of Bishop Chase were present, they were called together by newspaper photographers and met outside the dinner room for the first time.

The Rev. Harry Hilbish, recently ordained priest and now principal of the community school at Erie, Ill., has been elected rector of Grace Church, Sterling, Ill. Mr. Hilbish has tendered his resignation at the Erie School, where he has become widely known, to accept his election in Sterling. It will become effective as soon as he is released from the Erie School, where he has built up an important work.

The Rev. Donald J. Campbell, assistant at St. Paul's Church, New Haven, will begin his new duties as rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Providence, R. I.

Ordinations.

The Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams was ordained to the priesthood in St. Stephen's Church, Richmond, May 2 by the Rt. Rev. F. D. Goodwin, D. D., Bishop Co-Adjutor of the Diocese of Virginia. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, rector of St. Paul's Church, Chattanooga; the Litany was read by the Rev. G. C. Palmer, rector of the church; the Epistle was read by the Rev. D. C. Zabriskie, S. T. D. of the Theological Seminary, Alexandria; the Gospel by the Rev. James W. Morris, D D., of Petersburg, Va. Mr. Williams was presented by the Rev. John N. Lewis, rector of St. John's Church, Waterbury ,Conn., and with these clergymen the following united in the laying on of hands: The Rev. Dr. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Rev. Dr. Cary Montague, Rev. Dr. Hugh Sublett, the Rev. Messrs. S. Chilton, S. S. Spathy, E. C. Pedrick, Ernest Stires, Charles Smith and Comer Lile.

Mr. Williams graduated from the Theological Seminary in Alexandria last June. Since that time he has been assistant to the Rev. Mr. Lewis at St. John's in Waterbury, at which place he will continue for the present.

The Rev. James McDowell Dick assumed charge of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Raleigh, N. C., Sunday morning, May 5. Mr. Dick's former charge was Pulaski, Va. He succeeds the late Rev. Theodore Partrick, Jr.

Dr. Dyson Hague Stricken.

It will be a shock to the Church people throughout Canada to hear of the sudden and serious illness of Dr. Dyson Hague. The news reached us just as we were going to press. Only a few days ago at Wycliffe Commencement Canon Hague presented some students for the degree of L. Th., and it occurred to me at the time that his natural force had not abated one whit. The old spirit was there, the old-time dynamic was there, and the old lifelong loyalty. He suffered a cerebral hemorrhage while at Preston Springs and is now lying in the Galt Hospital.—The Canadian Churchman, May 2, 1935.

Deaths.

The Rev. Arthur M. Griffin, Ph. D., rector of Christ Church, Canaan, Conn., and of Trinity Church, Lime Rock, Conn., entered into life eternal Tuesday, April 30, 1935. Services were held in Christ Church, Canaan, Thursday, May 2, at 9 A. M. (D. S. T.).

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

"The heights belong to the eagle."

The Church should be "a vast distributing system of the Divine Charity."—Evelyn Underhill.

"No man is fully alive who is not ready to die for something."

Probe deep enough into anything and you will come to tears.—Edith Wharton.

"Love has a hem to its garments which reaches the very dust;
It can touch the stains of the streets and lanes,
And because it can, it must."

Men who try to do something and fail are infinitely better than those who try to do nothing and succeed.—Loyd Jones.

The cross is the inescapable condition of being a disciple of Jesus. Look at these great verbs: "Come—Deny—Take up—Follow!"—Rev. S. B. Belk.

Fishers of Men, look to your nets!
What will the Master say
If through ragged nets or slackened nets
Your catch has slipped away?
—Prichard.

The heart of religion is not so much an opinion about God as a personal relationship with God.—Archbishop Temple.

It is not by change of circumstances, but by fitting our spirits to the circumstances in which God has placed us that we can be reconciled to life and duty.—F. W. Robertson.

"The poorest of trades and the noblest of callings," is what Doctor Cuyler called the ministry of the Gospel.

He that acknowledges a creation and denies a providence involves himself in a palpable contradiction; for the same power which caused a thing to exist is necessary to continue its existence. Some persons admit a general providence, but deny a particular providence, not considering that a general providence consists of particulars.—Webster.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

Child Labor Amendment.

May 3, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

As a new subscriber to your paper, I regret to note that you have fallen under the delusive and specious spell of the advocates of the so-called Child Labor Amendment to the Federal Constitution. Their statements from the very start have been misleading or worse. They use child labor as the medium for enlisting sympathy, very proper sympathy, of those who disapprove of exploitation of children by industries. Incontrovertible statistics prove that the evil does not exist there. The purposes of the proponents of the measure are quite other, ulterior and dangerous. Under guise of protecting the child, that word appears nowhere in the measure, which aims on the other hand to place powers of control in Federal bureaus over the lives of all under eighteen, an outright and unsafe invasion upon parental powers that are fundamental. The grant of such power would vest in governmental agencies the ability to exercise rights against which our people would surely rebel, as a measure more dangerous, more destructive and more impracticable than the prohibition amendment.

Philip S. Tuley,

Books on the Confederacy.

Mr. Editor:

The admirable note, signed Sue Ruffin Tyler, moves me to write another.

I believe that there are many, many persons who who do not understand why the Confederate States used their constitutional right to withdraw from the Union of the States and even to uphold it by fighting for it.

Also, many, many books have been written on the subject; but I suppose not many are read now-a-days.

For those who would like to get a true view of facts, let them read "The Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government," by Jefferson Davis (perhaps omitting the appendix, which gives his speeches in Congress before the war), and "The Long Roll," by Mary Johnston. The latter shows all of the horrors of war. I might add, "Was Davis a Traitor?" by Bledsoe.

Our Heritage.

The Sesqui-Centennial of the Diocese of Virginia brings to mind the great heritage and historical place of our Church in America. It is hard to realize that it is longer from Jamestown to the Revolution than from the Revolution to the present day, and yet we have been as a Church in this country as long as Anglo-Saxon civilization.

It almost seems a pity to realize that though we were the first to arrive with English-speaking people, we never did keep pace with the growth in population of our country. As one missionary bishop was wont to put it, the Baptists and Methodists arrived in the West with the covered wagon, and our Church came on the observation platform of a Pullman car. But we have been making up for lost time, and while the present age is an age of revolution and change, our Church has grown in popularity and is better understood than in former times.

The great and glaring weakness that is brought to light in Virginia's celebration is the fact that aside from Maryland, Virginia and Connecticut, our Church has always been a city Church. We have neglected the great majority of the population that lives in either rural areas or small villages, and even in those dioceses where we have had rural work, it has often been neglected because city work dominated the mind of the Church.

And yet there is a simplicity and strength about Virginia Churchmanship that can best be accounted for by the fact that strong countrymen were the communicants who represented our Church. Little picayune matters of ritual have small place in rural churches. Congregations in the country always have a large group of visitors from other Christian people. It was in the spirit of understanding that this Evangelical type of Churchmanship was developed, and while it is true that the rugged Puritanism of the nineteenth century allowed ugliness in worship, fundamentally there was always a strength of purpose and a zeal for religion that has been a great contribution to our National Church.

In the modern tendency to run after ecclesiastical names and offices and mere fancy ritual, it is well to be reminded in the celebration of Virginia that Evangelism amongst rural as well as city dwellers gave to the Church her greatest strength. Virginia has always been an independent diocese. She is not dominated by a priestly group, but is still in her councils guided by intelligent and consecrated laymen. That has always been the strong heritage of our Church, and until we realize that our Church is a layman's Church, we will never grow in those places where we are weak.

Bible Classes.

One of the few successful Bible class teachers in our Church recently asked why it was that when he asked bishops and clergy about Bible classes, they always put off the question and Episcopalians seemed to have a lack of interest in them.

It is indeed a question to ponder, for with all of the faults that might be found in Bible classes, they have been the chief means of evangelization in the average Protestant Church. The indifference which the Episcopalians show may be either from a sense that they are above that which others have found successful, or else we are too lazy to really work hard enough to organize and encourage what has been proved to be a wonderful institution.

As a matter of fact the silly reasons given against the Bible class are obviously mere excuses. A favorite one is that men who come to Bible classes do not come to church. The real question is whether men who might come to Bible classes come to anything at all when they could at least come to a class. The Bible class is probably responsible for more men who now come to church than any other institution. Managed by laymen, it has all the force of the personal invitation from the layman behind its invitation to join. It is easier often and less embarrassing for a man with no church connection to attend a Bible class than it is to enter a church whose liturgy and music are unfamiliar. Once entering the class, he comes in contact with religious teaching and his interest is likely to grow until he is ready for church membership.

Of course, a good Bible class properly organized will take a good bit of time on the part of certain laymen. It will mean even a word of encouragement and an occasional visit from already busy rectors. But it pays dividends in renewed interest and in its recruiting possibilities. Above all, it will serve to make men familiar with the Bible itself—which today is only too unfamiliar with good Episcopal laymen. If we carry the Bible class to its fullest possibilities, it will become a missionary training school that in some churches has resulted in renewed missionary interest and even in active missionary work supported by individual classes. It is worth the while of our Churchmen, at any rate.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Religion and Youth.

The Guardian, April 18, 1935.

How should religion be presented to youth today? The problem is an anxious one, because a new generation is arising which may be described as post-post-War. Its outlook is more obscure to the older generations than was that of the young people who grew to manhood and womanhood ten years ago. There are signs that it is demanding more definite standpoints than were in favour when the world was settling down after the great catastrophe. Some would say that the interests of the arriving generation are chiefly pragmatic. The influence of Buchmanism would lend support to this view. Dr. Quick, in the current number of "Theology", utters a useful warning against accepting this notion too readily. One characteristic of the ages from eighteen to twenty-three is constant—a desire to establish sound rational bases for life, and a tendency to reject any system of thought or behaviour which is unable to meet the test of logical criticism. That is why a religion without theology does not usually make converts among the young. It is a striking fact that the younger men and women who have been led to accept the Papal claim of recent years have commonly done so because they believe that they find in the Roman Church alone a consistent and rational theology. It is possible that they have been deceived and that they have been more influenced by the siren voice of infallibility than they know.

There can be little doubt, however, that if a revival of institutional religion is to take place it can only be by a careful building up of definite beliefs which embrace the whole of life. Dr. Quick points to a weakness insufficiently understood when he says that religion is too much accepted as a department of life. He takes as a telling example an article that appeared in a well-known newspaper, urging that the clergy should confine themselves to spiritual sermons which would take the thoughts of their hearers away from the occupations of the week, and he rightly adds that this doctrine provides the Marxist with an excuse for saying that religion is dope. The exact contrary is what the inquiring mind demands today. As always, and never more than now, the ardour and relentlessness of youth are seeking an underlying principle that will make sense of most things. Dr. Quick suggests that youth will find it in the Incarnate life of a God of Love.

Dauntless Discipleship.

The Living Church, May 11, 1935.

The devotion and determination of the Virginia Seminary student, William Franklin Draper, is a noteworthy example to the whole Church. Feeling that he was called to the foreign missionary field, Mr. Draper sought appointment by the National Council only to find, as so many other zealous young men and women have found, that the door was closed to him because of lack of funds. Undaunted, Mr. Draper went about interesting his relatives and friends, with the result that he has raised a trust fund of $15,000 to pay his expenses for five years. The National Council has accepted the trust fund for this purpose and has accordingly appointed him as a missionary in the district of Tohoku, Japan. Not every would-be missionary can follow Mr. Draper's course, nor perhaps would it be wise if this practice were followed on a wide scale, but we congratulate him on his refusal to let seemingly insurmountable obstacles block his answer to the missionary call. Mr. Draper is carrying on the noble missionary tradition of Virginia, which has given so many valiant leaders to that cause.

"A Daniel Come to Judgment."

Erie, Pa., Daily Times.

From a recent issue comes the following story: "A New Yorker got drunk the other day, got into a fight with a friend, and unintentionally killed him with a blow of the fist. The killer was brought into court, where he pleaded guilty to a charge of manslaughter. The ordinary sequel would have been a prison sentence. But the judge who handled the case seems to have been a man of considerable discernment. So instead of sending the slayer to prison, he ordered him to abstain from all alcoholic drinks for five years, to pay the funeral expenses of his victim, and pay the widow $15 a week for five years. If the man fails to live up to this agreement, he goes to prison for a five-year stretch. This looks like an exceedingly sensible decision. Too often, when society punishes a lawbreaker, the lawbreaker's victim gets left out in the cold. Here is a case in which a measure of justice will be done to the innocent persons who suffered because of the killing."

Who Is the Patron Saint of Lawyers?

The Living Church, May 11, 1935.

The "Commonweal", noted weekly review of the Roman Catholic Church, recently expressed the opinion editorially that when Sir Thomas More is canonized by the Pope he will be officially designated as a patron saint for lawyers. A correspondent, however, points out that in his "Utopia", Sir Thomas does not speak too favorably of "proctors and sergeants at the law, which craftily handle matters and subtly dispute of the laws". This correspondent refers to St. Ives as a lawyer's saint but expresses some doubt in that regard, quoting the following delightful bit by Austin V. Cannon in a recent report of the American Bar Association: "It was this same St. Ivo, so the ancient story goes, who, on petition by the lawyers, was permitted by the Pope to choose the patron saint of the legal profession. The choice was to be exercised in this fashion. Ivo was to be blindfolded and turned loose in the Lateran to feel the statues of the saints. He was to embrace one statue and the saint whose statue was thus selected was to be the patron saint of lawyers. Ivo wandered about, lawyer-like, feeling the various statues until he came to the one of St. Michael overcoming Satan. Then, as fate would have it, he threw his arms about the statue of Satan, who thus became our patron."

Exiled Teachers and Scholars.

The Guardian, April 5, 1935.

I am glad to learn that, thanks largely to the Academic Assistance Council, 248 of the 1,202 university teachers who were displaced in Germany for racial political or religious reasons have been placed in permanent positions outside their own country. In addition to the discharged university teachers, a large number of scholars were exiled, and of these 366 are being temporarily assisted to continue their studies—170 in Great Britain and 196 in other lands. It is hoped that if the maintenance grants can be continued for two years it will be possible to establish in self-supporting positions almost all of the sufferers from the short-sighted "non Aryan" agitation. The office of the council is at Burlington House, where financial help will be welcomed.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

The Chick and the Egg

Before the chick is hatched the egg is its little world. It knows nothing of the one outside and yet that is its real world, the world in which alone it can live its true life and makes its proper development. And so it is with the Christian life. We are so accustomed to the present state of things that we have come to regard it as the normal state with which we must be content, because no other is possible, at any rate under present conditions. But God is not content with it, and, therefore, we ought not to be content with it. The little chick, even, is not content with the inside of the shell, although there is a certain amount of food there. He wants to be on the outside and to know what the outer world is like, and it would seem as if, in this case, at any rate, instinct is superior to reason. For our physical life is, as it were, the inside of the shell, in which it is impossible to live our true life and reach our fullest development.

The World Outside the Shell.

But what is the world outside the shell? It is the spiritual world which transcends our merely physical environment even more wonderfully than in the illustration used above. Physically, we are, as it were, but dust, or as the Psalmist says:—"Man is like a thing of naught, his time passes away like a shadow." When we make ourselves at home in the spiritual world, we realize that we are the sons of God and heirs of eternal life, and it is in the spiritual world only that we can become what God created us to be. There are some who try to persuade us that Christianity should concern itself with the inside of the shell and try to improve that, leaving the spiritual world and its interests to the future life. We are offered a reduced Christianity, much as the fashion of the day seems to require of women, specially young women, that they must try to be as thin as possible. It is somehow or other, supposed that an attenuated form of Christianity will prove more attractive and win more adherents than that which once conquered the world.

The Vaster Christianity.

The fact of the matter is, however, that there is vastly more in Christianity than we can even conceive of at present, and that the best way to make it attractive and to win adherents is to make men see how great and wonderful it is, rather than how small it seems to some to be. Of course, if we want to keep inside the shell, it is necessary to adapt Christianity to the meagre limits which the walls of the shell impose upon us, and the limited supply of food contained in it. But if we feel the urge for a larger life and a greater freedom of spiritual development, we must not be content with things as they are, but seek to find out what we are really capable of, as the sons of God. We may be well assured that we are doing honor to God in believing that it is His Will that Christianity should control the world, and that He will certainly sustain us with all the resources needed for that purpose.

Faith Will Bring the Power Needed.

It has been said that, if a horse knew its own strength, it would never submit to be made the servant of man. And so with the followers of Christ; if we only had sufficient faith in Christ's promises that His power is at our disposal, in seeking to do His Will, and to further His Cause in the world, then we would not allow ourselves to be hypnotized into servile submission to the spirit of the world. Men and even Christians, look upon war as a necessity, and therefore are willing to tolerate it. But if Christianity is not able to save the world from such a curse, it must be because it is sadly lacking in the Spirit of the Master, the Prince of Peace. And St. Paul once wrote:—"He that hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His." By earnest supplication on the part of the whole body of Christ's followers, such a tremendous spiritual pressure would be brought to bear upon those who govern the nations, that they would feel compelled to yield to the overwhelming sentiment against war which had inspired their people to bring this pressure to bear upon them.

The Possibilities Open to Us.

We have become so used to the inside-the-shell point of view that it is hard for us to realize what tremendous possibilities lie open to us in the spiritual world. If we would only make ourselves at home in it, and really test the promises of Christ, which hitherto we have not dared to do, we would feel inspired to make great ventures of faith, expecting that He would be as good as His Word, and reward our faith accordingly. That this is no exaggeration, may be seen from the following words of St. Paul, in which he describes the Colossian Christians, as being "Strengthened with all might, according to His glorious power." Why should the Colossians enjoy greater privileges than we do? There is no reason at all, except that we have not the courage to claim all the privileges which we are really entitled to, and which Christ has purchased for us by His Death upon the Cross. The Israelites failed to enter into the Promised Land when they were commanded to do so, and through lack of faith, they were condemned to remain in the wilderness. It is the same lack of faith which keeps us back from the position of power and influence which we ought to possess as the sons of God. If we would only go forward, expecting the full measure of the divine promises to be fulfilled; then the way would open up before us and we should see heights of which we had never dreamed. Then these would be made accessible to us by our Great Leader, who has gone before and who beckons to us to follow Him.

* * *

Note. Since the above article was written and sent to the office of this paper, the writer has discovered that the quotation from Colossians I-11: "Strengthened with all might according to His glorious power," was part of a prayer on behalf of the Colosians by St. Paul, and not necessarily a statement of their actual condition, as seemed to be implied in the article. But that it was not a mere aspiration on their behalf by St. Paul, may be seen from verse 29 of the same chapter: "Whereunto, I also labor, striving according to His working, which worketh in me mightily." It is clear that the Apostle longed for them to share this mighty power with him as a part of their Christian birthright.

The Rural Problem

By VAL. H. SESSIONS, D. D.,
Rector of the Bolton Field, Bolton, Mississippi.

ANOTHER YEAR has just about passed and again we face Rogation Sunday—the Sunday on which it is our privilege to think about the work of Mother Church in the Rural Districts. We hope that throughout the land messages concerning Rural Work will be delivered from our pulpits. We hope that our people will be stirred to take a firmer hold on this problem. It is the greatest work before the Church, because on its solution depends the future of the Church. We say this on account of the movement of people from rural areas to the city, and of the beginning movement from the city to rural areas. When we pause and think we can realize that the Church is concerned with not only those who are remaining in the Rural Districts. Too long has the Episcopal Church been holding back as a whole in her attitude towards the work in the great open spaces, hamlets, and towns of these United States of America. Even after taking everything into consideration, we still feel that we are justified in saying that we have had money for almost everything under the sun, and almost everybody under the sun, except our own Rural Folk of this nation.

The Church has made great strides in this work in the last seventeen years. We see quite a change going on. Books have been written about Rural Work Rural Conferences held, Diocesan, Provincial, and National, and are still being held for the purpose of studying the best methods to carry the Church into the Rural Districts. Through exchange of ideas we have learned much—and we have accomplished a great deal. But we have a long way to go. Our folk have not yet waked up to helping in the work with their gifts of money. We have pushed other things ahead of the Rural Work. Leaders in the Rural Field are still trying to carry on the work in the ways of yesterday. There are still those who think if a man stays in the Rural Field he is there because he cannot help himself, or he has no ambition, or he is some kind of a freak. Yes, we have a long way to go before we'll be able to master the situation.

In writing this article we could deal in mere words. We could write about the romance of Rural Work in the United States, a place where there is real romance as in no other place under the sun. We could write about the twitter of birds, and the call of bull frogs, and the four o'clocks that bloom at four o'clock. Yes, we might even write of the effect of "day-light saving time" on the folk in the country sections, but at the end where would we be? Let us try and take a step forward by facing facts. Facing them for the purpose of using this Rogation Sunday as a stepping-stone towards the solution of the Rural Problem.

What is the Rural Problem?

We have headed this article—The Rural Problem—we know there are those who say, Rural Problem! Well, what's the Rural Problem? There are those in existence who do not realize that there is a Rural Problem as distinctive as any of the other many kinds of problems.

We could make answer: The Rural Problem is: how are we going to carry a sane presentation of the Gospel to the people in the Rural Districts?

For so long a vast majority of the places in the Rural Districts have had a negative religion presented to them. A negative philosophy of life. They need a wholesome Gospel. Our Lord came that we might have life, and the more abundant life. I say that, too long a set of don'ts and a biased philosophy of life, have been presented. Already we see reaction to this kind of presentation, the result being a turning away on the part of many from any kind of organized religion.

But we are not going to answer that question this way in this article. We are going to say that the answer is for us as members of the Episcopal Church: the Rural Problem is how are we going to extend the work of our Mother Church into the Rural Areas? How are we going to hand down that revelation from the Master that we have, as no other Church has?

Let us give a short paragraph right here to those who would say—Well, has the Episcopal Church a different message? There are many of our folk who say they believe that one presentation is as good as another. If I thought so I would join something else. The difference is the Episcopal Church presents a Positive Religion. A Sane Religion. The Gospel is presented as the Master gave it—progressive—today better than yesterday, tomorrow better than today. First the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear. There is no hocus pocus affair about it. Such as—once saved always saved.

Now, before we go into some of the methods of solving the Rural Problem, we want to make this statement in answer to the criticism of many. And mark well—we can make it after the experience of twenty-odd years in the same Rural Field as Postulant, Candidate, Deacon, Priest. We feel that we have proved it. Then you can find proof for it wherever the Church has been trying to solve the problem. Here's the statement: The Episcopal Church can minister to the people in the Rural Districts—to all conditions of men wheresoever found. If we could not it would be a terrible criticism of the Church. We know of nothing worse that could be said than: The Episcopal Church is able to minister only to the privileged folk. Just compare that statement with our Lord's love and work. If ever that statement is made in our presence, challenge it. It is better to please God than man.

Pure Catholic.

Of course, in order to do this the Church must be Pure Catholic—and not Sectarian Catholic. Some Episcopalians are getting to be as bad as some of the members of our daughter churches about that word Catholic. When they hear the word Catholic they think of purgatory, invocation of Saints, etc. But we mean Catholic in the sense of the Creed. To me a man is a Catholic when he believes that every human being is a child of God, and everyone who is baptized in the name of the Trinity is a member of the Universal Church. We are Pure Catholics when we recognize the worth of every person. The reason that many folks are afraid of the Episcopal Church is because so many of our leaders have offended folk by narrow Sectarianism under the name Catholic. To go into any community and flaunt our beliefs in the faces of other people by criticizing them, and making comparison of beliefs, is to build a barrier that will take a long time to surmount and tear down. By our actions we are judged. By our actions others know the value of our religion. "Ye shall know them by their fruits." By our actions others know whether we ring as true metal or adulterated. And it is interesting to know that the two on the road to Emmaus had just such an experience with our Lord. At first they did not recognize Him. He talked to them about the teachings of the prophets, and their hearts did burn them, but they did not recognize Him by His words. It was in the breaking of bread—His actions. And so, we must go in this spirit into the Rural Districts where the Church is not known or where she is weak—taking every man for what he is worth, adopting forms of services that they can understand and leading them on to the appreciation of the Liturgy of Mother Church, presenting the Gospel as handed down to us without making comparison of teaching, and living the Christ life daily. Arguments, fusses, bigotry, narrowness, will never convert the countryside to the Master or His Church.

Cannot Be Done in a Day.

And we would have you to recognize this fact that we have preached in season and out of season for years. The countryside cannot be converted in a day. The leaders of the Episcopal Church need not expect large confirmation classes in our generation. The Church has lost ground by turning over the Rural Districts of the United States to the extreme Protestants. And when we think about it carefully, we will have to recognize the fact that we owe a great debt to these churches, because had it not been for them our Lord would not be known as well as He is in our Rural Districts.

Present Trend.

The trend now, however, is towards the abandonment of distinctly Rural Churches on the part of the extreme Protestants. This is an indication that the children of the rural under-privileged will in an increasing degree be deprived of Sunday-school instructions.

As we read and think and listen, we wonder whether we are rushing into too much organization in the carrying on of the Church's work in the open country, hamlets and towns. We would dare to hang out a warning sign with these words on it—do not over organize for fear of killing the spirit. Naturally as the efforts to push the Church into the Rural Districts gain momentum the cause attracts. Many suggestions are made. We do not question the sincerity of those making the suggestions, but we will question the suggestions.

For example, we do not need Farmer-Preachers, neither do we need Preacher-Farmers. We need Pastors. How fine it would be if we could use that word altogether—Pastor. Pause and think of its meaning!

If a Pastor wants to have a little farm on the side-line to work in, that is all right—but—it must be distinctly understood that it is his hobby. That instead of golf he has a garden to get exercise or because he loves to farm—or he has a little patch in order to help fill the larder. The thing we are trying to say is to make a point of having a farm has the danger of creating the notion that the farm comes first—that it conflicts with our work as a Pastor and that the work of ministering comes second. As much time is needed, and more, working at the work of the Ministry, as in any other undertaking. Developing a class of farmer-preachers or preacher-farmers will not solve the Rural Problem. Farming is a job in itself. The work of the Pastor is a job in itself. If a man's time is divided between two or more professions or vocations, we just naturally hear remarks.

Neither do we need the idea that every Pastor must be an experienced Social Worker, or an expert Psychiatrist, or any other profession of that kind. If the Pastor is an expert Social Worker by nature, or if in some way he has had the opportunity of training himself as such—that is different. If he has had the time to develop along these lines that is great—but all these are secondary as far as the Pastor is concerned. If a Pastor knows enough about this kind of work to know where he can go for help: if he knows enough to call in the Social Worker or the Psychiatrist—then—he is on a far safer track than thinking he must be all in one. To me—to think otherwise is minimizing the work of the Ministry. A Pastor is first and last a Soul Specialist. The Priest must minister to the soul as his specialty. It is a man-size job.

BOOK REVIEWS

THE FIRST BISHOP OF CONNECTICUT: By the Rt. Rev. Chauncey B. Brewster, D. D., Retired Bishop of Connecticut. Art Paper. Pp. 7. Published by The Church Missions Publishing Company, Hartford Connecticut. Price, 15 cents.

The celebrations of last year, marking the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Seabury, the first Bishop of Connecticut and of the Church in the United States, may well round out with this well-expressed historical address by the one man most eminently fitted for the task. For Bishop Brewster, Connecticut born, in whose veins courses the blood of the colonial Brewsters, should be looked to for this treatment of the event which marked a so-significant and auspicious beginning of the life of the Church in our land. And he has done his work with commendable brevity and directness. All clergyman as well as all layman should possess it.

AGAINST HEAD WINDS: By Dr. John T. Faris. Cloth. Pp. 27. Published by The Wm. B. Eerdmanns Publishing Company, Grand Rapids, Michigan. Price, $1.

Here is a book that may well take its place beside "The Masters of Fate," by Sophia F. Shaler. The author has a penchant for the heroic. In our age of despondency, with suicide as a final issue, we need the stimulus and quickening to courage which the lives of those who have fought just such battles as our own, display. His own apology for offering this volume may indicate both his purpose and spirit: "It is to present the lives of men and women who have struggled and conquered, who have been so transformed by the Master's call to heroic living, that they may have a helpful message for everyone who comes to them."

Biography is a winsome call to thought. What God has done for others, we may well believe He can do for us. Mary Lyon, founder of Mount Holyoke College; Horace G. Underwood, who "laughed at impossibilities"; Myron T. Herrick, whose "Christian principle won"; Frank Higgins, "The lumber-jack's sky pilot"; Andrew Jackson, whose crowning victory was becoming a Christian. These are a few of the fascinatingly described characters. Twelve men and women in all, whose lives shine out as exemplars of daring in the face of difficulties.

This book might make a fine gift on a boy's or girl's birthday anniversary; or at some holiday time. Surely Dr. Faris makes his characters "real, glowing, thrilling people"; and such folks are the admiration of our young people.

CHRISTIAN THEOLOGY: By the Rt. Rev. Arthur C. Headlam, C. H., D. D., Bishop of Gloucester, England. Published by The Oxford University Press, 114 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Pp. 482 with the Index. Price $4.50.

This is a textbook for theological students written in the typical and clear style of Richard Headlam. It is not primarily a history of what has been believed, as the author makes it clear, but what is necessary to believe and think to be Christian. The book is differently arranged than other theological treatises published hitherto.

He begins with "The Sources of Religious Knowledge"—Natural religion comes first with all modern methods of study such as psychology, Pragmatism, faith and mysticism. Then he takes up revealed religion as we have it in the Bible. This is a fine discussion of inspiration, tradition and the authority of the Scriptures. He defines Inspiration as "The Bible is the record of a divine pro-

The Christian Challenge

By JAMES E. FREEMAN,
Bishop of Washington.

Bishop Freeman.

REVERENCE for sacred things, such as the sanctity of Sunday, insistence upon purity of life, the indissolubility of marital obligations and the finest things of domestic life, honor and decency in social and industrial relations—these today are being challenged. Take as an example the growing and widespread disregard for the observance of Sunday. Have we reached a stage where we are to make this day a Roman holiday, abandoned to any practice or device that the human will desires?

If reverence for Sunday goes, the Church as an institution goes with it. If the clergy and professed Christian people impair the reverent practices of this day, they undermine the footings of the Christian faith itself. All the cheap substitutes we set up to appeal to the capricious wills of the people, especially the youth, will little avail us when once we have made Sunday a holiday rather than a holy day.

I press the claim for a Sunday habit and practice that is just, consistent and reasonable. I deplore the loss of reverence that characterizes the present trend of society in making the day one of excessive social indulgence. I make no appeal for a so-called "blue Sunday". I do affirm that this day and its hallowed usages is vitally related to our physical, cultural and moral well-being, and that once it is secularized or abandoned, we shall lose out of our life its most stabilizing and sustaining support.

I INSTANCE the concerns of the home and marital fidelity as transcending all other matters that challenge our attention today. No matter what else we may do to stabilize our economic institutions, we shall ultimately fail of our coveted aims and purposes, if the sanctity of marriage and the security of the home is imperilled. Loyalty to Christ begins at the hearthstone of the home. Let there be indifference to purity, decency and ordered discipline here, and the Church and all our other stable institutions will suffer.

America has the unenviable distinction of leading the world in its divorces and shattered home life. What stability can the state, society and industry have, when the central institution and the most indispensable, the home, is made the sport of those who for lust or incompatibility or less consequential causes, ruthlessly destroy its very being and abandon to their own devices its most sacred treasures, its children? Modern society regards looseness and license as they concern fidelity to marital obligation, as of such slight importance that they may be practiced with impunity. The libertine was once spurned by wholesome social circles; today his multiplied liaisons give him an enviable distinction. This is particularly true in what are called the exclusive and upper circles of society. Were it not for the wholesomeness of the less conspicuous and less favored, we should have a state of moral laxity and indecency comparable to that of Roman civilization in the days of its decline and decay. The exploits of these destroyers of the fine things of the home and of the cleanest and best in social usage are made the choice and favored bits of news in the social columns of the daily press. When we are startled by wars and rumors of wars, of threatening misfortunes that may destroy the quiet and security of our cherished institutions, let us be admonished by an ancient if forgotten word that has deep significance: "From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?"

It is not a question of party allegiance that is called for today; it is a question of allegiance to those eternal verities; honesty, purity, decency, sobriety and the most indispensable and wholesome things of life, that challenge the true patriot and disciple of the lowly Nazarene. God has repeatedly saved society and the state from corruption and ruin by minorities. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit," this has been the watchword and assurance of small groups of heroic men and women who have dared to stand against fearful odds and for that which they believed to be right.

A lonely Saviour, despised and rejected of men, has overspread the world with His mighty Gospel. What is lacking today in our Christian household is His courageous spirit. We reverently bow before His cross, but the sacrifice it implies we cautiously and lightly assume. We come to His table and receive the gifts it imparts, but we fail to espouse His cause when it affects our convenience or lays upon our personal interests a heavy or costly toll. We maintain a discreet silence in the presence of wrongs and injustices, and forget that He drove with knotted whip cords from the sanctuary, those who made a pretence of religion. We pay homage and deference to the favored and the privileged, waiting for the crumbs that fall from their ladened tables, rather than rebuke them for practices that bring shame and distress to multitudes of helpless and defenseless men, women and little children. Better that we suffered and starved for awhile, nourished only by His Spirit, than that we betrayed His cause and by our apathy and indifference hindered the progress of His Kingdom. It may be that the time is at hand when men who believe in Christ's teachings may have to exhibit courage, yes, and suffer humiliation, dishonor and pain, that His cause may prevail.

WE CANNOT meet today as a body of Christian men and women without taking cognizance of the ominous and threatening clouds that hide the fair face of the sun and that betoken the possibility of devastating storms that may once again engulf the world in strife and bloodshed.

Europe seethes with unrest. Russia is far from the goal she set herself in her planning, and hunger and starvation are the portion of great numbers of her people. Germany has grown militant and puissant under a reckless leader whose attitude has aroused anxious fears throughout the world. The solemn tramp of increasing armed forces presages the imminence of another world conflict.

Even peace-loving America discloses signs of apprehension of what may be impending, and increases her armed forces on sea and land. The press creates deepened concern and the munitions and armament manufacturers gloat over conditions that give promise of increased earnings and augmented dividends. It is a situation that challenges the Church and Christian men and women everywhere. Those who promote and abet the war spirit, discount our influence and set at naught our power.

Certainly the time has come when the Church of every name must call into militant action all its forces to resist those who would treat with contempt the teachings and ministry of the Prince of Peace. We

Rogationtide

Rogation Sunday. Fifth Sunday after Easter. May 26, 1935.
Rogation Days—Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 27, 28, and 29, 1935.

By CHARLES W. F. SMITH,
Assistant Rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond.

IN THE YEAR A. D. 467 Mamertus, the old Bishop of Vienne, was standing before his altar saying the Easter Even Mass. Suddenly an earthquake shock was felt, one of a series that for some time had been devastating the country. The people fled the church, but the Bishop remained. There and then he pledged that on the three days before Ascension Day he and his people would sing solemn litanies in procession through the countryside. From that time to the Reformation these processions became a universal Christian custom. The days came to be called "Rogation Days" from the Latin "rogare", "to implore". In some parts of England today processions through the fields to bless the crops with the saying of litanies still take place. In many parishes it is also the custom to perambulate the boundaries and "beat the bounds". Our Prayer Book provides on pages 39 and 40 special prayers for use on Rogation Days; a special Collect, Epistle and Gospel, on pages 261-263, were added at the last Revision.

Ideal Christian experience moves from a sense of need to such a satisfactory conclusion that thanksgiving becomes vocal. This is illustrated by the presence in our Calendar of the Rogation Days and of Thanksgiving Day. The Rogation Days are 'days of solemn supplication" that God will, for us in our particular place and time, repeat His annual miracle of growth to plenty. The Rogation "days of solemn supplication" echo the petition of the Litany "that it may please Thee to give and preserve to our use the kindly (i. e., "according to their kind" cf. Genesis 1:11 and 12) fruits of the earth".

Rogationtide betokens a sense of dependence. Dependence may be a soul cramping and life destroying thing. The supply of our needs when we are dependent may make of our feeling of gratitude a fettering bond. But that depends upon who it is to whom we owe our gratitude. There are some people we would not wish to be under an obligation to; we might fear they would take advantage of us. There are others who meet our needs in such a way that we have no fear. We feel the gift gives them a joy which satisfies them without requiring servility on our part.

Our dependence on God is of this kind. His heart is so generous, His gifts so freely and indiscriminately given, His nature so just and moral, and His yearning over us so willing to suffer for us, that a trustful dependence on Him can be full of joy and strength. It can nourish our life and make us more alive rather than cramp us. He sends His rain on the just and on the unjust. To some it is a matter of course. Others receive the good and their hearts are full of gratitude and praise to the Heavenly Father, who, infinitely more than any parent, provides their needs. To these the sense of dependence on God opens new exprinces of companionship and peace as they respond to God's continual and all-embracing love.

BUT when we meditate on this we realize that though God does not discriminate in His gifts of the fruits of the earth, man has somehow injected an element of discrimination. The freely flowing supply, intended to reach all, reaches some not at all, others inadequately, some sufficiently, and others super-abundantly. And these last seem to have control over the supply to the others. It is evidently not as God intended. This is the problem of the distribution of wealth in an economy of abundance like ours today. The true child of God, feeling his own dependence on a loving Father, Who gives all things, even Himself, for man, cannot be happy or take rest until this is righted. So it comes today, into our prayers for the fruits of the earth, which create in us a spiritually healthful sense of dependence, there must enter a note of supplication that the barriers to the supply of all men's needs everywhere be broken down. Until all men are satisfied with food our own satisfaction will be in continual peril. It is good for us all to be dependent upon God, but not good for many men to be dependent on a few.

THE CHRISTIAN CHALLENGE.

abdicated our office and allegiance in the late war. We forsook our principles and became propagandists for a cause that has issued in confusion worse confounded and sown the seeds of bitterness and hatred the world over. To advocate peace along sane and rational lines has brought down upon its advocates everywhere, the scorn and derision of war-mongers, crafty diplomats, selfish politicians and those who profit at the cost of the thousands of our youth who are ruthlessly slaughtered at their behest.

These instigators of war are safeguarded by reason of age and position from its cruelties. They make no reckoning of its awful horrors and tragedies. To them the survival of the fittest, means the security of selfish interests at the price of human sacrifice. They are as grossly callous and brutal as those cruel monsters who ruled Rome in the days of its decadence. The time has arrived where these men must be dealt with by an aroused and courageous public opinion. The women and youth of the World will no longer be silent, nor will they permit a handful of men in any nation, be they in the seats of the mighty or in the high places of industry, to work their advantage at the cost of their fellow-citizens.

A wave of righteous indignation is sweeping the world today and the determination to peace is no longer to be turned aside by small minorities that sit secretly in chancellories or within the restricted areas of cabinet chambers. Well did Lloyd George affirm that if another great world war comes, the churches must be prepared to close their doors—their end is in sight. We believe he spoke wisely. This present time is fraught with infinite perils. To continue passive and quiescent is to invite disaster. The finest exhibition we can give of love of country is to support those in our federal government who are courageously and aggressively carrying on a campaign to promote peace at home and abroad through treaties enforced by public opinion.

Let us urge the supervision and control of armament and munitions and the restriction of war profits. Let us demand measures that shall safeguard our nation from offending sister nations or provoking in them suspicions as to our motives or intentions. Let us persistently inculcate, especially in our youth, the spirit of amity and good-will towards all men. Let us promote that consistent form of national pride that regards with generosity and chivalry our neighbors of every race and kindred the world over.

In the name of God, let us turn aside from our petty and insular conceits, our miserable divisions and boasted distinctions and places of proud advantage, and consolidate our ranks that we may hasten the reign and dominion of Him whose Advent was heralded with the promise of peace and good-will.

The Centennial of Chief Justice John Marshall's Death

By CASSIE MONCURE LYNE.

In the days when Richmond, Virginia, was a small hamlet, a pair of newly-wedded lovers, whose courtship had occurred amidst the stormy days of Yorktown, were John Marshall and the lovely Mary Ambler, who were destined later to live in this new capital of the Commonwealth, where John Marshall became a character famous for democracy in many ways. This period, of course, ante-dated the establishment of any market-place, so that Marshall carried his own basket when he went forth to dicker with hucksters, and would be seen homeward bound, as Virginians expressed it: "Toting his own ducks, amid much squawking". He also was a marked figure in the Monumental Church, where he always sat with his pew door open, so that he might stretch his long legs more comfortably in the aisle; for the old square church pew was rather restricted as to space; since it contained the stove. But, when travelling in his gig for sessions of Court, Marshall cut the most picturesque figure—albeit it was well-known he never could hitch a horse. Once, so the yarn goes, when the harness broke, the great Jurist sat helpless at his wits' end as the horse walked out of the hames. Seeing a small darkie sitting on a nearby fence, Marshall summoned the little pickaninny to his aid, grinning from ear to ear. When the nag had been backed into the shafts and the buckles adjusted, Marshall, with usual placidity, observed: "Why couldn't I have done that?" To which was the instant reply: "'Cause God ain't give you no horse sense, dat's why!"

Interior of Monumental Church, Richmond, Va. Chief Justice Marshall's Pew Was Second from the Chancel, Left.

When John Marshall first arrived at Yorktown, he was a green mountain lad of only seventeen, fresh from the hills of the Blue Ridge, where, like Abraham Lincoln, he had been born in a log cabin. Close by lay the land of the Senecas in this outpost of British colonization, where the county then was called "Dunsmore", after the English Governor. There, by a lightwood knot, Marshall had begun the study of law, for his father had purchased a copy of Blackstone, only two of which sold in America. Samuel Adams, in faraway Massachusetts, had secured the other volume, and had organized a "Liberty Club", that was known as "The Caulkers" (a term well understood by these sailors in New England as a ship-term for making "tight" or "sealed", since whisperings of separation from the Mother Country must be held behind closed doors, lest treason arrest the members; hence evolved the word "caucus" to be added to America's vocabulary from this incident).

Young Marshall early gained for himself at Yorktown the nickname of "Silver-heels", as he was such a fleet runner, and also because his mother kept him well supplied in knit socks of grey. Knowing her great loving anxiety for her boy, General Washington wrote to her: "Do not be uneasy and worry for the safety of your son. I have placed him in the regiment of a gentleman"—which was a reference to his great friend, Colonel Baylor, of New Market, Virginia, famous as a horseman, and lover of the turf, which stood him in good stead as commander of the Lady Washington Dragoons. This cavalry's contingent were the Culpeper Minute Men, whose flag showed a serpent, with the motto: "Touch me if you dare." With this infantry, Marshall later was destined to shiver at Valley Forge.

But, when in the trenches of Yorktown, Marshall utilized his winter bivouac to study law at William and Mary, under the great Chancellor Wythe. He also fell desperately in love with the daughter of Secretary Ambler, a girl of barely fourteen. She was a winsome beauty, shy as a partridge, so when Marshall courted her, she was so scared, she said, "No"—albeit she loved him and had meant to whisper, "Yes". However, he accepted her refusal and went on his way. Then, like the ladies of that period, Mary Ambler began to "pine away", so her sister, Mrs. Carrington (whose husband was the Quartermaster General), cut off a lock of Mary Ambler's hair and sent it to the disappointed lover anonymously. He was heartened, believing it came from his fair dulcena, renewed his suit, and, like a fairy tale should end, "Thus they were married and lived happily ever afterwards". The fame of the Ambler family centers around many romances in colonial days, for her mother, Betty Burwell, jilted Thomas Jefferson to marry Ambler, and is the "fair Belinda", to whom the Sage of Monticello scribbled many love-passages in his diary at William and Mary. The call of the blood, possibly, was due to French charm, for the Amblers belonged to the house of Jacquelin Ambler, Count de la Roche, to whom was entrusted the Dauphin, when Marie Antoinette and Louis fled from Paris. John Marshall's love for his wife continued to her life's end, and she bore him many children. In her last illness she became very nervous, and as their house required roofing anew, the Chief Justice had the shingles screwed on, as the sound of the hammer was too noisy for the frail invalid.

John Marshall, as soon as the Revolution was ended, walked every foot of the way to Philadelphia to be innoculated with the virus of cow-pox, which Jenner had just discovered as a vaccine against small-pox, which plague had decimated hundreds of soldiers—as scourge always follows wars. Again, as an old gentleman, he sought the great medical center of the "City of Brotherly Love" to be operated on for gall-stones by the famous surgeon, who, curious to relate, was literally named Dr. Physick! As a graduate of Edinburgh University—so renowned was he for medical science, that the name of "Philip S. Physick" stands as the recognized "Father of American surgery".

It was a confession of Marshall's, "That I was an American before I became a Virginia", which stamped him always as a strong Federalist. During his soldier-days at Monmouth, Princeton and Valley Forge, giving the opportunity of seeing the great industrial North, for Philadelphia then was the metropolis of America, Marshall was made to realize the conditions of a country, not fettered by slavery as the South was, would play a most important part in solidity and progress of the Nation. He could visualize the Union as a world power of the future, having seen beyond the smoke of his own chimney in the Fauquier hill country!

As the jurist who interpreted the Constitution, as the Judge who sat in the Aaron Burr trial; as Judge on the bench for thirty-five years, he has left an indelible impression on the construction of the Constitution and the laws of this country.

BOOK REVIEWS.

gressive revelation delivered through the medium of human agents." p. 78. He quotes from many sources of all Christian communions to show what the Church as a whole is holding concerning the Bible. Then follows the Church as the next source of religious knowledge. The General Councils and the history of the Creeds is ably discussed in this Chapter. The topic, "The Living Voice of the Church," p. 117, is informative and suggestive. It must be studied in all its expressions, the author declares. The Chapter on "Authority," p. 125, is worthwhile reading, since he makes it to be Christocentric in its reality. The only one that would stand the test.

The Doctrine of God covers sixty-six pages of the book. It is a brief but comprehensive history of all views and ideas about God through all the ages up to the present time. All theories have been carefully investigated and explained, and many of them necessarily refuted.

The doctrine of the person of Jesus Christ occupies 172 pages. It is the clearest history of the doctrine the reviewer has ever seen. Of course, for such a study requires several volumes to write, most of what has been thought and taught about such a Life; but our author is unique in condensing his material yet not leaving anything fundamental out of his outline. He uses the historical method in dealing with the New Testament account of His life. He is fair in his treatment of the modern theories, especially with the miraculous element in the life of Jesus. He writes concerning the Virgin Birth, "What I think we can say quite legitimately is that the story of the Virgin Birth occupies a quite natural place in Christian Theology. The Incarnation was a new departure in human history," p. 295. He does not think that, "It is not possible to argue on a priori grounds." The pages following represent the modernistic position, very lucidly described.

The doctrine of the Holy Spirt and of the Holy Trinity occupy the rest of the book. The final chapter 17, on "Faith and Life" is a practical application of theology to the making of life, it closes with two verses of the Trinity Hymn, "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty."

No minister or theological student can afford missing this wonderful compendium of Christian Theology, well written with all information and references necessary for such a sublime study, the study of all studies.

EVOLUTION CROSS-EXAMINED: By David Simpson. Art Paper. Pp. 44. Published by Wm. B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, Grand Rapids, Mich. Price, 35c.

This is a dialogue between a Modernist who believes in Evolution and a Christian who does not. Written by a Welshman, it bears the tone of strong conviction.

The backbone of the contention is that evolution, as held by the atheist, implies that God is unnecessary, if evolution is admitted. For the essential evolutionists despise Theistic evolutionists, who would drag the God of the New Testament into the process. And confessedly, we find difficulty in agreeing with those fine Christian people, who deem that their Christianity is enriched by the doctrine of evolution. It must be that they do not understand the position of the evolutionist radical. He does not want our approval of his theory. He rejoices in his alienation from all association with us, who believe in God and His Holy Word.

Why, then, should we try to harmonize his imputations with our own convictions? No doubt, the Theistic evolutionary movement in the Churches originated by the fear that if we do not agree with evolution, we shall lose our young people who are getting it in big doses at our institutions of learning. But we already see that such a compromise is costing us a heavy toll. For our young people will respect us more for our adherence to the truth of our fathers, than should we compromise that truth on the ground of expediency.

The author of this challenging booklet goes far into the discussion; and we cannot do better than to commend it to both young and old; the orthodox and the modernist. It answers many perplexing questions; and we lay the book down with a sense of having been quickened and strengthened in our faith.

PAMPHLETS, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13 of the series issued by Jessie W. Gibbs, Shelbyville, Kentucky.

The titles, The Gospel of the Kingdom; The Unity of the Church; The Church and the State; The Church and the Kingdom; Property and the Kingdom, and The Order of the Divine Kingdom, suggest the pith of the teachings. From these topics the author arrays himself with the class of teachers who are stressing the dispensational character of the Word of God. This is in accord with the ancient saying, "Distinguish the periods and the Scriptures will harmonize."

The author and publisher may be addressed with a view to the obtainment of any or all of this series.

THEN AND NOW.

Evelyn Goodwin Farr.

I love to think of the first Easter morn—
His loved ones going at early dawn
To seek the grave of their Lord departed,
With weeping eyes, and all heavy hearted.
I see them come to the empty tomb,
Expecting to meet the sepulchral gloom,
And finding instead a celestial light
And angels to say that during the night
The Lord had risen again from the dead,
Had gone before them just as He said.

And ever since, as we come to the place
Where a loved one lies, we can feel His grace
And hear again, "Why seek ye the living
Among the dead? For God's Love is giving
The spirit life, and there is no death;
For your dear one now has received the breath
Of the Holy Spirit—together with Him
Lives here and there, and only the dim,
Poor sight of your human eyes can hide
The glory of life on the other side."

THE CHURCH ARMY.

In the Middle Ages there were to be seen on every hand what were called "clerks". Though the modern word clerk means a person who sells in a store, or does book-keeping, the old meaning of the word was quoted different. For it meant a person connected with the Church and its ministry. As they were the only ones who usually knew how to read and write, the meaning came to mean a person who could figure or keep accounts, and so got its meaning and dropped its significance. The clerks of old were of two types, priests and laymen. The priests baptized, celebrated the Holy Communion, and also preached. The lay clerks went about preaching, and not administering the Sacraments. Chief among them were the followers of St. Francis.

The Church Army today is an attempt to have a group of modern lay clerks. In other words, to have laymen give their lives up to preaching. Their name suggests the Salvation Army, and in some things they are much like that body. The great difference is that the Salvation Army is not connected with any denomination or Church, being a kind of separate Church, and the Church Army is entirely under the Episcopal Church, and a part of it.

There are four ranks in the Church Army. When a person first joins it, he becomes a "Candidate". He is tested out for quite a little while and if he continues to like it, and they consider that he will be a good man for the work, he is advanced to become a "Probationer". In this rank he continues for some time until he has passed certain tests and shown his worth, and he is then promoted to the rank of "Cadet". He now goes to the special training school of the Army, which is in Rhode Island, for this country. There is no charge for this training and he receives food, clothes and instruction, also a very small amount of pocket money. When certain examinations are passed, he is commissioned a Captain in the Church Army. In the English Church he is also ordained as an "Evangelist". In this country he is licensed by any Bishop who wishes him to preach in his diocese.

Their uniform is a kind of dark gray with a military cap and the initials "C" on one lapel. They also have a red cord embroidered on their coat, which has several meanings. One is that when Joshua took the city of Jericho in the Bible, they killed every one there except a woman named Rahab, who had acted as a friend to the Jews. Her house and property were saved when she obeyed orders and hung a red cord out of her window. It is thus a symbol of Salvation. It also means that they are willing to be bound in prison for the sake of Christ, and its red color shows their intense earnestness.

About fifty years ago the Army began when a certain clergyman, Mr. Carlisle, found that, though he had very small congregations in his church on Sunday night, when he went out on the street a great number of people came to hear him. So in spite of much opposition he began to preach on the street much as did the Salvation Army and many were converted thus. So the Church Army was born.

Today it is well established in England, and though it has only been in this country for about seven years, it already has more than twenty-one commissioned officers. It also uses women who are called "Sister". One of these is doing a very fine work among the Indians of South Dakota, and they have recently started work among the Negroes, their first Negro officers having recently been commissioned.

In addition to their work in this country and England, the Church Army is also at work in Canada, Honolulu, India, Africa, China, Japan, Australia and the West Indies. They have over 1,200 Captains and Mission Sisters in these various fields.

In this country their headquarters is in New York City. But they have regular workers in Texas, South Dakota, Virginia, West Virginia, Ohio, New York, Florida and Alabama. Six churches have been built by them in the last four years and many people have been presented for baptism and confirmation. Their motto is "Go for Souls", and their work is spoken of well by practically every place that has been privileged to hear them. One such clergyman stated: "Had I only known, I would have had them stay twice as long in my parish as they had arranged for."

They hold preaching mission revivals, where invited into the parish by the rector. The object of these is plain, old-fashioned conversion. Then, in some places, they have charge of parishes, as a clergyman would have, except that they cannot celebrate the Sacraments and must have a priest visit the field for this purpose. They have been especially useful in small places in this kind of work. Then sometimes they go as "Hiking Troubadours" through the entire diocese, staying from one day to a week in each parish that desires them. Where distances are short, they go on foot from place to place and visit and preach as directed by the rector. In South Florida this winter they came on bicycles. They have an automobile following with bedding and other baggage.

In the early days of our country, our Church often did not have the clergymen to send into sparsely populated sections, or the money to pay them. Thus we did not go into many places, and our Church people drifted away from us. But today the Church Army hopes to go where the clergy cannot go, for the salary is only $10 a week with uniform and lodging provided. A man with this small salary must be very devoted, or he would leave the work to get more. No man goes into the Church Army for the money that is in it. But their prayers, their earnestness and their work has done much good in the past wherever they have been.

The Story of a Mighty Oak That Grew From a Little Acorn.

During the winter of 1877, Mr. John Marston, then superintendent of the Sunday School of St. John's Church, Cynwyd, a suburb of Philadelphia, suggested to the members of his Sunday School that they should give their offerings on the Sundays during Lent that year for the missionary work of the Church. They gladly complied with his suggestion and the first Lenten Offering for Missions presented at Easter in that small suburban church in 1877 amounted to $200.

Other Sunday Schools in the Diocese of Pennsylvania followed the good example set by St. John's, Cynwyd, and next year (in 1878) the Offering was $7,070.

Year by year the Sunday Schools of other dioceses have united in the splendid enterprise, until the boys and girls and young people in the schools and Bible classes in all our Dioceses and Missionary Districts in the United States and Foreign Missionary Fields have joined in the good work. Fifty years after the first Offering the children of the Church gave $553,252. That was the largest amount given in the history of the Offering. In 1934 the Offering was $276,460.

In St. John's Church, Cynwyd, is a memorial tablet that bears the following inscription:

The Originator of the Lenten Offering
Mr. John Marston
Entered into rest, January 31, 1910.
"Their Works Do Follow Them."

Atanta.

The Annual Diocesan Y. P. S. L. Convention will be held at the Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip, Atlanta, May 17-19. Saturday, business session. Bishop Mikell will have the noon-day prayers. Luncheon will be served by members of the Cathedral League, under the trees about the spacious grounds.

There will be discussion groups led by Dean Raimundo de Ovies, of the Pro-Cathedral, "Personality and Christianity in making a living today"; "Trends behind the modern movements of today (i. e., fascism, nationalism, communism)," led by the Rev. Mortimer Glover of Christ Church, Macon, and "Y. P. S. L. Progfram Building," led by Miss Louise Starr, Episcopal Student Worker at the University of Georgia, Athens.

Saturday night there will be hayride and weiner roast. Following this, the Rev. Randolph Claiborne will hold the preparation service for the young people.

Sunday at the eleven o'clock service, Dean Raimundo de Ovies will preach a special sermon for the young people, the lessons will be read by the president, the ushers will be members of the Y. P. S. L., the new Leagues of the diocese will be presented to Bishop Mikell for membership in the Diocesan group, the newly-elected officers will be installed and a corporate communion service celebrated by the Bishop, assisted by Dean de Ovies, for the young people.

Delegates and visitors from the entire diocese are expected.

Junior Boys' Camp.

Camp de Wolf Perry will open July 8, for its fourth year, at Toccoa Falls, Georgia. The Rev. Woolsey E. Couch of College Park (suburb of Atlanta), will again be the director. The Perrywa and Wolfpaw tribes will again assemble at the foot of the beautiful falls, which is twenty-eight feet higher than Niagara—and make plans for tournaments, pow-wows, et cetera. There will be a well-balanced program of Bible study, games and trips of interest; stunt nights, and the favorite of all, tribal ball games. Splendid food and good fishing. The camp is for boys from ages nine to thirteen.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

SOCIETY FOR COLLEGE WORK OFFICIALLY INAUGURATED.

On page 23 of this issue will be found an advertisement of The Church Society for College Work, a society which has come into being in recent months. The first meeting of the Board of Directors was held at the Gramercy Park Hotel, New York, on May 2.

All those interested in college work have for years felt the need for a Church society which could undertake promotion of the Church's work in colleges in a large and enthusiastic way. A preliminary meeting of those interested in founding such a society was held on January 16 of this year. Officers were elected, a perliminary draft of a constitution was accepted, and authorization given for the formation of a Board of Directors. The National Council, in its meeting of February 12, endorsed the formation of the Society. The meeting of May 2 was the first official meeting of the society, with twelve members of the Board of Drectors present. Many of the names included in the list will be recognized as those of men and women prominent, both in the world of affairs and in education. The list is as follows:

Miss Leila Anderson, Field Worker, Woman's Auxiliary.
William R. Castle, Washington, D. C.
Harry Woodburn Chase, Chancellor, New York University.
John Crocker, Episcopal Student Chaplain, Princeton.
John T. Dallas, Bishop of New Hampshire.
Norman H. Davis, New York City.
Samuel S. Drury, Headmaster, St. Paul's School, Concord.
William S. DuBarry, University of Pennsylvania.
Thomas S. Gates, President, University of Pennsylvania.
C. Leslie Glenn, Rector, Christ Church, Cambridge.
Robert C. Hill, New York City.
Henry W. Hobson, Bishop of Southern Ohio.
Coleman Jennings, Washington, D. C.
Arthur L. Kinsolving, Rector, Trinity Church, Boston.
Roland S. Morris, Philadelphia.
John Lloyd Newcomb, President, University of Virginia.
Robert Root, Dean, Princeton University.
Mrs. Harper Sibley, Rochester, New York.
W. Brooke Stabler, Chaplain, University of Pennsylvania.
Theodore O. Wedel, Secretary for College Work.

The officers of the Society as duly elected at the meeting of May 2, are as follows:

W. Brooke Stabler, President.
C. Leslie Glenn, Vice-President.
Theodore O. Wedel, Secretary.
Thomas S. Gates, Treasurer.
William H. DuBarry, Assistant Treasurer.

The purpose of The Church Society for College Work is to promote knowledge of and acceptance of Christ's religion and in other ways to strengthen the work of the Protestant Episcopal Church in college and university centers; and to establish a Fund for this purpose.

Immediate Objectives.

(1) To assist in the placement of clergymen, laymen, and women workers who will minister to students in college and university centers; and to increase the number of such workers in places which are under-manned. Ordinarily they will be attached to the local parish. This will be done by advising Bishops and Vestries when requested; and, where necessary, by making temporary or permanent financial grants from the funds of the Society.

(2) To develop an adequate and detailed file of clergy interested in and qualified for college work in order to advise intelligently about placement. This may be done independently or in conjunction with some other organization in the Church.

(3) To continue to bring to the attention of the Church the strategic importance of college work. This will be accomplished by the writing and speaking of the members of the Society, by publishing pamphlets, and by various other means.

(4) To aid the movement for Christian conferences and retreats for college students by aiding existing conferences which seem to be producing results in Christian life and character and by increasing the scale of these meetings, and in some cases by starting new conferences. To get students off for a week-end or a longer time for prayer and religious thinking is one of the most effective tools of the Church in this over-busy age.

(5) To recruit for the ministry. In all the present-day interest in placement of clergy, unemployment, discouraging unfit men, and selecting only the best, every part of the task seems to have its workers except one, namely, providing a sufficient number of candidates from which to choose. Laying hands suddenly on no man is an ideal often impossible to follow, because there is not much from which to choose. Men for the ministry must be gathered into groups to think about it and into conferences to give longer consideration to it. They must also be supplied with appropriate literature.

(6) To gather together those committed to the cause of college work for prayer, inspiration, and planning. Fellowship is a need of the scattered workers in college centers.

(7) To raise money for the support of the work. The opportunity presented in most college centers is a greater one than can be met financially by the local parish, the diocese, or the National Council. Some fund must be available for openings which lack only money for the securing of a clergyman or other worker fitted for college work.

(8) To unite in intercession those who care about the college work of the Church.

One of the interesting details of the Society will be a group of workers in the field called "The College Relations", a group living under specific rules for prayer, study, fellowship and work. This brotherhood of College Relations will be expected to be ready upon call for the specific tasks which the Society may have in view. The formation of such a brotherhood, bound together around one common purpose by strict rules of discipline, has abundant precedent down through the pages of Christian history. To the founders of The Church Society for College Work, it seems one of the most effective means of advancing the cause.

As the advertisement on page 23 will show, anyone interested in furthering the purpose of the Society is eligible for membership. The annual dues include a subscription to a News Bulletin. Dues and gifts may be applied as directed by the member (a) to the current expenses of the Society; (b) to the endowment of the Society; (c) to the Church's work in any particular college or university center.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

The Annual Report of the Society was presented by the General Secretary, the Rev. William H. Matthews, D. D. This report showed gains in all lines of the Society's activities. There were 673,158 more pieces of Christian literature published last year than the year before. The total of 6,572,261 pieces is nearly twice as much as was published in the peak years before the depression. The donations to the Society's work were about 15 per cent above the previous year; the number of annuity agreements was twice as many as have been written in any one year since the organization of the Annuity Department; grants of free literature were much greater than in recent years, and the number of the Society's colporteurs has been slightly increased the past year.

Dr. Matthews also reported that arrangements have been made with the American Foundation for the Blind for the Society to publish Part I of "Pilgrim's Progress" as a Talking Book. The recording of this book for the Blind will begin at an early date.

CALENDAR REFORM NEEDED.

In 1934 Easter Day was April 1. In 1935 it was April 21. As a result only a small part of the Church School Lenten Offering has been received this year by May 1, and the report of collections to date is very poor.

The total receipts since January 1 were only $247,248.40, as compared with $299,113.91 last year. After allowing one full month for collection and remitting the payments were only 71 per cent of the amount due on Expectations as compared with 90 per cent a year ago.

Quite a number of dioceses are still asleep. I hope they know that the salaries of our missionaries must be paid month by month.

Let us make this month of May a merry one.

Faithfully yours,
Lewis B. Franklin,
Treasurer.

ANNUAL STUDENT ELECTIONS GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Thomas V. B. Barrett, of Westport Conn., was elected President of the Student Body of the General Theological Seminary for the coming academic years at the annual student elections Wednesday. Mr. Barrett will succeed the Rev. William B. Sperry in the office.

At the same time Benjamin Minifie, of Belleville, N. J., was elected President of the Missionary Society to succeed Henry P. Krusen, and Charles E. Wilcox, of New Brunswick, N. J., was elected Vice-president. Mr. Barrett, Mr. Minifie and Mr. Wilcox are all members of next year's senior class.

Others elected to office were Lauriston L. Scaife, of Milton, Mass., recording secretary of the Missionary Society; Herbert S. Brown, of Dorchester, Mass., corresponding secretary of the Missionary Society; Charles D. Kean, of Providence, R. I., treasurer of the Missionary Society, and John S. Kromer, athletic director of the seminary.

A FURTHER STEP IN CHURCH UNITY.

Further activity out of the Lambeth Conference of 1930 and a further step in the direction of Church unity will be the visit of the Archbishop of Canterbury's distinguished commission of Anglican Churchmen to the Patriarch of Roumania for a series of conversations the first week of June. Orthodox delegates to the Lambeth Conference made certain formal "Recommendations", which have since been studied and will form the chief subject of the coming visit.

In response to the invitation of the Roumanian Patriarch, the Most Rev. Myron, the Archbishop of Canterbury has nominated the following to represent the English Church: the Bishop of Lincoln, Dr. Hicks, who as former Bishop of Gibraltar, had the English chaplaincies in Roumania in his jurisdiction; the present Bishop of Gibraltar, the Rt. Rev. Harold J. Buxton, who is well known to the Patriarch and other Orthodox leaders in Bucharest; the English Bishop of North and Central Europe, the Rt. Rev. Staunton Batty, and Bishop Graham Brown of Jerusalem; the Rev. Professor Goudge of Oxford, Dean Bate of York, the Rev. Dr. A. J. Macdonald, the Rev. Canon J. H. Sharp of Gibraltar, and the Rev. Philip Usher. Canon J. A. Douglas will also attend as a correspondent. The Archbishop of Dublin is also to join the deputation and, at the Archbishop of Canterbury's request, Bishop Perry has appointed an American representative, the Rev. Dr. Frank Gavin, of the General Theological Seminary, New York. Dr. Gavin gave a series of theological lectures in Bucharest a few years ago, in the Roumanian language.

On Sunday, June 9, there is to be the celebration of a solemn Liturgy at the English Church in Bucharest, where the Rev. Hugh Farrie is chaplain. Besides the Roumanian Bishop and clergy, it is hoped that the Dowager Queen Marie may be present. She is an Anglican Churchwoman and has frequently shown her interest in the Church of the Resurrection, attending a confirmation service there last year as godmother of one of the candidates.

American Churchmen hardly realize that the Roumanian National Church is probably the largest established State Church among the Eastern Orthodox, with some thirteen million members. Its theological seminary in Bucharest has about nine hundred students. By a Church law of 1925, every man ordained is required to have a university degree.

EPISCOPAL SOCIAL WORK CONFERENCE, MONTREAL, JUNE 9-14.

Sunday, June 9, to Friday, June 14, are the inclusive dates of the fifteenth Episcopal Social Work Conference, to be held in the Mount Royal Hotel and Christ Church Cathedral, Montreal.

KANUGA LAKE CONFERENCES.

Kanuga Lake, conference center of the Episcopal Church, near Hendersonville, N. C., will be opened on June 10, for its summer season of training, and recreation.

The Retreat for Women will be the first period on the program, followed, on June 15, by the Young People's Conference, lasting two weeks, then the Junior Conferences for boys and girls, June 29-July 12. The Adult Conference will be held July 13-27, with the Clergy Conference beginning two days later, July 15. The Laymen's Conference, July 19-21, will be held, as usual, the same week-end as Auxiliary Day, which comes this year on July 21.

The Guest Period and Boys' Camp will open July 27, and, on September 2-4, there will be a Clergy Retreat, followed by the Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Western North Carolina, September 5 and 6.

Among those on the faculty for the Adult and Clergy Conferences this year will be: the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, Executive Secretary of the Department of Social Service of the National Council; the Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, D. D., Secretary of Missionary Education, Department of Religious Education; Miss Mabel Lee Cooper, Secretary for Teacher Training, and Mrs. D. D. Taber, Field Secretary for the Woman's Auxiliary.

The ages for attendance at the Young People's Conferences have been changed somewhat for this season. The age for the Junior Conferences has been raised to twelve years, and the age for entrance of the Young People's Conference, High School and College age, has been changed to fifteen years, instead of fourteen, for the youngest, as formerly.

A number of improvements are being made on the property, and plans are being perfected for another record year in attendance and accomplishment, such as was enjoyed last year by those coming to Kanuga for training, for inspiration, and for the many forms of recreation offered by the beautiful lake in the famous "Land of the Sky."

There are afternoon sessions each day. The Episcopal Conference meets as an associate group of the National Conference of Social Work, which is also assembling in Montreal on June 9, for its sixty-second annual meeting.

Among the subjects to be discussed in the Episcopal Conference or in its joint sessions with other agencies are:

"Increasing cooperation getween clergymen and social worker"; American approach, the Rev. Walter K. Morley, chaplain at Wiltwyck, West Park, N. Y., and New York State Medium Security Prison, Wallkill. Canadian approach, Miss Charlotte Whitton, executive director, Canadian Council on Child and Family Welfare, Ottawa.

"Church's cooperation with the community's probation program." By the Rev. Francis D. McCabe, director, Indiana State Probation Department, Indianapolis.

"Practical standards for diocesan social service departments." By the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, executive secretary Social Service Department, National Council, Episcopal Church.

"An Anglican agency at work with the unmarried mother." By Miss Gertrude Hill, superintendent, Humewood House, Toronto.

"New attitudes toward young people." By David Cushman Coyle, consulting engineer, New York City.

"Group work among girls in Canada." By Miss Ethel Law, training and conference secretary, National Council, Canadian Y. W. C. A.

Group work programs with unemployed girls. A panel discussion with an address by Miss Grace Coyle, assistant professor, School of Applied Social Sciences, Western Reserve University.

"Pre-marital instruction and post-marital counselling." By the Rev. Dr. Floyd Van Keuren, executive secretary, New York Diocesan Social Service Commission.

"The contribution of medicine and psychiatry to marital counselling." By Valeria S. Parker, M. D., Director of Community Relations, American Social Hygiene Association.

"The parish as a social instrument:" American approach, the Rev. Dr. Norman B. Nash, professor of Christian Social Ethics, Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass. Canadian approach, the Most Rev. Derwyn T. Owen, Archbishop of Toronto and Primate of All Canada.

"Religious child-caring institutions: Administrative relationships," H. W. Hopkirk, superintendent, Albany Home for Children, Albany, N. Y. Methods of care, Eric W. Gibberd, superintendent, St. Edmund's Home for Boys, Glendale, Ohio.

THE BLUE MOUNTAIN CONFERENCE.

The Blue Mountain Conference will celebrate its tenth year when it opens at Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, on June 24. It is interesting to note on its advance program that Bishop Rhinelander is now the honorary President, while the Rev. Nathaniel B. Groton, who has been the chief spirit from the beginning, is to be President of the Board.

The courses promise to be more interesting than usual. The new rector of St. Luke's and the Epiphany, Philadelphia, the Rev. Thomas L. Harris, will give a course for the clergy on "Present Trends in Religion in the Light of What Has Caused Them". The clergy will thus form an integral part of the conference this year instead of being a separate group as in the past.

Dr. Franklin, Vice-President of the National Council, will give the course on "Missions" in his practical and inspiring style. The Rev. L. Bradford Young is to be the leader in two courses, "The Life of Christ" and a course on "The Social Gospel", which he is so eminently qualified to lead. The course on "Doctrine" will be given by the Rev. W. H. Dunphy, who has recently left the faculty at Nashota House to take a parish in New York.

The music will again be directed by Mr. Twining Lynes, of Groton School, who served with such distinction two years ago. He will also lead a course in "The Music of the Parish Church" in which he has asked for a good victrola by way of illustration.

The conference is especially to be congratulated in its chaplain, the Rev. Angus Dun, of the Episcopal Theological Seminary, who will be serving for a second year.

Thirty dollars will pay for the entire two weeks at the conference. Further information and programs may be had from Rev. N. B. Groton, St. Thomas' Rectory, Whitemarsh, Pa.

WAR RESISTANCE.

Presented by John Nevin Sayre to Virginia Seminary Students.

The Church's part in war resistance was the subject of an address delivered to students of the Virginia Seminary, Alexandria, Va., by John Nevin Sayre, chairman of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, April 26.

The program of a Christian Church "dead in earnest" in its resistance to war will consist of six points, according to the leader of Christian pacifists and former Episcopal rector.

First, "such a Church must recover the pacifist standard of primitive Christianity". Mr. Sayre quoted from C. J. Cadoux's "Early Christian Attitude to War", G. J. Heering, and Adolphe Harnack in attesting the out-and-out pacifist stand of the early Christian Church. The Church's policy was completely reversed at the Council of Arles in 314, when it was said: "They who throw away their weapons in time of peace shall be excommunicated." The worst of this Arles decision was not that men sinned against the Christian standard, but from that date on the standard was no longer seen.

Secondly, such a Church will be opposed to the methods of warfare. It is not a matter of whether a war be good or evil, or whether it be a war of defense or aggression, but the method. This method of arms, coercion of conscience, false witness, butchering of men—combatants and innocent persons, Mr. Sayre feels must be condemned.

Thirdly, such a Church will have to disentangle herself and completely dissociate herself from war and all military agencies. This, obviously, will not be easy. This will mean the Church will have to cast out military training from her own schools. It will mean reform in the chaplain service. Chaplains, he remarked, who are in the pay of the military service and wear its uniform, not the Church's, have a dual function, namely, to minister to the men in their spiritual needs and to serve as morale officers for the military machine.

Such a Church, fourthly, will have to support the agencies of peace and all who labor for the processes of peace rather than the butchery of war.

Fifthly, God's energies will have to be released into the struggle. The waiting energies of God, however, cannot be released into the struggle until men and women, sufficiently consecrated, appear to allow these divine forces to work through them. The Church confronts the choice, said Mr. Sayre, of being either an entertainment agency or really the Body of the living God, of Christ, of redeemed humanity. If it is going to check the war menace, the Church will have to undergo the breaking of bodies and pouring of blood. The Church will encounter tremendous opposition from the State, but it belongs to the Church to receive blows—it is an anvil which has worn out many hammers.

Finally, Mr. Sayre reminded his listeners of the power of minority groups and pioneers.

F. W. Kates.

Commemoration Exercises.

Under the auspices of the Virginia Historical Society, the Richmond Bar Association and the A. P. V. A. exercises were held in Richmond May 11, commemorating the centennial of the death of Chief Justice John Marshall, which occurred in Philadelphia in 1835.

In the morning a pilgrimage was conducted to old Shockoe Cemetery, where a wreath was laid on his tomb by Mr. S. M. Loftin, President of the American Bar Association, and an address was made by Dr. John Stewart Bryan, Vice-President of the Virginia Historical Society and President of the College of William and Mary. In the afternoon Mr. James M. Beck, former Solicitor-General of the United States, addressed a large audience, in which were many members of the Richmond Bar and many visitors. Mr. Beck recalled the fact that after Marshall's death in Philadelphia, when his body was being carried to the wharf en route to Richmond, the old Liberty Bell was tolled, marking not only the death of a great man, but also the passing of an era. During the tolling a rift appeared in the side of the bell, thus muting forever its voice.

John Marshall lived for many years in Richmond in a simple brick house which is still standing. In this house his gentle wife, for whom he had such a deep and abiding love, spent the last years of her invalid life. She preceded him to the grave by some five years. It is characteristic of the man that when he wrote his own epitaph all he wished recorded on the stone were the dates of his birth and death and the fact that he was the "Husband of Mary Ambler Marshall". While living in Richmond, John Marshall attended Monumental Church. His pew is marked, and there is a memorial window to him in the church bearing a representation of Moses with the tablets of the Law in his hands.

In speaking of Marshall's life, Dr. Bryan said:

"It is not the death but the life of John Marshall that gives this occasion its poignant and peculiar significance. It was tested on the field of battle; it showed his unparalleled wisdom and unshaken fortitude on the bench; it was characterized by parity and sweetness in the home, and was crowned by that final test of a strong man, which is the capacity to bear great burdens; it touched with genius and constructive imagination the form of our government, and established the strength of our Federal Constitution for the heavy tasks that lay between Yorktown and today."

One Hundred and Fiftieth Anniversary Convention.

The Annual Convention of the diocese was held May 14 and 15 at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. The convention was the occasion for the 150th anniversary of the diocese. The service of commemoration and witness was held on Tuesday evening, at which time Bishop Manning discussed "Our Heritage from the Past and Our Witness in the Present". Other speakers at the service were the Rev. E. Clowes Chorley, D. D., historiographer of the diocese, and the Rev. Stacy Waddy, secretary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. Since the diocese originally included the entire State of New York, all the eleven bishops of the present dioceses were invited to the service. The committee in charge of the anniversary included Bishop Manning, Dean Gates, Dr. Fleming, Dr. Chorley, Rev. Mr. Godolphin, Colonel J. Mayhew Wainwright, Stephen Baker and Henry Parish.

On Sunday, May 12, at 4 o'clock, in the French Church du Saint Espirt, the service was held marking the close of the fourth Annual Congress of the Federation of Huguenot Societies, in Newark, N. J. A memorial tablet was dedicated to the Rev. Alfred Victor Wittmeyer, former member of the church; the Rev. Oliver Shaw Newell, D. D., rector of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church, Yonkers, and the Rev. John Brett Langstaff, rector of St. Edmund's Church, in the Bronx, were among the speakers. Others taking part in the service were the rector, the Rev. John A. F. Maynard, D. D., and the Rev. Henry Delavan Frost, pastor of the Huguenot Memorial Church of Staten Island.

Honor Their Rector.

On Wednesday evening, May 15, at the Scarsdale Golf Club, a dinner was held in honor of the Rev. Alan R. Chalmers' fifteenth anniversary as rector of the Church of St. James the Less of Scarsdale. During Mr. Chalmers' rectorship the Church of St. James has grown from about 150 families to about 800. The communicant list has increased from about 200 to over 1,100, and the Church School has shown a great increase from some 150 children to about 500.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop

Annual Convention—Diocese and Woman's Auxiliary.

The One Hundred and Thirteenth Annual Convention of the Diocese of Georgia and the Forty-third annual meeting of the Diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, convened in St. Paul's Church, Albany, on Wednesday, May 8, with a celebration of the Holy Communion at nine-thirty o'clock. Bishop Barnwell of Idaho, Bishop Coadjutor-elect of Georgia, who has been visiting the missions throughout rural Georgia for the past month, was the celebrant, assisted by the Rev. H. S. Cobey, rector of the parish; the Rev. J. C. Skottowe, vicar of St. Luke's Church, Hawkinsville; the Ven. James B. Lawrence, D. D., rector of Calvary Church, Americus, and Archdeacon of Albany, and the Rev. S. B. McGlohon, retired, Savannah. Bishop Reese was also in the sanctuary.

Bishop Reese made an urgent plea for missions of the National Church, religious, humanitarian and educacational, which have been greatly reduced as a result of the depression.

As to the status of the diocese's finances, Bishop Reese said that the tide seems to have turned and he feels very encouraged over this. Bishop Reese also said that he regards the Forward Movement as of the greatest importance and that it demands the intelligent and earnest cooperation from the clergy and the people.

Following the service, delegates to the Woman's Auxiliary withdrew to the parish house for their meeting, and the convention opened with Bishop Reese presiding. Bishop Barnwell also attended the sessions. The high points of the convention were the joint meeting of the Convention and the Woman's Auxiliary to hear a program presented by the Department of Religious Education, at which Mrs. J. R. Cain, a member of the National Council spoke on the Woman's Auxiliary; Mrs. James W. Griffith, Executive Secretary of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education, spoke on the highlights in the young people's work, and the Rev. Armand T. Eyler, vicar of Christ Church, Valdosta, who outlined the conferences and projects to be held at Camp Reese this summer. An address was made by the Rev. Dr. T. R Ludlow, who, at Bishop's Reese's request, came to the convention to talk on "The Forward Movement"; also by Mr. H. R. Flintoff, who urged that the boys of the diocese be sent to the University of the South at Sewanee. At a joint meeting in the evening, five minute talks were made by the missionary clergy on the work that they are doing. A resolution was adopted and committee appointed to formulate plans by which a closer and different relationship than now exists between the Diocesan Convention and the Council of Colored Churchmen, may be obtained. At the present time the Council is represented at the Diocesan Convention by a clerical delegate and the separation of the conventions was at the request of the colored delegates and was made, and went into effect some years ago.

A report on the survey made on the condition of the missions in the diocese was submitted by the committee, which had worked on the survey for the past year. The Convention lasted only one day and following the election of officers, adjourned to meet in Calvary Church, Americus, on April 22, 1936.

Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Bishop.

Rev. James McDowell Dick Begins Ministry.

A congregation that filled the Church of the Good Shepherd greeted the Rev. James McDowell Dick as he conducted his first service at the church May 5. Mr. Dick succeeds the late Rev. Theodore Partrick, Jr., as rector of the Raleigh Parish.

Coming to Raleigh from Pulaski, Va., where he served for six years as rector of Christ Church, Mr. Dick utilized his sermon period for an informal talk to his new parishioners, expressing his appreciation of the courtesies showered upon him since his arrival, and voicing the hope that his ministry here would be fruitful.

"I want to informally meet and greet you, and enter into a fellowship and relationship that shall exist as long as God sees fit for it to continue. I come into your midst in an effort to make a place for myself, and not to take the place of someone else.

"We must never lose sight of the beloved memory of my predecessor, whose work will live on forever and forever.

"As a priest, my eyes look first to God, and then to His people; and I ask your prayers to the end that I may glorify God and not myself. My task is to lift up Christ before men by my daily living, by my personal conduct, by my teaching, by my pastoral relationship and by my preaching. To lift up Christ will be my theme and challenge, that in His life we may see life and find the way to Truth."

Mr. Dick attended the Convention of the Diocese of North Carolina, which opened Tuesday in St. Timothy's Church at Wilson, thus taking advantage of the opportunity to meet the clergy and laymen of the diocese in familiarizing himself with his new field of work.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman D. D. Bishop.

National Cathedral Jubilee Celebration.

In cooperation with the British Ambassador in Washington, the Bishop of Washington and the Cathedral staff arranged a special service at the National Cathedral on May 6, in celebration of the twenty-fifth Jubilee Anniversary of King George's accession to the British throne. The anniversary was observed throughout the empire's domains and at the same time a national ceremony was being held in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, the event was being celebrated in Washington. Members of the English Speaking Union and other organizations in the nation's capital were present and the Cathedral choir rendered music taken from the official program carried out in London. It was a memorable event, not only for the English, but for all in attendance.

Construction to Be Resumed on Cathedral.

It has been announced at a recent meeting of the National Cathedral Association, by Bishop Freeman, that a gift of $50,000 lately made to the Cathedral on Mount St. Alban, will enable the authorities to resume actual building on the main structure, on the north transept, after a cessation of work for about two years. This will give employment to a number of skilled workers and artisans and is good news to all who are interested in the Cathedral in Washington.

Special Service for Lenten Offerings.

In the Church of the Epiphany on May 5, Sunday-school pupils from all parts of the diocese assembled in a special service arranged by the Department of Religious Education under the direction of the Rev. Wm. R. Moody, chairman, to hear reports on the annual Lenten offering. Prizes had been offered to the pupils writing the best essay on "Why Send Missionaries?" The offering amounted to over $3,000, and will be raised to higher figures when several other schools are heard from.

Cathedral Aides.

Washington's Cathedral was the theme of a "columnist", Helen Essary, in a recent edition of a Washington paper. She stated that 20,000 visitors had come to the Cathedral in the last three Sundays—over 12,000 being counted on Easter Day. Miss Essary made special reference to the "attractive, well-informed Cathedral aides", a group of women who have volunteered to act as guides through the various sections of the building, under the general direction of Mrs. James A. Saltsman. The aides recently heard an interesting address on Gothic architecture, delivered by Professor William Hutchins, of the faculty of the American University.

Regional Conference of the Baltimore Church Lecture Foundation.

The Baltimore Church Lecture Foundation held a regional conference in Baltimore, on Friday, May 10. The general subject was "The Ministry and Mission of the Church." The program was opened with Holy Communion at Mount Calvary Church, by the Rev. William Pitt McCune, Ph. D., rector of St. Ignatius Church, New York City. Luncheon followed in Grace and St. Peter's Parish House. At 2:30 the Rev. Leicester C. Lewis, rector of St. Martin's in the Fields, Chestnut Hill, Pa., and the Rev. William M. V. Hoffman, Jr., S. S. J. E., addressed the Conference. At 5:30 a conference for Young People, conducted by the Rev. W. H. Dunphy, was held in St. David's Church, followed by supper. At eight o'clock Bishop Irving P. Johnson, of Colorado, addressed a mass meeting in the Church of St. Michael and All Angels.

A Thanksgiving Service for the Reign of King George V.

In old St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, on May 6, at noon, the diocese held a thanksgiving service to Almighty God to signalize twenty-five years of the auspicious reign of His Majesty, King George V. The boys' choir of St. Paul's furnished the music and the Rt. Rev. Edward T. Helfenstein, D. D., Bishop of Maryland; the Rev. Dr. Arthur B. Kinsolving, D. D., rector of St. Paul's; the Rev. Noble C. Powell, D. D., the Rev. Philip J. Jensen, and the Rev. S. Tagart Steele, Jr., D. D., took part in the service.

The processional hymn, "God of Our Fathers, Whose Almighty Hand," was most effective, and the addition of the flags of the United States and Great Britain in the procession made it inspiring. The Rev. Dr. Kinsolving made the address and reviewed the brilliant reign of King George. He stated that the interest of the entire nation and the world was centered in the man and the throne of England today was firmer than when he ascended it. Immediately before the address the congregation sang "God Save Our Gracious King".

Dr. Henry Barton Jacobs, President of the English-Speaking Union in Baltimore, was chairman of the Committee on Arrangements for the service.

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop.

Bishop's Day Celebration.

Boys and girls under fourteen years of age from more than 200 Sunday schools in this diocese centered in the Ritten house Square section of the city in a "Bishop's Day" celebration, during which the children were the guests of the Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, Bishop of the diocese, at a Reception in the Church House, followed by a Special Service for children in the Church of the Holy Trinity.

The "Bishop's Day" celebration was under the direction of the Diocesan Commission on Church Schools of the Department of Religious Education; more than a score of the Junior Choirs from various parishes, in their vestments, participated in the service following the reception.

The Rev. Howard R. Weir, rector of Holy Trinity, welcomed the children, and Bishop Taitt made a special address. It was planned to make the service exclusively a Children's Service of praise and worship. The "Bible Reading" or "Lesson" were given a dramatic touch by groups of boys and girls interpreting the thought in appropriate costume and carrying the musical instruments mentioned in some of the Psalms. Children selected from each of the participating Church Schools, in another part of the service, were dressed in costumes representing the peoples of all nations in the world. The pageantry of the service in the church was arranged by the Diocesan Commission on Religious Pageantry.

The afternoon's program began at three o'clock, when the children with the help of guides from the Student Councils of Historic Old Christ Church and St. Paul's Church, Chestnut Hill, escorted the children through the Church House. A group of the smaller children were in the receiving line with the Bishop as he greeted each of the children.

Easter Mystery Play Successfully Presented.

The Power of His Resurrection, an Easter mystery play by Rev. Carroll Lund Bates, was presented Easter evening under the direction of Mrs. F. V. Baer, of St. Matthew's Church, Woodhaven, New York.

Mrs. Baer has studied pageantry and delights to use her gift to enrich the life of the Church. Each character was carefully studied and the costumes were made true to the life of the time. The play was colorful and beautiful and the teaching was impressive.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Trinity Cathedral Hold Special Jubilee Service.

Sunday morning, May 12, in Trinity Cathedral, Pittsburgh, Bishop Mann was the special preacher for a service in connection with the King's Jubilee. The service was arranged at the suggestion of the British Consul resident in Pittsburgh and was broadcast over WCAE, one of the National Broadcasting Company stations.

The music, under the direction of Mr. Alfred Hamer, A. G. O., organist and choirmaster of the Cathedral, was in keeping with the English tradition including several of the hymns sung at the Jubilee service the Sunday before in Westminster Abbey. Kipling's Recessional to an old English tune was sung as an anthem. Special invitations were sent by the Bishop, Dean and the British Consul to all consuls in the city. Many of them were present in uniform. The British flag was carried in the procession with the American flag. Dean Moor read the service.

The following prayer was written by Bishop Mann especially for this service:

Almighty God, into whose Holy City the nations of the world shall one day bring, each its especial honor and glory, we would at this time render to Thee high praise and hearty thanks for the contribution which under Thy gracious Providence the English peoples have made toward the peace and welfare of all mankind.

We recognize with gratitude the great gifts which other nations have made for the benefit of the whole world, but more especially we would thank Thee for the supreme blessing of political liberty, of free speech, of free assembly, of a free press which have been wrought out for the world through the long years of English history.

COLLECT FOR THE FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER EASTER.

O Almighty God, Who alone canst order the unruly wills and affections of sinful men; Grant unto Thy people that they may love the thing which Thou dost promise; that so among the sundry and manifold changes of the world our hearts may surely there be fixed, where true Joys are to be found; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

TAUGHT BY CHRIST.

"He called the unknown best
From Peter, James and the rest
Who lent their lives to His amazing grace
Of humor, irony, and insight; base
Was base no more: and even commonplace
Became uncommon; their very names grew great
To move a world that would have thought them
Simple, stupid, ordinary men
As once they had been, till Christ
Upcaught them in the gold He sought,
Drew forth their inmost selves.
Can He again do that, if you
Or I have faith to ask?"

The Citizen of Tomorrow.

The greatness of a state lies in its manhood and womanhood. The sacred duty of a commonwealth is to produce pure and noble citizens:—men who are attached to home and to state; men who are courageous in war and vigilant in peace; God fearing men; educated men. A state's noblest purpose is to create citizens like these, to rear them by preparing her children for manhood and womanhood. The state's priceless possession is the individual citizen, and the child of today is the citizen of tomorrow.—Southern Christian Advocate.

The Exhaustless Christ.

A distinction which it is very necessary for us to make, is that between our constantly changing and enlarging understanding of Christ and the Infinite, Changeless Christ Himself. Our understanding of Christ, and of the truth which centers in Him, may change, indeed, must change, as our minds and characters grow and enlarge and expand. As the various experiences of today present themselves to us, we see how the Infinite Christ fits perfectly into all possible experiences and situations of life. We have the promise of Christ Himself, that the Holy Spirit will reveal to us the things which pertain to Him.

But Christ is Himself the Infinite, Changeless Saviour, who is always far out beyond humanity, calling us on to Himself. He is the Perfect Goal of humanity, as well as the only Way to that Perfect Goal. No matter how long humanity may continue to live upon the earth; no matter how many new truths men may discover in the future; no matter how radically life on earth may change by human initiative and human skill; we may be sure of one thing—we will never get beyond the Changeless Christ of God. Beyond Him there is nothing. He is the end, the goal, of all. In Him all things consist. In Him all truth centers—truths of science, truths of history, truths of philosophy, truths of education. He is the center of life and love and truth in the universe of God. The only progress possible is progress toward Him.

All the study, all the experiments, of the ages to come will never exhaust Christ. He is the exhaustless Christ because He is the Infinite, Changeless Son of God. Let history study Him. Let science study Him. Let psychology study Him. We have nothing to fear. He is the Truth, and the Truth will at last prevail.

But we must carefully distinguish between our narrow, imperfect, but ever enlarging, conceptions of the Truth and the Truth itself. Let man conquer the universe. Let him explore its secrets in every realm. Let him analyze the stars of farthest space. Let him study the realm of the infinitestimal. Let man master the world. Let him subdue it, and put all things under his feet. And when man has done all that human skill and human wisdom and human investigation can do, he will still see, on beyond him, in the white light of eternity, the Majestic, Changeless, Exhaustless Christ, the center of all truth in every realm and in every form of existence.

And the life of man will always be imperfect, apart from that Christ. Human society will ever be imperfect, apart from that Christ. He will ever remain the Way of God the Father, the Truth about God the Father, and the Life of God the Father; and we will come to the Father only by Him.—Dr. G. H. O'Donnell, in Western Recorder.

Prayer.

Prayer is the vital artery that consciously connects us with God. It is the channel through which our thoughts and lives go up unto Him and His life flows down into us. It is the common life we live with God as our Father.

But can our prayers make any difference with God? Will the God of the constellations bend His ear to our pitifully childlike and often childish cries? It is an old question and has been often answered and yet we persist in asking it. Do the questions of a child have any influence with the father or mother, of the scholar have any value to the teacher? All our questions are prayers, and life could not be possible without them. Our prayers to God do not give Him any information that can change Him, but they put us in a different relation to Him so that He can deal with us in a different way. Prayer tunes us into harmony with God and makes us sensitive and receptive to His wisdom and will, and thereby enables Him to answer us. It is strange to hear men perpetually asking this question in this day when we are told and shown that the whole universe is a quivering organism that is sensitive to our every act and word and responds to us with corresponding action.

God is nigh us, even in our hearts, closer than breathing, and we can speak to Him and He with us, and thus our life in Him is vitalized and wrought into harmony and unity with His life. And so Jesus taught us a fundamental and perfectly reasonable duty when He bade us always to pray and not to faint.

And prayer is not the privilege and duty of only a few. It is not the office of the preacher and priest only. It is not open only to those with a special gift such as a musician or painter must have to enter the ivory temple of art. It is open to all, and no eloquent or grammatical words are necessary to express it, but a few broken words that come from the heart may be most expressive of all and bring the surest blessing from heaven. We need more prayer, individual and private and public prayer in our lives. The secret of Pentecost was fervent prayer, and this is a fundamental need and expression of the Christian life that opens all the gates of heaven and brings down showers of blessing.—Presbyterian Banner.

THE RAISING OF LAZARUS.

St. John: 11:14-44.

Monica Williams.

The Master, at the grave of Lazarus stood
And to the Father lifted up His eyes,
For through this death, Christ sought to show men God—
That God alone gives life to him who dies.

To God alone in prayer then Jesus spake,
In thankfulness that He did always hear,
And prayed that through this death might God awake
A knowledge of the Father's love and care.

Then at Thy bidding Lord, did Lazarus come
Forth from the tomb in grave clothes bound around;
That all might know Thy Holy Will was done
Through God alone, where Grace and Love abound.

But thankfulness, Oh Lord, was Thy first care,
Though grief for friends constraineth Thee to weep,
Above Thy sorrow was Thy praise, a prayer
For Thee with God, true faith did always keep.

And so, Oh Lord, Thy Holy Will was done,
At Thy command the dead arose to live,
For God in Thee, and Thou in Him art One,
Because, like Him, Thou livest but to give.

And so, Oh Lord, when we have learned of Thee
That life is but the gift of self to all,
From pain, from death, from self, we shall be free,
Like angels then shall praise alone enthrall.

Banishing the "I Don't Know".

"Mother! just see the flower I picked for you!"

"How lovely, dear! Where did you find it?"

"Over in the woods—it was so pretty! What kind of a flower is it, mother?"

I looked down at the flushed, expectant face of my small daughter, disliking to utter the trite and all too common, "I don't know". But I said it, and some of the eagerness died out of the expressive little face turned so confidently to mine. Her joy in giving the flower was lessened. Mother didn't even know its name!

Several times that morning as I busied myself with the numerous tasks of housekeeping, Janet's disappointed face appeared before me. I felt helpless; and still disturbed when I had finished my work, I sat down in my easy chair to think it over.

One thing was certain, mothers couldn't know all the flowers and trees that came to the notice of their little ones. High school botany (if one goes to high school) is so often just another study to be "passed". One retains little of it in later life, unless perhaps one has a special interest in the out-of-doors and so carries on.

But if a mother doesn't know a certain thing, there is one sure way to learn—through the library and its books. So I reasoned, and, therefore, that afternoon my small daughter and I went shopping.

She was much mystified at my purchases, but quite content to wait until mother explained. First, we bought the gayest, most attractive pencil we could find, then a small, well-bound notebook, a bottle of mucilage, a scrap-book and a roll of cellophane paper. When we arrived home I explained the various items.

"You see, Janet, mother does not know the names of all the flowers that grow and help to make the world a lovely place, but she would like to know more of them. So bring the flower that you found this morning, and I'll show you what all these things are for.

"That's right! Now, dear, this pencil is yours, and we shall use it whenever we use the book. In the book we are going to write down all the things we can find out about this flower. What color is it? How tall is it? How many petals has it, and what is their shape? What are its leaves like, and where did we find it growing"

The answers to all these questions we entered in the little book. Then we placed the flower carefully between the leaves of another book, one that was large and heavy, putting a bit of tracing paper on either side so that the book would not be stained from the moisture.

In three days we took the dry, pressed flower and mounted it with a cellophane covering, to hold it in place and protect it, in the scrap-book. The mucilage was placed along all four edges of the cellophane, which had been cut just large enough to cover the flower and leave a margin.

In the meantime, my small daughter and I had been to the library. We were fortunate in securing a very complete book on New England wild flowers. Imagine Janet's joy when we found the picture of her unknown beauty as well as its name and many interesting facts concerning it, all of which we wrote carefully under the pressed and mounted flower in the scrap-book.

Since then we have found and studied many flowers, and the book is nearly filled. Janet is trying hard to improve her penmanship so that she may make the written entries next spring.

Not only have we made a flower book, but we have bird and insect books, too. We have cut and collected pictures of birds and insects, and written interesting facts and stories concerning them. We used the notebook here also, listing the various characteristics of the bird or bug which held our interest. Then, later, we obtained books at the library which supplied the information regarding that that we wanted. Janet's dislike of spiders and darning needles is long a thing of the past, for she is too much interested in them now to be disturbed by them.

The results? A happy mother and daughter, each with an increasing love for the beauties of nature, and for the tiny creatures that fill their places in the great world, and, too, a better understanding of the Creator.—Florence Tercott Poor, in Nat. Kindergarten Asso. Release.

Children and the Sermon.

For myself I love to see children and very young people sleep in church. If I see a child sleeping sweetly against a mother's sleeve, I can even interrupt myself in my speech with a swift act of gratitude to God, that I have seen with my own eyes the authentic beginning of an undying loyalty.

In my own case, who for many years, say, from three to nine, was wont to sleep through the long prayer and the sermon (and neither of them in those days could be too long for me), religion never was a thing of the mere reason. Therefore, later on, when I read in Nietzche that "any one who believes for reasons, will for other reasons disbelieve," I agreed, and remembered my childhood. In the intervening years I must have read a thousand books on faith, for and against. I am ready to bear witness that not a single one of them touched me at the roots of my being one way or another. Faith had become for me a fixation, or whatever may be the new word for something which is as incommunicable and as safe as the final nucleus of one's consciousness and personality.

For faith was always something inseparable from life, and life as I had tasted it on those perfect occasions, when I fell asleep in the House of God, and, on waking, was greeted by two eyes full of love and pride, and got down on to my small feet to join in the Doxology.

I protest that unfortunate by comparison are the children of Christian people in our day!—British Weekly.

"In one thing only was Martin Luther great, gigantic, arresting, irresistible and victorious, the strong man of his times, transcending a thousand years of history in order to thrust his age out of the age of tradition into new paths. To the Vestries of the Church

At the end of last year THE CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION had insured the property of 2,365 Episcopal churches, as well as that of many institutions of the Church.

The increase in the number of churches insured is shown below:

1929	330
1930	803
1931	1,224
1932	1,600
1933	2,035
1934	2,365

Some other reason than that of the desire of the Church to support an institution organized solely for its benefit is necessary to explain the great increase in the number of Episcopal churches insured with it. Without the economies afforded by the Corporation, the advantageous conditions that are granted, and the fact that its settlements of fire losses have been satisfactory, the progress shown by such impressive figures could not have been made.

FOR THE CHILDREN

JOY.

At the children's Easter festival Sunday afternoon at St. Paul's Church, Alexandria, Va., Rev. Percy Foster Hall read the following original verses:

Easter JOY, a happy word,
Is made of letters three,
J O Y, like that
As simple as can be.

First is J, for JESUS first,
First, last and always! So
No hero, saint or loved one dear,
Ahead of Him may go.

Second is O—for OTHERS, yes,
Let this my motto be;
Help me to live for OTHERS, Lord,
That I may live for Thee.

Third Y—for YOU, for you, yourself,
That puts you last, you see!
God and your neighbor, then yourself,
The last one of the three.

If you put Y as number
And Others, number 2,
And Jesus third—that's Jesus last,
Just see what you will do.

Y O J, what does that spell?
No word, not any sense;
So any life that's spelled that way,
Is only a pretense.

But J O Y is what we love;
And this you'll find is true,
Put JESUS first and OTHERS next,
And JOY will live in YOU.

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter XIX.

The Missionary Box.

M. L. G.

"Dear Winnie,

"Mother is writing this, but it is really from me. I did like the violets. I know just where they came from, near the steps, under the window. The nurse put them in a little bowl, and they did not droop more than violets often do. And I liked the pretty picture of my candlestick. Can you draw Noel for me? I don't think he would hold still like a candlestick. But it doesn't matter if you can't draw him, for I will soon be coming home, I and Mother, too. I have to lie still in a thing called a plaster cast, but that's nothing. And some day I'll come back here and they will take it off and I'll see how well I can get along all by myself. That will be fun. Everything at home will be fun, too.

"Did my redbirds come back this year? Kent's poor arm, it hurt I know. There was a tiny baby and they brought it in so I could see it. Winnie, it was littler than my big doll, and yet its name is Augustus. Augustus couldn't decide which fist to put in his month. And then he couldn't even find his mouth, and had to cry. So then, with his mouth being open so nice and wide, he found it with the fist. He was just six days old, which is a pleasant age for a baby. I almost couldn't love Amy so much when I thought of Augustus.

"My nurse is come in with medicine in a little glass, and chicken broth for afterward. So now good-bye, from Claire."

"See, Aunt Mollie," said Winnie, as she read Claire's first letter from the hospital, "she even wrote 'Claire' herself. It is shaky, a little, but I can read it. And to think of having her back!"

But two months were to pass before Claire came home. One slight backset and then another, a slower gaining of strength than had been hoped, delayed the home-coming. But Kent grew strong again, using his arm more freely all the time. He could run about now and play with Philip without Aunt Mollie's constant watchfulness.

"But, Kent, honey," Aunt Mollie urged one bright morning in early April, "don't climb so high. Just think, if you were to fall out of that tree—" Aunt Mollie stood at the foot of the tree looking somewhat helplessly up, to whom Kent and Philip were moving about in the branches. They had contrived to get a board into the tree, and Philip had the hammer and four big nails.

"We're the Swiss Fambly Wobinson, Aunt Mollie," Philip called down; "we couldn't be a Swiss Fambly unless in a twee. Oh—'scuse me!" he added quickly as the hammer fell from his hand, just missing Aunt Mollie's head.

"Just hold it up a tiny bit, Aunt Mollier," said Philip, scrambling down to the lower branches, "I'll weach for it. Hammers haven't any arms, they can't bweak them like Kent. That's a good thing. They have heads, though—" he added, thoughtfully, as he took the hammer from Aunt Mollie's upstretched arm.

"So have I, and mine's not made of iron," Aunt Mollie answered, laughing. "So I'll take it from under the tree. Do be careful, though, boys!"

"I won't wun, Aunt Mollie," Kent said seriously, "nor I won't jump, either, up here."

"And we'll have pretty soon a good house made. Could you come up and be Mrs. Wobinson, Aunt Mollie?" Philip looked down hopefully, struck by his new idea.

"Well, not this morning, Phil. Mrs. Robinson has too much to do just now to go to housekeeping in the trees. But if you don't have a single accident I'll bring the Swiss Family a little luncheon about twelve o'clock."

"We won't have a accident! Not even the hammer won't, Aunt Mollie!" they called after her.

Just as the clock struck twelve, Aunt Mollie reappeared, carrying a waiter, and followed by Uncle Danger, bringing the children's small table and two little chairs. And just as the table was set, a buggy turned in at the driveway.

"Dear life, there's company, or a bookseller—too late now, as the Robinsons are ready for luncheon." Aunt Mollie had sent the little boys to wash hands and faces, and this being over with suspicious promptness, they were running out again.

"Well, never mind, boys! I was going to have Uncle Danger bring me out a chair and take some luncheon with you—but go ahead, maybe it's just an agent. No, there're bonnets—why, Miss Parmenter, good morning! And Mrs. Innis. Come right in, or we can sit here on the porch, it's so warm this morning. Uncle Danger, take the buggy 'round." Aunt Mollie led the ladies to the porch with a little sigh, for the Robinsons' luncheons in which she had expected to join.

"You let them eat at noon?" Miss Parmenter asked, as soon as she was seated, "I cannot approve such a plan. In my youth children were taught regular hours and restraint of appetite. I myself have never lost the benefit of those lessons."

"Well, now, Henny, dear," said Mrs. Innis, "I like an occasional bite between meals, it keeps up the strength. I had my hot milk and soda crackers before leaving, Henny, or I should be quite weak by now. I always shall feel like a mother to this little family," she added to Miss Mollie, "since I had the entire responsibility of them so long. Do you feel like a mother to them, Miss Mollie?"

"Something between that and plain Aunt."

"Henrietta is my name!" exploded Miss Parmenter.

"Ah, yes, Henny, dear, only that's too much for every-day use," Mrs. Innis said, undisturbed.

"Tell me how the missionary box comes on," Aunt Mollie said, hoping to lead the conversation into safer channels.

"I think we need our dear Rector's wife," Mrs. Innis answered, a little unhappily. "We have three ball dresses, and so many hats. They live on the prairie, the letter said. Perhaps the prairie wind may blow the hats away, and so it may be quite convenient to have a good supply."

"Foolishness, Cynthia!" cried Miss Parmenter, "I myself always say plain clothes for a mission box. If a man wants the world, let him go after the world and not pretend to be a missionary. Hats!"

"At any rate, more than hats and party dresses are needed, "Aunt Mollie put in, "and I want to contribute something. How many children are there?"

"Four, two boys and two girls."

"I'll make each little girl a dress, no trouble at all. I'll get their ages and have them all run up in a day or two. I have such a pretty pattern, all over frills, I've been using for Winnie."

"Frills!" cried Miss Parmenter in the same tone in which she had denounced hats.

"Why certainly, frills. And I'll buy each boy a suit, my paper from the city is full of sales. With a pocketknife in the pocket of each pair of trousers!" ended Aunt Mollie, firmly.

"But, dear Miss Mollie, if they should cut themselves?" Mrs. Innis questioned.

"That's their lookout. Mine is to see they get 'em."

"You quite inspire us to make it a good box, Miss Mollie," Mrs. Innis said, a little pink coming into her cheeks.

"Alice Trent felt somewhat the same," Miss Parmenter admitted. "Of course we must uphold the reputation of the Parish in doing the work creditably. But frills!"

A little later Aunt Mollie turned back from watching the buggy as it disappeared from the drive into the roadway. The Swiss Family, awed by the nearness of Miss Parmenter, had had a rather silent meal. But now they fell upon her with shouts.

"We saved yours, Aunt Mollie, all but Phil took just one of your little cakes."

"That's all right, only let me have my buttermilk. I feel a bit weak, as Mrs. Innis would say. But those children on the prairie—they'll have frills and knives in their pockets, that's one thing sure!"

A Walk With the Babies.

Winter had almost gone from Forest-town. The trees along Lakewood Avenue were swelling out their buds. March winds were beginning to whisper around the corners. Eleanor, Carolyn and Louise were delighted. Now they could get out often and walk together or hike to Lakewood Park.

"Eleanor," called Carolyn from the street, "please come and walk with me; it is wonderful out here."

Eleanor looked at Jackie and Jean playing marbles in the yard. Mother had left them in her care while she took Baby Bess to buy shoes. She could not leave them to walk with Carolyn. "I'd love it, Carolyn," she called back, cheerily, "but I have Jackie and Jean here. I can't leave them."

"Bring them on with you," Carolyn called. "I'll look after Jackie, and you can have Jean. We'll have even more fun."

The children were delighted. They threw down their marbles and ran toward Carolyn. Carolyn took Jackie's chubby little hand in her own, and Jean clung to Eleanor. Soon they were in front of Louise's house.

"Louise," called Carolyn, "come out and go for a walk with us. Bring Billy, too. We have Jackie and Jean."

Louise and Billy were glad to come. They had been wishing for something different to do.

They walked very slowly, enjoying the balmy March day, feeling the wind on their faces and in their hair.

As they passed an old house that had been vacant all winter, they heard a baby crying. They looked toward its windows, and saw shades and curtains inside. "Surely someone has moved in here," Carolyn exclaimed.

"Yes," Louise answered, "I heard that a new family had taken this house. I think they have a little girl about our age, too."

The three girls stopped. "Maybe if we will stand here a few minutes we can see her somewhere," said Eleanor, as she turned toward the old house. "She will surely be around."

As she spoke a shy little girl came into the yard and looked at the girls on the walk. She didn't say anything, but her eyes seemed to tell them that she was lonely, and that she missed the girls she had moved away from very, very much. She didn't know how to make new friends.

"Let's go into see her," said Carolyn, who was naturally very friendly and who knew how the little girl must feel.

"Should we go in without dressing to call? We don't know her yet."

But Carolyn would have nothing else. "You can tell from her looks that she is lonely, Louise. We can be her first friends in Forest-town."

"Oh, let's!" said Eleanor.

So the three little girls with the three little boys turned into the driveway that led up to the big house that had been vacant all winter.

The little girl they met was Elaine Waldrop. Elaine's father was a merchant. Her mother was dead, and her big sister, Olive, kept house for them. Olive was married, and her husband lived there, too. Olive had a little girl four years old. Her name was Dot. She was a dear little cotton-top, with the bluest eyes in the world.

"Can't you walk with us, Elaine?" Carolyn invited. "You can bring Dot along, too; we are each one caring for one child."

That was the best walk of the whole year. The girls became acquainted with Elaine, and Elaine learned their names, which little brother belonged to which little girls, and where they all lived. She also heard of the boys, Carl and Albert. She thought she might like her new home. Forest-town wasn't so cold, after all. It wasn't so lonely. She knew that she would miss Ethel and Clara and Estelle just terribly; but, really, she felt deep down in her heart that she had never met sweeter girls than Carolyn, Louise and Eleanor, anywhere.

"Isn't she sweet?" said Carolyn to the girls, as they were returning to their own homes. "I do not think we have ever had a nicer girl on our street."

"She is pretty, too," Eleanor added, liberally, "even if she does have freckles."

"Her freckles aren't bad at all, with her dark red hair," Louise commented, "and did you notice her eyes are brown?"

They were at home. The little boys were ready to play marbles again.

"I'm very glad we stopped; thanks to you for the suggestion, Carolyn," Eleanor said, as she went back to her work.

"And so am I, Carolyn. Let's walk every pretty day. Good-bye."

Louise was at home, and Carolyn slipped through the hedge into her own backyard.—Louise G. Thompson, in Christian Advocate.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Uugle and the Doctor.

William Allen Ward.

Once, long ago, there lived tiny folk and big folk, too, in a southern village beside a lazy river that led away into a dark, reeking swamp, where grandfather said the big, ugly, fiery eyed monster, the Uugle, lived.

Fishermen often wandered into the dark swamp and come home very sick, for hidden far back in the tangled brush of the swamp, the Uugle blew his foul breath while the fishermen slept, making them very sick indeed. No one had ever seen this terrible monster, but villagers knew somewhere in the reeking swamp it crouched, coming out at night to blow its hot breath that scorched men with fevers who ventured into the dark abyss of the swamp country.

Old folks frightened little children at night by telling them: "Now, Dick, Betty, Bob and Jamie, if you do not hurry to bed the bad, ugly old Uugle from the swamp will creep right up to our window and blow his foul breath, and you will surely be ill."

In the village lived a tiny, cotton-headed boy whom everybody called Frosty because his hair was white, so white, and because he always smiled and never seemed to be afraid of this ferocious monster. Everybody else whispered low when they mentioned the word "Uugle".

One day Frosty, whose real name was Robert Byas, was talked to by Old Man Grimes, the village pharmacist. The druggist had gone duck hunting down in the swamp and the Uugle had blown his breath. The druggist was feverish and chills raced up and down his spine.

"Been in the Uugle country," the apothecary said, moaning, "shot a few ducks way back among the cypress . . . you know, way back where you have to wade in the water. That is good duck country, but the Uugle must stay right around there, for I could feel his breath, and it made me feel mighty ill."

As the druggist swallowed a pill, Frosty smiled and said in a low but determined tone, "Just wait until I get grown, I'm going to kill that monster! I'm going to be a very learned man—a scientist. I'm going to find out all about this thing people call the Uugle."

"You are a brave lad, sonny," the druggist said, shaking his wise old head in a knowing way. "I've heard people, young like you, say that before, but they never really did it. Some did try, I'll admit. And now they are dead of 'Uugle poison'. Others just forgot about what they said when they were young and went away to other places or stayed here in the village and never amounted to much. You know, sonny, Uugle breath seems to poison people for life. They get lazy and sleepy and never do try very hard to make anything out of themselves."

Years passed. Little Frosty became a man. He went away, just as he had said, to a big university. There he studied medicine, and soon he was well known as a great scientist. Then, one day, the doctor came back to the village beside the drowsy river—the village in the Uugle country. The old druggist now was, indeed, much older. He had retired from business, leaving his grandson in charge. But the old man still remembered Frosty and his boyhood ambition to be an Uugle killer. He watched with interest.

The doctor went about his way in a very strange manner, indeed. Soon folks began to talk and some said: "The Uugle has got him, has blown his breath and the doctor is going insane."

The doctor spent most of his time way back in the swamp. He seemed to be studying mosquitoes all the time, and the swamp people called him the "mosquito man". Then one day a big engineering crew came, and the government, under the doctor's direction, started draining the swamp. Wagging tongues at first said: 'This can't be done." Almost everyone was very doubtful, but the old druggist nodded his wise head and whispered low to those who would listen: "This young scientist is going to kill the Uugle."

Time passed and soon the big, reeking swamp was drained of all its sluggist water. Parks were built where once the Uugle blew its breath, and the laughter of happy children rang out where once were heard the groans of people stricken by the Uugle.

One day the people of the village gave a great celebration in honor of the great doctor who had killed the Uugle, for now the monster was very dead. The famous doctor arose after the banquet to make a talk, and before he finished he said: "You people gave this monster its wrong name—you should not have called it the Uugle—its real name is malaria."

MRS. WASP AND MRS. BEE.

Said Mrs. Wasp to Mrs. Bee,
"Will you a favor do me?
There's something I can't understand,
Please, ma'am, explain it to me.

"Why do men build you a house,
And coax you to go in it,
While me, your cousin, they'll not let
Stay near them for a minute?

"I have a sting, I do confess,
And should not like to lose it;
But so have you, and when you're vexed
I'm very sure you use it."

"Well," said the bee, "to you, no doubt,
It does seem rather funny;
But people soon forget the stings
Of those who give them honey."

—American Bee Journal.

I PRAY.

I pray for grace to keep my heart,
For strength to take the manly part,
And wisdom to decide;
For sweet humility to wait,
An peace to trust in any state,
And love to temper pride.

I pray for courage, then, to dare
Among my fellows anywhere
If honor be denied:
For boldness to devote my hand
Against the bigot's loud demand
When justice is defied.

I pray for royal self-command
Where blindness cannot understand,
For honesty's delight;
For all the gifts that make a friend,
And all the best that heaven can send,
To live and die aright.

—Robert MacGowan.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

May we as a people be duly grateful for this inestimable benefit, and may we show forth our gratitude by guarding it against all attack, whether from individual ambition or from the tyranny of organized minorities.

And may the English-speaking peoples of the world unite in the preservation of this dearly bought freedom, until in the course of thy Providence it shall become the secure and happy possession of all the nations.

We ask it all in the Name of Jesus Christ, our Lord.

Amen.

Personal Notes

The Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., of Delaware, was the preacher at morning and evening services in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, on May 12. In the evening, the annual Florence Nightingale service, under the auspices of the St. Barnabas' Guild, was held, attended by several hundred nurses in uniform, representing many Detroit hospitals.

The Rt. Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, D. D., Bishop of Lexington, preached Sunday, May 12, in the Cathedral in Hamilton, Ontario, at the One Hundredth Anniversary Celebration. Bishop Abbott was dean of the Cathedral for eight years. He will also address the Synod of Niagara during the week. The Rev. Francis F. Lynch, of Lexington, will act as the bishop's chaplain.

The Rev. W. Russell Bowie, D. D., rector of Grace Church, preached at the Hill School, Pottsdam, Pa., on Sunday, May 12, on the occasion of the annual alumni reunion.

Miss Maria Johns Hammond will hold a Bible Class for Clergymen, 2309 Maryland Avenue, Baltimore, Md., Mondays at three o'clock. Miss Hammond made a study of Religious subjects ever since she taught her first Sunday-school class, Memorial Church, Bolton Street, Baltimore, 1877. Her brother's class later, the Rev. Kinsey Johns Hammond, D. D., of Wilmington, Del., and Culpeper, Va. As her viewpoint is that of a literary as well as a church woman, it may be slightly and pleasingly different from that of the average clergyman.

Appointments.

The Rev. Frederic John Eastman, son of the Rev. F. S. Eastman, has been appointed assistant to the Rev. Charles Ramsay at St. Paul's, Jackson, Mich. For the past three years he has been assisting his father at St. Peter's Church, Akron, Ohio, and was Field Secretary of St. Philip's Society, lecturing in colleges from New York to Chicago on Christ's Message in Religious Art.

The Rev. W. S. Turner has been appointed to the Executive Staff of the Chaplain's Association of the United States Army. The talk which he gave before the Annual Convention of Army Chaplains is being printed in the "Army Chaplain", the official organ of the Association. He is the Canon of the Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip and rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Atlanta, Ga.

The Rev. Robert C. Masterton, of the Diocese of Washington, has accepted a call to Grace Church, Alexandria, Va., and has taken charge.

The Rev. William B. Sperry's appointment as vicar of Grace Chapel in the parish of Grace Church, New York, has been announced. Mr. Sperry succeeds the Rev. Francis A. Sanborn, who has been compelled to give up the work because of illness. The Chapel serves as a neighborhood center for the community. Mr. Sperry is a former business man, who four years ago decided to enter the ministry. He graduates this month from the General Theological Seminary in New York, where he is president of the student body. He was ordained on April 24 in Trenton, New Jersey, by the Rt. Rev. Ralph E. Urban, Suffragan Bishop of New Jersey. Mr. Sperry distinguished himself in military service during the war, receiving a personal citation from General Pershing. He was a Regimental Sergeant Major and following the Armistice served as Manager of the Casualty Office at General Headquarters in France. Before entering the General Thological Seminary, he was Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce at Delray, Fla., and during that time a vestryman and secretary-treasurer of St. Paul's Mission there. He is a native of Florida. His appointment as vicar was made by Dr. W. Russell Bowie, rector of Grace Church, and ratified by the vestry.

The Rev. M. K. P. Brannan, formerly curate at St. John's Church, Los Angeles, Calif., is rector of St. Matthias' Church, Los Angeles, Calif. (L. A.). Address, 1830 S. Normandie Avenue. Effective May 1.

The Rev. James DeW. Hubbard, formerly on the staff of St. Paul's Church, Burlington, Vt., has become rector of the Church of St. Luke the Beloved Physician, Saranac Lake, N. Y.

The Rev. George W. Provost, formerly curate at St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, Texas (W. T.), became priest in charge of Trinity Mission, Baytown, Texas, effective May 1.

Ordinations.

Priest.

The Rev. Eugene S. Hallam was advanced to the Priesthood by Bishop Helfenstein in Christ Church, Queen Caroline Parish, Guilford, Howard County, Maryland. The Rev. C. Sturges Ball, D. D., Professor of the Virginia Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va., preached the sermon, and the Rev. Percy M. Ferne, minister-in-charge of St. James' Church, Irvington, Baltimore, presented the candidate. Mr. Hallam is a graduate of Bexley Hall, Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio. He will continue as rector of St. Mark's Church, Highland, and Christ Church, Queen Caroline Parish, Guilford, Md.

The Rev. E. Percy Bartlam was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Quin of Texas in Trinity Church, Houston, April 11. The ordinand, presented by the Rev. Thomas N. Carruthers, is assistant at Trinity Church, Houston, with address at 1011 Holmon Street. The Rev. Everett H. Jones preached the sermon.

Deacon.

The Rev. Irwin H. Bauder was ordained to the Diaconate by Bishop Mann at St. Paul's Church Kittanning, Penn., Friday, April 26. The Litany was read by the Rev. Thomas J. Bigham, rector of the Church of the Advent, Pittsburgh; sermon was preached by the Rev. Louis L. Perkins, rector of St. Paul's Church, Kittanning; the candidates was presented by the Rev. Wm. F. Shero, Ph. D., president of the Standing Committee, and the Rev. F. C. P. Hurd, rector of the Church of the Advent, Jeannette. The Rev. Mr. Bauder was a minister of the Evangelical Church before entering our ministry, and a candidate for Holy Orders from St. Mark's Church, Johnstown. He studied in the past year at the General Seminary. He will be in charge of a group of associated missions in Armstrong County under the direction of the Rev. Louis L. Perkins.

Joseph Forster Hogben was ordained to the diaconate by Bishop Fiske of Central New York in St. Paul's Church, Syracuse, N. Y., April 16. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Claud H. Leyfield, and the Rev. Henry S. Sizer preached the sermon.

IN MEMORIAM.

Canon Dyson Hague.

After a ten-day illness in Galt Hospital following a stroke on April 26, while at Preston Springs, the Rev. Dr. Dyson Hague passed to the Life Eternal.

Canon Hague was a forceful worker in everything he undertook. He was a powerful preacher, an enthusiastic writer and a beloved teacher. Loyalty is a great word in life, one of life's greatest. It was one of the outstanding qualities of Dr. Hague. He was loyal to the principles of Wycliffe College. He was loyal to our grand old Church. Above all and embracing all, he was loyal to his Saviour. It was no mere head knowledge that Dr. Hague had of his Lord. He had a deep religious experience. This he constantly proclaimed. He preached this gospel in season and out of season and with a ringing conviction and triumphant note that is contagious.

Born in Toronto, the son of the late versity College and Wycliffe College, Toronto, obtaining the degrees of B. A., M. A., D. D.

His first charge was as curate of St. James' Cathedral in Toronto. From there he went to Brockville as first rector of St. Paul's, 1882-1885, and then to St. Paul's Church, Halifax.

He became Professor of Apologetics, Liturgics and Pastoral Theology at Wycliffe in 1897. He was rector of the Memorial Church, London, Ont., and Canon of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, until 1912, when he became vicar and rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Toronto, a post he held until he became rector emeritus.

His work included: "Church of England Before the Reformation," "The Protestantism of the Prayer Book" and biographies of Cranmer and Wycliffe.

In 1884 he married Jemima May Baldwin, daughter of the late Robert Baldwin. They had two sons, Robert Dyson and George Warren, and two daughters, Mary Baldwin and Catherine Helen. Mary Hague died in 1911 and Robert in 1929. A brother of Canon Hague, Harry, is a lawyer in Montreal.—The Canadian Churchman.

The Rev. Frank Goostray of Trinity Church, Coatesville, Penn., of which parish he was rector since 1929, and a fellow-member of the Board of Council of the City Mission, died quite suddenly and unexpectedly in his home, the rectory, May 7. His was one of those splendid young spirits of optimism and sound helpfulness who, apparently, could have gone on to large fields of leadership and constructive upbuilding of the Church in tune with God's immediate plans for mankind's best welfare.

Death Claims Two Clergymen, Diocese of Pennsylvania.

Within less than twenty-four hours of each other, death on Wednesday, May 8, claimed two of the clergy of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, whose combined active ministry covered a period of more than a century. Early on Wednesday morning the Rev. Dr. George Cadwalader Foley, retired Professor of Systematic Divinity in the Philadelphia Divinity School, passed away at his home, a short three city blocks from the school in which he had served for more than twenty-nine years as a member of the faculty, during which he had risen to the distinction of being one of the foremost theologians in the whole Church. That same night the Rev. William Reese Scott, rector of St. Paul's Church, Doyestown, Pa., and a retired chaplain of the United States Army, passed away in his sleep.

Burial services for Dr. Foley were held on Friday in the Church of the Holy Trinity, Philadelphia, Bishop Taitt officiating, assisted by the Very Rev. Dr. George G. Bartlett, Dean of the Philadelphia Divinity School, and the Rev. Howard R. Weir, rector of Holy Trinity. Upwards of 200 clergy of the diocese, members of the faculty of the Divinity School and the student body were present, and members of the student body also formed a choir and sang two of the hymns of the Church which were favorites of Dr. Foley. The interment was private. The Rev. Dr. Royden Keith Yerkes, a member of the Philadelphia School faculty and an intimate personal friend of Dr. Foley, had the committal service.

Burial services for Mr. Scott were held in the church of which he had been rector since 1928, the Bishop of the Diocese officiating. The body was taken to the National Cemetery at Arlington for interment.

Dr. Foley had been ill for a little more than one week. If he had lived to June 29 he would have been eighty-four years of age. Death was due to the ills incident to old age, but up to almost the last moment Dr. Foley's mind was keenly alert. Mr. Scott's death was due to a heart attack. He was present and took part in the proceedings of the Annual Convention of the Diocese on the day before his death.

Dr. Foley's active ministry covered a period of nearly sixty years. A year ago in April he had resigned his professorship at the Philadelphia Divinity School, but he continued to respond to requests for his services, and up to the last he was interested in every Church activity. Dr. Foley was the oldest alumnus of the Philadelphia Divinity School, and began his ministry in Philadelphia, which was the city of its birth and of his deepest affection. Before coming to the faculty of the Philadelphia Divinity School he served twenty-six years as rector of Trinity Church, Williamsport, Pa. While there he represented the Diocese of Central Pennsylvania in five General Conventions before the present Dioceses of Harrisburg and Bethlehem were erected out of the Central Pennsylvania Diocese. The Convention of the Diocese of Pennsylvania sent Dr. Foley as one of its deputies to six General Conventions.

Mr. Scott was also a native of Philadelphia and his ministry covered a period of forty years, eighteen of which were served as the chaplain in the United States Army, through successive grades from a first lieutenant to the rank of major. In 1927 he was retired, and was almost immediately called to the rectorship of St. Paul's, Doylestown. He was a graduate of General Theological Seminary. For a short time he was curate at the Church of the Transfiguration in New York City, going from there to be rector of St. Peter's, Hazleton, Pa. For eight years he was rector of Christ Church, Media, Pa., in the Diocese of Pennsylvania, when he began his service as an army chaplain, serving successively at Fort Monroe in Virginia; Fort Shafter in the Hawaiian Islands. During the World War he was stationed at Camp Meade. Subsequently he served at Fort Myer; as chief of chaplains at the War Department, and his last army service was in the Philippines.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

Giving is a grace of the Christian life, not one of its burdens.

Pessimism is defeat before the battle begins.

"We have committed the golden rule to memory—let us now commit it to life."—Edwin Markham.

No one could tell me where my soul might be;
I searched for God, and He eluded me—
I sought my brother out, and found all three.

—Ernest Crosby.

"War is a sure means of committing suicide."—Yukio Ozaki of Japan.

"Life is not as idle ore,
But iron dug from central gloom,
And heated hot with central fears,
And dipt in baths of hissing tears,
And battered by the shocks of doom,
To shape and use."

Remember, His banner is the Cross; we serve a crucified Lord. We too must be ready to bear our Cross. Nothing that is worth while can be gained without sacrifice. As we serve Him we must be ready gladly to sacrifice ourselves; using our God-given gifts for Him and His kingdom, and serve for the love of Christ and of all the members of His kingdom.—Selected.

There is a spirit which is a perfection and end of our being, which suffers long and is kind, humble, unselfish, invincible in hopes. Let us give it its right name, ascribe it to its true Giver, seek it there where it is to be found. Its name is the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ; it is given in the fellowship of the Holy Spirit; its source is in the Love of God.—Dean Bate.

Christ's servants are to have no fear for their material needs, no fear of the enemy, no fear of death, no fear of failure.

"In the moment of vision we know that we must live willing to be guided rather than to plan, willing to be used by God in His way, believing that He will sustain us."

If love be sincere, it will not be ashamed of frequent expression. And the more often it is repeated the stronger the ties that bind. The centrality of love in religion entitles it to the greatest possible emphasis.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

An Appeal for Children's Books.

May 16, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

For several years the students at the Seminary have had as one of their mission charges the Children's Home and Day Nursery in Alexandria. Like all such institutions of that nature, the financial situation has been of such nature as to make almost impossible the purchase of such things as are necessary for educational influence in the home. We who are working at the Home have felt most keenly the almost complete lack of a library. At present there are only a few books of fairy tales, some Boy Scout books and one or two rather badly worn Children's Stories of the Bible. It is a fact of general agreement that a good children's library is of vital importance to children for presenting them with a fully rounded background, morally, spiritually and intellectually. We, therefore, wish to present to the readers of "The Southern Churchman" an appeal for any assistance which they might be able to give. There are many homes which have been blessed with adequate library facilities for the children. In many instances, the children have outgrown the need for such books. It is to these people in particular whom we wish to appeal. If any of readers of "The Southern Churchman" possess any children's books with which they feel that they can part, we of the Seminary and the children at the home will appreciate them most highly. Any such contributions will be placed where we feel that they serve a purpose of paramount importance to the development of the underprivileged children of Alexandria.

If those wishing to make contributions will send the books to the children's home staff, Theological Seminary, Va., the books will be marked with the donor's name if so wished and delivered to the home library.

Thanking you in advance for your kind consideration in dealing with this appeal, I am,

Cornelius C. Tarplee.

Our Church and Others.

The Sesqui-Centennial of the Diocese of Virginia reminds us of the great heritage that is ours. We have a great debt to the past that can never be repaid, but does it not also remind us of the great need of change to meet modern conditions?

In the Spring of the year with Whitsunday approaching, we are reminded of the gift of The Holy Spirit and that brings up the whole subject of Confirmation. In our inheritance from England, we inherited the ways of a state Church which in even nonconformist language is "The Church". We have had no provision for transfer of Christians as Christians from us to others or from others to ourselves. It is this lack of a technique that has caused us often to be called a narrow sectarian body.

Every year we have, in our various churches, the problem of someone who has married into our Church. Often such young people have been good and faithful followers of Christ in another part of His vineyard. They have gone through the rites of the Church to which they belong and feel that what they have done is the equivalent of Confirmation. And yet, officially, we have no way of admitting them to fellowship with us except to make them repeat what they feel they have done before and which often has been a real and great experience.

Of course those of us who have grown up in this Church love the old ways and means of becoming confirmed communicants of our Church, and certainly for children there should still be held the old ways and rules of Confirmation. But it is almost a slap in the face to a willing Christian to say, "What you have had may have been a nice way, but it really was not The Way, and now you must adopt our way".

A few pioneering clergymen, notably Dr. Beverley Tucker of Richmond, have gone on to what they have considered the right method. They have recognized that in establishing a new Church on a new continent there must be some change of method, but it would be a fine thing if some of us would take thought and deeply meditate upon our present methods and see if we cannot find a more Christian approach to a delicate subject. Surely we cannot, unless we are the narrowest type of ecclesiastics, think of our Church as the one and only way. We could at least, even if we insist on confirmation, also insist upon a letter of transfer from our fellow Christians and thus be polite in our attitude. But we must also remember that in many ways we are working with the policy of a foreign "State Church".

Attention, Clergymen!

Time was when an educational institution had performed its full obligation to its graduates when the courses were completed and the diploma delivered. Henceforth, except to round up a goodly gathering on Alumni Day and extract a dollar or so in dues, there was little communication or concern between Alma Mater and the Alumni.

But this time has passed. There is too much new knowledge and too many new conditions in the world today for anyone to feel that what may once have been a sufficient preparation for life's responsibilities is adequate even a few years later. Doctors, lawyers, teachers and other professional folk are constantly summoned back for further study. Opportunities to keep up with the newer developments in theory and practice are constantly offered and in many cases positively required. In the light of actual experience this new knowledge is more valuable than the theory of college days.

To this development the Seminaries of the Church have not been blind. More and more through regular graduate courses and through summer courses they have put before their graduates the opportunity and challenge to keep alive mentally and spiritually through the discipline of further study. To the Alumni of the Virginia Seminary it is a matter for rejoicing that the Seminary each June conducts a Summer School, offering courses taught both by the regular faculty members and by specially selected lecturers. The moderate cost of the school puts it in reach of all, and a glance at the lecture schedule appearing elsewhere in this issue shows the high quality of the courses offered. It is hoped that many clergy, both from the Alumni and others, will take advantage of this splendid opportunity.

Canon Dyson Hague.

The Southern Churchman deeply regrets the loss of a most valued friend and contributor in the death of Canon Dyson Hague of Toronto, Canada. For many years he was our inspiration and source of those joyous and vital messages at Christmas and Easter, as well as other articles, which have been read with pleasure by the family of the Southern Churchman. We quote the following beautiful tribute by the Editor of The Canadian Churchman:

"Dr. Dyson Hague has entered into life eternal. We will not see his like again. 'A man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost' may be written of him as of Barnabas in the New Testament. Greatly gifted of Religion Dominant at Jubilee Celebrations.

The Guardian, May 10, 1935.

The dominant note of the Jubilee has been that of religion. For what did the crowds assemble? Not to see an impressive display of military force, or the glorification of the soul of a people. Simply to see the King and Queen go to church. Over the whole country a religious observance was the centre of the celebration. Four thousand people packed into York Minster, and elsewhere cathedrals and churches were thronged, while in many places public parks were used for a like purpose. There was a tone of sincerity and spontaneous reverence in these rites which is one of the best auguries for the future. The Archbishop of Canterbury put into apt and dignified words what was in the hearts of multitudes. His Majesty's people "have rejoiced in his association with their sports and pleasures; yet they have felt that his life was founded, as they instinctively desire the life of themselves and of their country to be founded, on the faith and fear of God. Thus in the passage of the years he has come to be not the King only but the father of his people." The same spirit shone forth with an earnestness that could not be missed in the broadcast message of the King himself. Speaking to his "very dear people" his Majesty said that he looked back on the past with thankfulness to God and that he was persuaded that, "with God's help," the difficulties of the times "may all be overcome if we meet them with confidence, courage, and unity." These were no conventional phrases. The strong echo which they evoked should hearten everyone who believes in God.

The Winnowing Fan

The winnowing fan was used in ancient times to separate the chaff from the wheat or other grain. After the threshing had taken place a fan was used to make a strong current of air to disperse the chaff and leave the pure grain ready to be ground. This process of cleansing the grain was used by St. John the Baptist, when he said, in referenec to our Lord:—"Whose fan is in His hand, and He will thoroughly purge His floor," referring, of course, to the threshing floor which was winnowed after the grain was separated from the straw. In one of Christ's parables, describing the last judgment, He compares Himself to the shepherd separating the sheep from the goats. But there are testing times here on earth when the winnowing process takes place. Such was the period when persecution was used by the Romans in their endeavor to destroy the Christian religion. It was a severe test when Christians were given the choice, either to offer incense to the Roman emperor as divine, and thus repudiate their allegiance to Christ, or to meet death in one of its cruelist forms. There were many who fell away from the faith under the severe test of persecution, though some of them were not actually chaff, but light weight grain, as was shown by their repentance and return to the Church later on. It was a question in those days, among the faithful, as to what should be done about those who had lapsed under the test of persecution, that is, under what conditions they should be restored to the Church.

Present Day Tests of Faithfulness.

In these days of ours we have been spared from this fiery ordeal, though in Russia many have had to pass through it in various forms. But nevertheless, there are other tests, not by any means so severe, but searching enough to show more or less unmistakably who are true to their Master and who are not. Prosperity, even, is a testing time, for many are carried away by it to such an extent as to render their faith dim and their hearts cold. It is doubtless such a time as this that our Lord referred to when, in His Parable of the Sower, He said:—"Some fell among thorns and the thorns sprung up and choked them." According to His own interpretation:—"He also that received seed among thorns is he that heareth the words; and the care of the world, and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word and he becometh unfruitful." But times of depression such as this through which we are passing, also afford a testing time as to the reality of our devotion to Christ and His Cause, as represented by His Church.

The Cross As a Test.

Christ told His followers plainly that those who would be His disciples, either then or in the future, must take up their cross daily and follow Him. He did not promise them an easy time, but said:—"He that shall endure to the end, the same shall be saved." The profession of Christianity in these days of ours, is not attended with any risk of life or loss of our material possessions. We are not called upon to prove our loyalty to Christ by being torn to pieces by wild beasts in the arena, or by being burned at the stake, and yet many seem to think that going to Church on Sunday is too much to expect, except on infrequent occasions, and that their contributions, if any, should be restricted to the meager leavings, after not only their necessary expenses have been met, but also that of their amusements and even luxuries. This would eliminate the Cross entirely from the Christian religion, or as being an essential part of the Christian life. It is quite evident that if a time of persecution should come upon us, such nominal members of the Church as those described above would not be able to stand the test, but would fall away, and thus reveal the fact that they were chaff or very light weight grain.

The Winnowing Fan of Worldliness.

The poet Wordsworth, in one of his famous poems, wrote:

"The World is too much with us, late and soon, Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers."

The spirit of the world is one of the surest tests of the reality of our religious life. Like the sirocco, the hot dry wind from the desert, which parches vegetation, the spirit of the world has a similar effect upon the spiritual life, and this accounts for the little interest shown in religion, and the performance of religious duties. Too many "lay waste their powers" because "the world is too much with them"; they give their time and energy too exclusively to its allurements, with the result that there is but little left over for the higher interests of life. Unconsciously, perhaps, the winnowing fan of worldliness tests their stability and finds them unable to resist the pressure which drives them off from the threshing floor of the pure grain into the heap of chaff or light grain of the worldling class.

The Real Trouble With the Church Today.

This is what is the matter with the Christian Church today. She has too much chaff or light weight grain in her granary. The Depression is not the main or principal cause of the great falling off in the giving of the people, and the crisis which now confronts her with regard to her missionary work. The main cause is a lack of interest and of self-sacrifice on the part of her members. Too many of them are not really members of Christ's Body, or they would feel the more abundant life flowing through them and inspiring them to serve Him wholeheartedly, laying their gifts at His feet, as the wise men from the East did, when they brought their gold and frankincense and myrrh to His cradle at Bethlehem. The crisis through which the Church is now passing, presents a challenge to her members to prove the reality of their faith in Christ and their devotion to Him. We are not called upon to make the supreme sacrifice as many of our soldiers were in the Great War, but we are called upon to show that we are true soldiers of the Cross and are therefore willing to make any sacrifice needed to enable the Church to go forward instead of standing still, or what is worse, making an inglorious retreat. Whitsunday, the birthday of the Christian Church, will afford us an opportunity of making this necessary sacrifice, and in the interval we may well prepare ourselves by earnest prayer and meditation to go up to the House of God on that day, with the loyal determination that His Cause shall no longer suffer through our neglect and indifference.

Alexander Moray, Bishop-Elect, 1672

MARY F. GOODWIN,

Historiographer of Diocese of Southern Virginia.

THE story has never been told of the first attempt to give a bishop to the colony of Virginia. If it could be known in its entirety it might prove a most instructive and interesting bit of history. But so little remains of the transactions that we can only surmise as to the causes and results of this abortive endeavor to place the Church in a distant land under her own bishops.

From the settlement of the colonies the ecclesiastical authority was vested in the Bishop of London. His was the responsibility for sending out men fitted for the rugged life in the new country, and for removing them if they should prove unfitted for their tasks. Before the formation of the S. P. G. men were looking to America as a promising field for the extension of the Church's mission; and of the colonies Virginia presented the most tempting opportunities for a young divine. During the early years of the Protectorate, the influx of refugees of means and influence caused rapid growth in Virginia. There was a demand for ministers, and soon there were enough in the colony to feel the need of a bishop of their own. After the restoration of the Stuarts to the throne, the attention of the authorities in London seems to have been directed towards the future of the Church in America. But now a new danger arose. Should the Puritan Party in the Church, or the pro-Romanists become dominant in the colonies? Even the supporters of the House of Stuart were not blind to the growing influence the Roman advisers of the queen were exercising at the Court of St. James. It was generally conceded that during his exile Charles himself had learned to look with favor on the Church of his wife. It is a mooted question today whether he secretly became a member of the Roman communion before his death; perhaps he felt the need of being shriven as his end approached.

Memories were good in those days. Men whose fathers had suffered for their faith remembered with dread the fires of Smithfield, and were determined that there should be no divided loyalties in Virginia as to churchmanship. Aside from the ecclesiastical aspect of the case there was a wholesome dread of having any bonds formed which might cement a friendship with Spain.

It was but natural that, with the restoration of the Stuarts to the throne, Virginia should feel that her loyalty to that House in he past should be rewarded by recognition of her growing importance, ecclesiastical as well as political. It is not known that the request for a bishop came from Virginia, but it is not improbable that it did.

FROM faded documents of vellum and paper preserved in England the following story may be pieced together. But first we would mention a great man and good, Sir Leoline Jenkins, LL. D., whose deep interest in the Church's responsibility to her distant and growing colonies he sought to have more generally recognized. It was most likely due to his influence that a charter was drawn up for the erection of a bishopric in Virginia.

There are three contemporary copies of this charter in existence, one in the library of All Souls' College, Oxford; one in the Bodleian Library, and the third in the Library of Fulham Palace. The copy in All Souls' College has been printed in full, in the Latin in which it was written, in Perry's "Historical Collections". This differs slightly from the copy in the Bodleian. The charter, or patent, was supposed to have been drawn up by Sir Orlando Bridgman, Keeper of the Great Seal under Charles II. It was found among the papers of Sir Leoline Jenkins and at the bottom was endorsed in his hand-writing:—"Qu. By whom was it drawen. I was consulted, but did not draw the Preface; onely I gave instructions out of K. Henry VIIIth Charters of foundations of the New Bishopricks." The probable date of the document is between 1665 and 1673.

This patent would have created a diocese or bishopric the extent of which was the extent of the British possessions in the New World. It was defined in the document to contain "—Each of our domains or plantations to the north of Virginia, whether it be New England, New York, or any other places between, whether on 'terra firma' and continent, whether on adjacent islands or upon our other American Islands, commonly called Bermudas, Barbadoes, St. Christopher's, Antiego, Nevis, Montserrat, together with the rest of the adjacent Caribbean Islands, along with our island of Jamaica." Because Virginia offered the "best hope of the Church's growth" and also "seeing that it is the first and oldest of all, as one might say the Alma Mater, whence the rest of the plantations took their start, and furthermore supported us and them by annual revenues, . . . the place of James City and the church there (are) created, erected, founded and established as an Episcopal See and Cathedral Church." It is interesting to note that the church then standing is the one to which the old tower belonged.

That the establishment of so important a patrimony should lead to dissentions and strife was inevitable. Indeed the failure of the scheme may be traced to the fact that the charter in placing this new diocese or bishopric under the direct control of the Archbishop of Canterbury deprived the Bishop of London of the jurisdiction over all colonial churches. A difference of opinion between His grace and his Lordship may have resulted in the king's being influenced to withhold his signature from the document.

But before this tragic end of the plan, men had busied themselves looking for and advancing the qualifications of their candidates. It is most probable that the ministers in Virginia should prefer a man who had been in the colony, and whom they themselves knew. At any rate, the name of the Rev. Alexander Moray, or Murray, rector of Ware Parish, had been prominently mentioned; he appeared in London along with an array of Virginia merchants early in 1672-03. That there were other men aspiring to the post seems evident, though we have found no other name in connection with this episode. Mr. Moray was with Charles II at the battle of Worcester in 1652; he may have been the royal candidate opposed by those who distrusted the king's judgment. However, we will let the following documents in the case speak for themselves.

IN THE British Museum are a few old papers, kept together by someone who had some connection with this case. They consist of a formal announcement, a copy of the same with a date attached, a summons to the Virginians in London to attend a hearing, and an appeal by Moray from the decision of the bishops in charge. We give these papers as they were copied from the originals. As far as we know they they have never been published in full.

Ascensiontide

Ascension Day, May 30, 1935. —Sunday after Ascension, June 2, 1935.

By CHARLES W. F. SMITH,

Assistant Rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond.

FORTY DAYS AFTER EASTER, therefore upon a Thursday, comes the Feast of the Ascension. Perhaps because it falls upon a week-day, the celebration has of late decreased in importance, though it is one of the earliest Christian festivals and, in the Book of Common Prayer, is given equal rank with the great feasts. In the time of Augustine it was universal and accepted as deriving from Apostolic times. The Collect is of ancient origin, being found in its earliest form in the Sacramentary of Gregory (c. 600 A. D.).

For centuries, therefore, the Church has prayed that ''we may also in heart and mind thither ascend, and with Him continually dwell''. Bearing out this key thought, we must remove from our minds the physical limitations which make the ascension of our Lord merely a bodily elevation to another place. To pierce the outward form and arrive at the inner meaning, we must not be hampered by spatial ideas which make heaven a place. We think of Jesus ascended, not to a remote region, but to a sphere of life where His power is universally and immediately available for all. From the narrow life bounded by space and time in Palestine, Jesus ascended to a life unbounded, whence His gifts can be received by all men, everywhere, at any time.

This is real ascension, because it is triumph; triumph over the limitations of earthly life, triumph over the power of sin and death, triumph over the power of the enemies of God; the triumph of the life Jesus lived as man. In elevating Jesus to His ''right hand'', God completed the testimony of the resurrection that the kind of life Jesus lived had an eternal place in the universe. This was what the Apostles felt and testified to.

Here it is that the Ascension can be of real help to us. Jesus was truly Man as He was Son of God. In Jesus the human race reached its highest expression and, in the Ascension, God accepted and elevated the highest human experience to His own presence and throne. It is correct to think of the ascended Lord as the same Jesus who walked in Galilee. Before His death, Jesus preached the Kingdom of God; after His resurrection, we read, He was still ''talking of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God''. His interests in men and His purposes for His Church were the same. We believe they are still, only more available, more powerful, endowed with all the resources of God. Hence, Jesus has the right to the names of Mediator and Intercessor, for in Him the highest human experience enters into God's experience, and gives us confidence that when we pray we are understood.

The real values of the companionship the Apostles had with Jesus are not diminished. They are available for us. By finding them and living with them we ascend in heart and mind. The Christian life ascends, not in a material sense, but in moral and spiritual value, in ideal and thought, in joy and hope, in power and usefulness in God's plan.

The world needs the teachings of the Ascension desperately. The ''depression'' has had the effect of depressing the life of man in every way. Rather, perhaps, it only revealed how depressed it was. The Ascension can give confidence to our efforts to alleviate distress and raise the lives of men to the dignity God gave them in Christ. It can give the confidence that our human lives, as they ascend to higher levels of living, have the endorsement of God; the confidence that God has an eternal place for man in His purpose and Kingdom; the confidence that in Christ the victory of the godly man in the world has already been won and may be ours as we the more ''with Him continually dwell''. The Ascension then becomes, not an event of past history, but an experience of every Christian life. The Ascension is not real until Christ has the ascendency in all the ways of human life.

Remembrance

By JAMES E. FREEMAN,
Bishop of Washington.

Bishop Freeman.

DAYS of memory are precious to us when they record the deeds and service of those who selflessly gave themselves for a great cause.

As we come to another Memorial Sunday we turn to those pages in our country's history that record the loyalty and sacrifice of the men and women who, counting not their lives dear unto themselves, gave the last full measure of devotion for what they believed to be a supreme service to God and country. Though their names are not remembered, saving in those homes from whence they went, we think of them today as contributors to a nation's wealth and power. Obscure though they may have been, they constitute an essential and indispensable part of a record that is cherished by a grateful Republic.

It is well that we pause now and again to register our gratitude and to rededicate ourselves to those great principles for which they gave their all—principles and ideals which still constitute our strength and our security. The very fact that we are passing through a critical period, one that involves a re-affirmation of our faith in our system of government, in those mighty principles upon which it has been builded, compels us to re-appraise the service and sacrifice of those who have made and preserved us a nation. Each generation is prone to place an undue emphasis upon its own conceits, to regard unduly its capacity to carry on, and this without reflection upon those elements that constituted its strength in other days. The swift currents of life (and they have never run more swiftly than they do today), have a tendency to make us forgetful of our past. We build monuments to our honored dead and on occasion pay grateful tribute to their memory. We seem less ready to emulate their virtues or to regard with respect and devotion those things for which they lived and for which they died. Service and sacrifice, utter consecration to national ideals, these alone guarantee to us our security and our continuing happiness and peace. Insular and selfish living, freedom from obligations to the state and to the nation, or an exaggerated form of personal independence, these constitute our perils. Patriotism must mean more to us than a casual and infrequent observance of our great days and of the deeds and service of those who, in other periods of our history, have contributed abundantly and selflessly to the preservation of our most cherished institutions. We recall that it was the great Hungarian patriot, Kossuth, who said: "If your Ship of State is ever lost, the rock upon which it will split will be the devotion of your peole to their private interests at the expense of the state."

We may not forget in such a time as the present that our individual security resides in our unfailing recognition of and devotion to the common interests of our people. To enjoy the protection of the flag and that for which it stands calls for a form of patriotism that, unhappily, is less common among us than in former days. In a right conception of civic duty and responsibility there can be no preferred or privileged classes. Neither wealth nor poverty has superior claims. We approximate our highest development and enjoy with greater security our common heritage where we share and share alike our obligations as citizens. We may not forget that great convictions and high ideals do not survive without the religious impulse, nor again may we forget that, the men and women who have given us what we hold of value, had their inspiration and sustaining power through an unfaltering and unchanging Christian faith. We stress unduly today our material resources, our mechanical genius and our capacity to meet every emergency and every problem through our inherent cleverness and strength. We have grown forgetful and careless in our recognition of those fundamental Christian virtues that, in other days, were the sources of our nation's strength and stability. One of the greatest tasks to which we must address ourselves is so to train our youth that they shall recognize the responsibilities of their citizenship.

God he used his gifts to the utmost in the service of his Lord and Saviour. Others will take up the torch but he moved among us as one unique. There was only one Dyson Hague.

"He had brilliant gifts of mind and utterance. No speaker whom I ever heard could mass superlatives and adjectives as he. Quick to see the point he was fearless in its promotion. He always took a leading part in the Synod of Toronto. In the General Synod and in the revision of the Prayer Book and the Hymn Book he gave his all.

"As for gifts of heart, I myself have known them. When I lay in the Toronto Hospital for months, never a week pased but he came to see me and his parish was at the other end of the city. He was kindness itself to me and I shall never forget it.

"It was in the realm of the soul that his strength lay. He knew his Saviour by a deep personal experience and this he preached in season and out of season. Like St. Paul, his theme was "Christ and Him Crucified'. If ever there was a 'Valiant for Truth' it was he. Outspoken and fearless for truth as he saw it, he ever was. His great underlying quality was loyalty that grand old virtue. He was loyal in every circle of life, loyal to his College, to his Church and above all to his Saviour. His last sermon was the Easter message in the Church where he had ministered so long. Every Christmas and Easter he always wrote to the daily papers and he closed with the Easter message. It was a ringing message triumphant in the face of death and though he was speaking of another in it, how soon the words were true of himself.

"A great man has passed from this Church Militant here in earth and we bless God for his life and ministry. The sympathy and prayers of the Church will ascend for his loved ones in their sorrow."

The family of Dr. Hague and the Church of Canada have our profound sympathy.

The Forward Movement

By ARTHUR M. SHERMAN, D. D.,

Member of The Forward Movement Staff.

From many quarters come reports of increased attendance at Lenten services and a more earnest observance of Easter in the spirit of the Forward Movement. Bishop Helfenstein says of Maryland: "I am delighted with the reports I am receiving of the Easter services and the number of those who communed I cannot help feeling that this is largely due to the quiet, gentle influence of the Forward Movement. I think that at least eighty per cent of the enrolled communicant strength of our Diocese made Communions at Easter. Certainly the attendance at these services was record-breaking. In the nine years of my Episcopate, I have not had such services as I have had during the months of 1935."

Typical of the experiences of many is that of the Rev. Ernest L. Harvey of Elmore Heights, New York. "My mission has never had the attendance at all the Lenten services it had this year. On Easter Day we had within two of our total communicant list in church. Isn't that quite a record? We are continuing to follow up until Whitsunday, and then I hope there will not be too much of a summer let-down."

Such experiences as that of a laywoman in New York City are bringing encouragement and hope. "I can't help feeling that there is very decidedly a Forward Movement all through the Church. I hear of the tremendous congregations in all churches on Easter Day, and more remarkable, the continued fine attendance on the following (Low—often in more than one sense of the word!) Sunday. And I hear of, and witness the goodly gatherings daily; business people who can get up early enough to make their communions before they start their day's work. It would seem that people have at last turned their faces toward the Sun (and the Son) and that they are learning to put first things first. We seem to finally have come to understand where the true joy and peace are found—close to His Sacred Heart."

On the twelfth day of April the Rev. Robert Scott Chalmers, rector of Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, slipped quietly away to the larger life in Trinity Church, New York, where he had gone to preach the noonday Lenten sermon. That morning he was engaged in preparing and sending off his Easter message to his congregation. After his death the letter was not printed but a photostat copy was made of the manuscript, and a copy sent to each members of the congregation. His last words were: "And now—let me bring you some Easter tidings. As you all know we are engaged in a great Forward Movement throughout the Church. The Presiding Bishop of the Church has called us to move forward again. Here are his words to us—

Our Risen Lord
Leads His Church
To United Action

He counts on us to Go Forward in the Great Fifty Days from Easter to Pentecost (Whitsunday).

Grace and St. Peter's congregation will respond. We have not kept Lent in order to have a slump after Easter. We have been training, and we are ready for a united spiritual effort. We shall signalize this year of Grace 1935 by having a corporate communion on Whitsunday, as great and as well attended as that of Easter.

"Do not leave the Church on Easter Day without receiving your Forward Movement Folder!"

"What is to be Done Now? asks a priest of the Forward Movement Commission, whose parish in the Middle West has grown fifty per cent during the past year. "I need all the help I can get. I keep coupling the words of the manuals to the sermon every week. In my weekly notice to the parish, in my news sheet, I teach all the time. Instead of using the space the local papers give me for announcements, I put in little instructions on the Church, God, Prayers and Sacraments. If we all pull together we will inject new life into the Church. God bless the work."

Prepare for Whitsunday.

The Forward Movement calls the Church to prepare for Whitsunday in order that a new power may come in this time of need. It has made five definite suggestions for the observance of the period between Ascension and Whitsunday.

1. Keep the churches open for the whole period and ask the people to come sometime each day to the church for prayer and meditation.
2. Let the rector gather about him on one or more occasions those who will join him in intercession.
3. Provide a day of retreat or conference for clergy or lay people.
4. Make this a period when the individual should engage in some daily and definite act of preparation for the Corporate Communion on Whitsunday through a sincere effort to discover what changes should be made in his life and what acts he should perform to make him more perfectly a disciple of Christ.
5. Emphasize personal evangelism by bearing witness to at least one other person at this time what our religion means to us and by seeking to bring some one nearer to Christ through His Church.

Follow On!—The Churchman's Summer Manual.

In response to the requests that the Forward Movement continue to provide guidance in the daily devotional life, it has been decided to issue a new booklet for general distribution throughout the Church. In presenting this the Commission has sent out the following message:

After the first Pentecost came action. After the average Pentecost in our day comes marking time during the summer months. This year we must be different. The great Corporate Communion to which the Church is called on Whitsunday must not be followed by marking time or by retreat.

Great numbers of our people will want to know how to go forward. To strengthen the leadership of our Bishops and parish clergy, the Forward Movement Commission is ready to put into every Churchman's hand, in a form nowhere else to be found, the book which tells of the action that followed the first Whitsunday—the Book of Acts.

It tells how men, equipped only with the assurance that their Master was alive, arose out of fear and weakness to heroic heights of power and helpfulness—how they began to change the world. This Gospel of the Church's first advance is a manifesto for today's time of destiny. It can show us God's way for our Forward Movement. It is the action of His first Disciples calling today's disciples to action.

Bound with the text of Acts, is a Message on the Forward Movement, a plea for a Christian summer; What the New Testament means for our day; A Way of Prayer with two pages of selected prayers; Things

The Rural Problem

By VAL H. SESSIONS.

WE OFTEN MEET folk who are worried over the fact that the Social Agencies of all kinds are doing the work that in the past the Church did. They say these agencies are taking over the work of the Church. Our answer is—yes, the Church did this work in the past. The Church blazed the way in Social Service Work as well as in educational work, and everything else that has to do with the developing of humanity. She is the pioneer. She did it, though, because there was no other to do the work. But with her vision, her teaching, it has gradually got into the minds of men that it is their task as the children of God. We should be thankful that the fruit of the teaching of Mother Church is so great.

We were standing on the corner of a street in one of our cities not so long ago. One of our dear friends came along, stopped, pointed at the Episcopal Church and Parish House standing on the opposite corner. He said: "A beautiful church and parish house, cost a lot of money—a valuable piece of property. It is perhaps the most valuable property in town, but all during the depression that church has not run a soup kitchen. What good is there in having services? Why throw away such valuable property just to have a service or two or three times a week?"

Our answer was: "Had it not been for the Sunday services in that church and in the other Christian churches in this community, there would have been no soup kitchen on the corner just back of that building. In this community all the churches, through their people have joined in with the community as a community, and they are feeding the hungry and clothing the naked. And furthermore, had it not been for the services two or three times a week in that church and other churches there would be no Social Work going on in this community. Look over the rolls of the contributors to the various Social Service Agencies and you will find that a majority of the givers are from Christian Churches in this community. The function of the Church is to spiritualize you, and other individuals and all organizations."

And that is the thought that we would try and get across to those who become discouraged, to those who think the Church is lagging because she doesn't do some of the things she did in the past. Of course, where no agencies are at work and the Church is the only place for folk to turn, then that is different. But the primary function of the Church is to spiritualize. Feeding the hungry, clothing the naked must be a joint undertaking of all who are to serve humanity regardless of their religion.

In spiritualizing the various individuals and groups we must preach the Gospel as recorded in the New Testament. Live the preaching, know the needs of the people. Know the Social Agencies. If they are at work cooperate with them. If they are not there in the community know where to go to call the needed help, and while you are waiting for them administer as it were first aid.

This seems to me to be so much better than trying to encourage every Rural Priest to be an expert Social Worker.

Educated Pastors.

One thought that must always be kept before our minds is that we must see to it that our pastors are educated men. We mention this requisite for many reasons. We will mention the two that we consider primary: because (1) there are those who think that they can send just any kind of a worker to the Rural Districts. If any of you who happen to read this article by chance have the thought in your mind that all of the people in the Rural Districts are an uneducated class your education is indeed limited. You will find some of the best trained people that we have in the United States in the Rural Districts. That is the reason you find so many of our men in the leading positions of this country. So, if you think that just any kind of a worker can be sent, just remember that if you encourage the like of this you are paving the way to a condition of unhappiness. And because (2) we want to take advantage of this opportunity to discourage any kind of short cut to the ministry of Mother Church. Bishops and Standing Committees, Priests and Vestrymen, need to watch their step well and be sure that they are not shoving men into the Ministry untrained.

Life's Work.

And then we want to call your attention to some, thing else that we have been preaching for years. And that is that we need pastors who will take up their work in the Rural Field with the idea that they are going to spend their life in that particular field. That they are going to stay until they feel that it is their bounden duty to the work to leave. Of course, if they have been in the work for a week and realize that they are misfits the quicker they get away the better. We do not want to be unreasonable. The point is we need a more permanent feeling in our Rural Work. The idea of here today and gone tomorrow will not build a work. One of the reasons why the Episcopal Church has not grown faster in the country is because of the long skips between pastors. This is the cry all over.

Energetic Pastors.

Yes, pastors not afraid of work. We had this because of the fact that many seem to think that there is nothing for a Rural Pastor to do. There is plenty of work to do. Not one minute need be lost. It means a pastor on duty for twenty-four hours out of every day. That is, that he is subject to call any hour out of the twenty-four. He may have to work many hours without rest as he goes over the road of life in his ministry. The folk in the Rural Districts want their pastor to share their sorrows and joys and, whether they do or not, it is for the pastor to share them.

Another reason for adding "Energetic Pastors" is that at present it means that one pastor will have more than one Mission or more than one Parish. This is true in many sections. We note this through the Living Church Annual, and we have also observed that it is true in every state we have visited. This means work. This means long hours.

And this gives us an opportunity to drive home an idea over which we are very much concerned. It is this: to serve more than one place and not to be able to give each place more than two services a month is not a stumbling block. Of course, it is necessary to have Sunday School every Sunday—where we can have a Sunday School. But the statement is made again and again that it is too bad that such a place cannot have more than two services a month. If there is no service of any kind in the community it is too bad. But the situation with which I am familiar is that in almost every community there are other Christian Churches and they have their days for services. By cooperating with them in not having conflicts if possible, it gives the opportunity of our life to make our contribution to the driving out of prejudice and hate. It makes an ideal situation. In five of our places in this Field we have no conflicts at all. The relationship is wonderful. After seventeen years of effort along these lines we are now cooperating to such an extent that no person in the community thought it could be possible. We are Catholic. Pure Catholic. We are Personally Evangelical Catholic—the Dr. Muhlenberg type of Churchmanship. And in this way we can look for Church Unity. That is Christian Unity first—then Church Unity. It's the only way that it will come. Joining together at every opportunity, working together—and the victory is ours as Christians.

You may say that we have stressed Pastors. We have—on purpose. The pastor will solve the problem. Get this thought—the harvest is white, the reapers are few—we need Pastors as outlined above—with such Pastors the people will follow. The people in the Rural Districts are holding out their hands for just such Pastors. With such Shepherding our needs will be provided and the problem solved.

whole plan. Whether episcopal jealousy, political expediency, or personal wrangling caused the overthrow of the proposed Bishopric may never be known. However, the plan was not revived until the Protestant character of the Anglican Church was firmly established under William and Mary, and even then those who would have a bishop in Virginia were never able to overcome the opposition to an appointee of the crown having this authority in the colony. The spirit of independence was early asserted, and never overcome in Virginia.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

A CALL TO VENERATE THE VENERABLE BEDE.

The American Bible Society appropriately suggests a wide reading and re-reading of the Fourth Gospel at the time of the significant Scripture anniversary soon to occur and herewith described.

Many school boys have wondered how the Venerable Bede got his name. His death at sixty-three demonstrates that to be venerated a man does not need to grow a flowing white beard and seam his countenance with the furrows of eighty winters.

Bede was the most learned man of his age in Britain, and perhaps anywhere. But that is less than half. He was both honest and modest. He did not square off and tell the universe how to run itself, as is the temptation of small souls endowed with superior knowledge. He lived long, long before the dawn of the age of modern science, but he had the true scientist's reverence for facts. He knew that all his ideas were not his own, and he faithfully gave credit to those from whom he derived them. And he constantly strove to keep within his facts. He has properly been called the father of English history, for he had the historical sense highly developed, though living in an age of ignorance and crude magic.

But best of all, he used his knowledge for the benefit of others, and especially for common folk. He spent his last days translating one of the Gospels into the vernacular of his period. This is the first time any portion of the Bible got written into English. Nor was any serious attempt made to go on with this work for more than six centuries. Wycliffe was born about six hundred years after Bede died, and Tyndale did not appear for more than a century and a half later still.

This fact gives point to the call from the Bible societies in English-speaking lands today to read and re-read the Gospel of John, which was the one chosen by Bede for this early achievement in translation. May 27, 735, marks a double Bede anniversary; on that day he completed this translation, and on that day he died, 1,200 years ago. This work was his last labor. In excessive weakness of body, he struggled through the last porton of the task. His clerk told him that they had come to the last sentence. On through that he went. The clerk said, "Now, it is finished". "Finished, indeed!" said the good man, turned on his couch, murmured the Gloria, and died.

Bede's Latin was good. He knew Greek. He probably knew some Hebrew. He had access to a good library, good as libraries went in those days, and on his far frontier of the world. This was centuries before the art of printing was invented. Bede devoted his whole life to his learning and his writing—labors, as he said, undertaken for the benefit of his brethren. He wrote history, volumes of it. He prepared a grammar. He wrote a treatise on music. He put knowledge within the reach of those who could use the only language of scholarship then known. And at the last he set about getting the Bible into the vernacular of the humblest.

It will be refreshing to every present-day reader, in the light of all this, to take in hand this familiar portion of the Bible on which Bede worked. None of those who sit down in response to the call to read anew the Gospel of John will follow the language which Bede himself used, for the English of today has no speaking acquaintance with the English of Bede's day. Furthermore, the Bede text is no longer within reach; no copy is known to exist. The loss is somewhat sentimental, for only the rarest scholar of today would be able to read a verse of it. The student in high school and college has a hard enough time making head and tail of Chaucer, and Bede lived six hundred years before Chaucer.

Bede never traveed. In all of his life he moved not more than a few miles from the place of his birth. The same is true of Immanuel Kant, one of the profoundest thinkers of all time. Men like him and Bede make it clear that provincialism is a disease of the mind, a blight of the soul, and not the accident of travel or the lack of it. This Bede anniversary may well be celebrated by all in a reappraisal of the essential values of life. There are acres of diamonds in the dooryard of each of us.

There will be some speculation as to why Bede chose the Gospel of John for his first essay in translation. To a less discriminating spirit than his it may seem to be the least suitable of the four Gospels for presentation to a rough and ignorant populace such as that by which he was surrounded. May it not be that it was precisely because life of the times was so drab that Bede chose John's Gospel? The same Jesus appears here as in the other Gospels. He walks the same streets, trudges along the same dusty highways, ministers to the same hunger and misery. But in John's Gospel this pre-eminent life rises above its surroundings as in none of the others. The transcendent significance of life is depicted.

Is it not likely that Bede sensed this, and hastened first to put this interpretation of the life of Christ before the starved and suppressed spirits about him? He wanted religion to mean to them the fullest possible emancipation. He would have them know that narrow confinement and drudging duties need not stifle the soul in men. He had experienced the truth in himself, this man who had never traveled, had never held high office, had never been lord or bishop of anything but of himself and his own exalted purposes.

With this insight each and all may well respond to the call to read anew John's Gospel, for reading it means communion with the most exalted spirit of the ages, and encourages just now acquaintance with a great soul, worthily venerated because he caught the Spirit of Jesus, lived, wrought out his mission, and died in the power of that Spirit.

THE VIRGINIA SEMINARY SUMMER SCHOOL.

Dean W. E. Rollins, Director.

The Second Summer School will be held at the Seminary, June 17-21.

There will be an opening meeting at 5:30 P. M. Monday, June 17.

On each evening at 8 o'clock, beginning with Monday evening, there will be a lecture and conference on "Psychiatry and Pastoral Work" by Rev. Thomas I. Harris.

Lectures will be given each day, 9 A. M.-1 P. M., from Tuesday, June 18, to Friday, June 21, inclusive, on the following subjects:

1. Some Aspects of the Teaching of St. Paul, by Prof. Stanley Brown-Serman.
2. The Gospel of St. Mark, by Rev. A. T. Mollegen.
3. Christianity and the Modern World, by Prof. C. L. Stanley.
4. Present Tendencies in Theology, by Prof. Chas. W. Lowry.
5. Preaching Values in the Minor Prophets, by Prof. C. Sturges Ball.

The chaplain of the school will be Rev. Thomas K. Nelson.

The only charge to the Alumni will be six dollars ($6.00) for board and room.

The Alumni are requested to notify me of their intention to attend. They are requested to indicate, by numbers which of the morning courses they elect. It is suggested that each alumnus elect, in addition to the evening conference, two or three of the courses listed above.

CONFERENCE ON SOCIAL EDUCATION, THE WHITE HOUSE, SATURDAY, MAY 18, 1935.

The conference was called to consider a nation-wide program of Social Education on Crime as a Community Problem.

Since Crime is now recognized as a result of deep-rooted social maladjustments, an effective program to cope with it necessarily involves processes of social education.

The personnel of the Conference included representatives of the major national agencies—civic, educational religious and social—which carry on educational work through their local units in communities throughout the country.

The educational work of these national agencies makes them one of the major educational forces of the country. Participation in this Conference and in the resulting program is in line with their policies as most, if not all, of them have dealt with other broad social questions. Their participation in setting the project up has made it their own and an undertaking common to all. This will contribute substantially to its strength and to its impact on every community.

The Federal Administration showed its concern for more effective law enforcement agencies by convening the Crime Conference sponsored by the Attorney General. This conference focused attention of the nation on the seriousness of the crime situation, and took steps to strengthen law enforcement agencies.

The Conference on Social Education concerned itself, not with administrative and official matters, but with the building up in the communities of the country of an informed and sustained public opinion which is indspensable both to reducing the incidence of crime, and the maintenance of effective law enforcement.

ATTACKING CRIME AS A COMMUNITY PROBLEM.

By the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes.

Marked by grim determination to secure positive action, the White House Conference on Social Education was held in Washington on May 18 to initiate a nation-wide program of social education on crime as a community problem. Under the chairmanship of Charles P. Taft, II, well known Cincinnati Churchman, this conference of 150 representatives of national, civic, religious, social and educational agencies proceeded to set up a National Commission on Social Education and charged it with specific responsibilities.

For the present this commission is to consist of the thirty-six original sponsors of the White House Conference. Included among them are the following members of the Episcopal Church: The Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, president of the National Council; Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, Washington; Mrs. E. Paul du Pont, Montchannin, Del.; Mrs. Henry Goddard Leach, New York; Charles P. Taft II, Cincinnati; Dr. Miriam Van Waters, Framingham, Mass., and George W. Wickersham, New York. The commission was given power to add to the membership.

As defined by the conference the work of the commission will be:

1. Compiling, from data now available, educational materials for study and discussion groups, for neighborhood and community forums, and for series of addresses. These materials will be adapted to the needs of youth and of adults, and would be sent to the local units from their own national agency and, when desired, with its imprint.
2. Providing simple, non-technical guides for inquiring into community social conditions, more especially those which are known to predispose to delinquency and crime.
3. Serving as a clearing house and distributing center of experiments by communities and groups in social action.
4. Counseling with national agencies in order to make the program as effective as possible by sharing experiences and co-ordinating efforts.
5. Devising ways of developing the work of local units of all agencies so as to bring about co-ordinated action.

The conference had the cordial backing of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who attended each session and spoke briefly at one. Other speakers included Dean George W. Kirchwey, New York; Dr. Miriam Van Waters, Framingham, Mass.; Msgr. John A. Ryan, Washington; Judge Florence E. Allen, Cincinnati; Dr. John Ward Studebaker, United States Commissioner of Education, and the latter's predecessor, Dr. George F. Zook.

Frank recognition was given to the facts that the largest single arrest group are those nineteen years of age, and that of the 22,000,000 young people between sixteen and twenty-five about 3,000,000 are unemployed, restless and discouraged. It was pointed out that, as a rule, the adult criminal is one who has been a juvenile criminal and that the juvenile first offender cannot be given adequate constructive care until politics is taken out of the police system. Ample discrimination was made between broad stimulants to crime, such as unfavorable social and economic conditions, common to most communities and local elements, tending to breed crime in specific areas.

The conference recognized the community as the focal point of attack, since it is both the natural field for citizens to understand the social force at work, and the immediate field for translating social understanding into social action. Emphasis was placed on the need of understanding the crime situation in terms of community problem rather than in rows of statistics!

The conference's emphasis upon constructive and preventive measures, upon the value of character-building agencies, and upon the importance of the social and educational rather than the legalistic and penal approach, all made a happy contrast to the atmosphere of the Attorney-General's Conference on Crime held in the same city in December. For similar reasons the conference had significance for the Church. It pointed to the importance of such character-building agencies as the Girls' Friendly Society and the Order of Sir Galahad. It should encourage the Church Mission of Help to increase the caliber and extent of its preventive work. It challenged each diocesan Social Service Department to do a more vital job in social education. It called for definite action along the lines of the Christian citizenship program of the Woman's Auxiliary. Indirectly it even summoned the Church's institutions for dependent children to re-appraise their work in the light of a careful follow-up of their children.

In addition to Bishop Cook, the National Council was represented by the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, Executive Secretary of the Department of Christian Social Service. Other Churchmen in attendance were Mrs. Maud Minor Hadden, New York; Henry A. Hunt, Fort Valley, Georgia, and Mrs. Harper Sibley, Rochester, N. Y.

SPECIAL EXAMINING COMMITTEE.

Acting upon many inquiries and upon the request of the diocese of Eau Claire, the Presiding Bishop has asked the Bishops of Western Michigan, Michigan and Ohio to act as a special committee to examine, and make recommendations upon, the orders and status of the Rev. Dr. John Torok, of the diocese of Eau Claire.

FORMALITIES OF CROSSING BORDER INTO CANADA.

The Episcopal Social Work Conference, which is to be held in Montreal, June 9 to 14, is the third to have an international aspect. The first was in Toronto in 1924; the second was that of 1933, in which the sessions were divided between Detroit, Michigan, and Windsor, Ontario.

In view of the closeness of Montreal to dioceses within New York and New England, many of the clergy and Episcopal social workers are expecting to drive by auto to Montreal. Some of these have inquired of the Department of Christian Social Service as to immigration formalities involved in crossing the border. That Department has received the following information from the Deputy Minister of Immigration and Colonization of the Canadian Government:

"It is the desire and policy of the Canadian Government to eliminate as far as possible any delay or inconvenience to bona fide tourists entering Canada from the United States. Only the duty of guarding against the admittance, in the guise of tourists, of persons not legally admissible, necessitates such simple formalities as are required. In brief, citizens of the United States entering Canada as tourists may expect no inconvenience whatever. Persons who are not citizens of the United States should carry evidence that they are legally resident in your country, and they should be in position to satisfy the Canadian officer at the International Boundary that they will have no difficulty in returning to the United States. Tourists' automobiles are admitted without charge, and may be driven for pleasure in Canada under their State licenses for a period of sixty days, which period may be extended upon application."

SERVICES IN SPIRIT OF FORWARD MOVEMENT.

The staff at Church Missions House is having a series of services in the spirit of the Forward Movement, during Ascension-tide, leading up to Whitsunday, with an address by Bishop Washburn on the Forward Movement at the noon service on Wednesday, June 5. The entire series, in the Chapel of Church Missions House, includes: the Holy Communion at 9 on June 4 and 6; on May 31, at noon, "A Litany for Our Nation"; June 3, 4 and 6, the usual service at noon with emphasis on the Forward Movement; June 7, at noon, a Litany, "Christ and the Modern World". Clergy of the staff conduct the services.

CHURCH MISSION OF HELP'S WORK IN CHICAGO.

Among the 110 girls aided last year by Church Mission of Help in the Diocese of Chicago, forty-seven classified as Episcopalians. Of these, all but nine came from homes broken by death, divorce, or other circumstance that made life there appear to the girl unendurable. One girl's mother had told her she ought to be adopted into some other family as she would never fit into her own. Another girl of sixteen had seen her father only once and he had then refused to talk to her.

DEVOTION AND LOYALTY OF EXILED PEOPLE IS THE HOPE OF THE EASTERN CHURCH.

Among the clergy who shepherd the Eastern Orthodox in the Far East is the Rev. S. P. Uspendsky, a kind of canon missioner for south China and the Philippines. He laid foundations for a parish in Manila on his first visit a year ago and on his second visit, recently, the Cathedral of St. Mary and St. John helped him to furnish the north transept as a chapel for his services. His congregation includes not only Russians but also Greeks, Serbs, and Yugoslavs. As usual in Russian services, their choir has attracted much admiration. The group hopes to grow into a church of its own, and, as Canon Ward of the Cathedral says, "We hope that through the devotion and loyalty of these exiled people the Church may once again be restored in their homeland."

"YES, OUR WORK IS MISSIONARY."

"In less than three years we have absorbed a cut of $5,000," writes Bishop Ablewhite of the Diocese of Marquette, the far northern area of Wisconsin which is a rural missionary field in all but name. "The largest salary we are now paying," the Bishop continues, "is $2,400, but this actually means about $1,700, as we furnish no cars nor the upkeep of any. A man who travels 1,500 miles a month at four cents a mile, which is the least that the cost and upkeep of a car can be figured, must take $600 from his salary at once, and this does not really cover the cost to him.

"We thank the general Church and the National Council for all they have done and are doing, but again we remind them that we send dozens of Churchmen a year into the dioceses to the south of us. This will be always the case, and for that reason we feel that the Church must help us to carry on. Over a thousand square miles for each one of our clergy. Yes, our work is missionary. Great fortunes of material wealth have gone from this country to Boston, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Chicago and many other places. Surely this creates a responsibility to help us carry on. We give thanks for all that we have received and we pray not to be forgotten in the future."

GREEK AND SYRIANS ACQUIRE CHURCHES OF THEIR OWN.

Two Eastern Orthodox groups in Louisville, Greeks and Syrians, who in the past have been befriended by the Episcopal Church, have now attained churches of their own. The Syrians used to meet in the Cathedral House on Sunday mornings and some attended Grace Church. The Greeks held services in the Cathedral Sunday afternoons. There are more than 1,000 Greeks and Syrians in Louisville.

After a struggle of several years the Syrians are in a church of their own, St. Michael's, said to be the only Syrian Church in Kentucky. The Rev. Thomas N. Abodeely is in charge. He has taken part in the monthly meetings of the Louisville clericus.

Also, the Greek Church, after two years without a resident priest, now has one, Archimandrite Charalampes, known to his flock as Father Marinos. Two brothers have paid off the debt on the church, so the people are now able to keep up current expenses. The Greek children are to receive religious instruction from Father Marinos on week-days, after public school hours.

THE NEED OF THE CHINESE OUTSIDE OF CHINA.

Canon Waddy's remark about the Church's need to minister to Chinese outside China brings to mind the Chinese congregations in Calcutta. A Chinese layman, Chung Jen-yung, looks after them. Eleven were baptized last year. Mr. Chung has a reading-room open to non-Christians, visited by an average of fifty people every day. Two members of the mission visit hospitals twice a week, looking up Chinese patients.

This mission resulted from the interest taken by a Chinese layman, Monroe Leo, from the district of Hankow, who went to Calcutta in 1930 as first consul general for India from the Republic of China. He has since become consul general of Korea. His brother is principal of Boone, Middle School, Wuchang.

VIRGINIA.

Annual Meeting of the Council.

Immediately preceding the annual meeting of the Council of the Diocese of Virginia there was held in old St. Paul's Church, King George County, May 14, a service commemorating the sesqui-centennial of the diocese. The rector, the Rev. Floyd Cartwright, had charge of the services, assisted by the Bishops of the diocese and by other ministers. At the morning service the preacher was the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., of the diocese of Southern Virginia. At the afternoon service the Rev. G. MacL. Brydon, D. D., historiographer of the diocese, delivered an historical address on the revival of the Church in Virginia at the beginning of the nineteenth century. He was followed by the Rt. Rev. F. D. Goodwin, D. D., who spoke on the Missionary Motive in the Life of the Church. Following this a tablet was unveiled by Mr. George Stewart to the memory of the Rev. Joseph Raphael Andrus, the rector of the parish under whom it was revived, and the first missionary sent from Virginia to a foreign field. Many visitors attended the services from Richmond and other neghboring cities and towns, as well as the delegates to the Council, which met the following day at St. George's Church, Fredericksburg.

On Tuesday night a service was held in St. George's, with a sermon by the Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, and on Wednesday night the annual Council sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Y. Downman, D. D., rector emeritus of All Saints Church, Richmond.

Bishop Tucker convened the Council Wednesday morning, at which time he delivered his annual address, which was followed by the report of the official acts of Bishop Goodwin. The approval of the Council was given to the budget for 1936, totalling $140,000. The report of the commission on changes in the constitution of the diocese was accepted, which will become effective after passing the Council of 1936.

A telegram of affectionate regard was sent to the Rev. Giles B. Cooke, last surviving member of the staff of General R. E. Lee, who was unable to be present. The Council then stood at attention for a moment in recognition of the long years of service he and his kinsman, Mr. J. Churchill Cooke, lay delegate from St. David's, Hanover County, have rendered the diocese. Mr. Churchill Cooke has attended sixty-eight meetings of the Council. He is the last surviving Confederate soldier in the Council.

The Council adjourned Thursday afternoon to meet in 1936 in St. James Church, Leesburg.

Dr. Franklin to Be Guest of Seminary.

The Virginia Theological Seminary has invited Lewis B. Franklin, D. C. L., vice-president and treasurer of the National Council, to preach the missionary sermon at the service to be held on June 5 as part of the commencement exercises.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop

The Annual Council.

The sixteenth Annual Council of the diocese was held May 14-15 in Grace Memorial Church, Lynchburg, the Rev. Richard H. Lee, rector. The sessions were quite harmonious, with very little in the way of fireworks. As usual there was a supper under the auspices of the Laymen's League on Monday evening, preceding the opening of Council. Mr. M. A. Smythe, of Roanoke, president of the League, had charge of the meeting. Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, vice-president and treasurer of the National Council, made an excellent address, emphasizing the necessity of obedience to law, ecclesiastical, moral, civil and natural as opposed to the present day tendency toward an excess of individual freedom. Officers of the Laymen's League elected for the coming year were:

President, Major E. Walton Opie, of Staunton.

Vice-president, Mr. W. B. Bowles, of Salem.

Secretary, Mr. Najah C. Taylor, of Staunton.

The Council opened on Tuesday morning with a celebration of the Holy Communion, and at this time the Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., made his annual address to the Council. The Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D., Bishop of Southern Ohio, spoke on the Forward Movement at the missionary mass meeting Tuesday evening. Bishop Hobson was able to create in his hearers a deepened interest in this great spiritual adventure of the Church. At the Wednesday morning session the Rev. Dr. Joseph B. Dunn, of Richmond, who was for a number of years rector of St. Paul's Church in Lynchburg, led the devotional services with an impressive meditation on the Lord's Prayer.

Bishop Jett presented to the Rev. Frank Mezick the Award of Merit of the Order of the Sangreal, which had been conferred upon Mr. Mezick in recognition of his faithful and efficient service as rector of one country parish, comprising nearly the whole of Nelson County, for the past thirty-three years.

By special resolution, the Council paid affectionate tribute to Mrs. W. H. B. Loving, of Roanoke, who, since the organization of the diocese, has been one of the most active members of the Woman's Auxiliary, serving as treasurer for three years, as president for seven years, as custodian of the United Thank Offering for two years, and representing Southwestern Virginia in the Triennials at the last four General Conventions.

The Council also expressed its deep appreciation of the ministry of the Rev. Edward W. Hughes, of Bluefield, who has been a missionary in the western section of this diocese since 1914, and is now celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination.

The more important elections during the Council resulted as follows:

Standing Committee: Rev. Thomas D. Lewis, D. D., Rev. Carleton Barnwell, D. D., Rev. William C. Marshall, Mr. C. S. Hutter, Colonel William King, Jr., Mr. A. D. W. Walton.

Examining Chaplains: Rev. Thomas D. Lewis, D. D., Amherst; Rev. Devall L. Gwathmey, D. D., Wytheville.

The Council accepted an invitation to meet in 1936 at St. John's Church, Roanoke, the Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, D. D., rector. T. A. S.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman D. D. Bishop.

First President Undoubtedly Legally Proved to Be a "Christian".

The case of the Freethinkers of America vs. Trinity Church, New York, has been dismissed in court, on the ground that "the plaintiff had no standing to criticize" the plaque, which the plaintiff was suing to have removed from St. Paul's Chapel. The Freethinkers alleged that the prayer contained in the wording on the plaque was not "Washington's prayer", and also held that Washington "was not a Christian". The plaintiff pays costs and has twenty days in which to appeal.

Through this writer, the historiographer of the diocese of Virginia, Dr. B. MacLaren Brydon, furnished evidence of records proving that Washington was baptized in 1732; was a member of the building committee for old Pohick Church, not far from Alexandria, and that he was duly elected to the vestry of Truro parish, taking oath to abide by the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Church—which would undoubtedly prove that he was a "Christian", although the attorneys write that they did not have to go into the "religious beliefs" of the first president in order to have the case dismissed.

Massing of Colors.

On May 26 the annual service of Massing the Colors, which always proves to be the most colorful and one of the most inspiring religious ceremonies in the national capital, will be held on Mount St. Alban, at the cathedral open-air amphitheatre. Over a hundred patriotic organizations will be represented, and will have banners and flags in the procession.

Memorial to Organist.

A service in memory of the late Edgar Priest, who died several weeks ago, and who was buried at the cathedral, was held on May 19 in the great choir. Music composed by Mr. Priest was used in the service. Jointly with this service, the State of North Carolina was celebrated in a series of services, "The Union of the States" and the State flag was carried in the procession.

Bishop Condemns Cards for Church Benefit.

At the spring session of the Northern Convocation, held May 15 at St. John's Church, Mt. Rainier, Bishop James E. Freeman vigorously condemned the practice of holding card parties, raffles, etc., to raise money for parish purposes in the diocese. He held that this is contrary to the spirit of the Church, and asserted that there are many proper and legitimate ways of raising funds for church work.

Rectors and Women Meet.

Bishop and Mrs. Freeman entertained on May 20 the members of both the Washington Clericus and the diocesan Rectory Club, the latter an organization of the women of the various rectories throughout the diocese, at the Bishop's house, Cathedral Close. This is an annual social occasion of much interest in clerical circles in the diocese of Washington.

Windows Dedicated.

At a private ceremony on May 21, the Bishop of Washington dedicated three stained-glass windows, beneath the rose window in the north transept of the Cathedral, in the presence of a small group of persons interested in the memorial windows, made possible by Mrs. James Parmelee, whose late husband is interred at the Cathedral, and whose later gift of $50,000 makes possible the early resumption of work on the Cathedral building, discontinued two years ago for lack of funds.

Crime Prevention Subject of Conference on Social Education Meeting at White House.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt opened the annual conference on Social Education, which was held on May 18 in the White House. Charles P. Taft, of Cincinnati, son of the late President Taft and well known Churchman, presided. The conference was organized by Paul W. Garrett, of New York, and had the approval of President Roosevelt, although he was unable to be present. Mrs. Roosevelt made a brief talk and plead for crime prevention, by co-ordinating all social agencies in the interest of improved social conditions generally.

Bishop Philip Cook, of Wilmington, Del., president of the National Council, and Dr. C. Rankin Barnes, secretary of the national department of Social Service, were among the Episcopal delegates to the conference.

It is estimated that sixty national organizations were represented by the one hundred and fifty or more delegates in attendance. A commission was set up for the purpose of co-ordinating national efforts looking to a common social education program throughout the country.

Bad housing conditions, undernourishment and lack of vocational training were attacked as causes leading to crime and to unwholesome social situations in given communities.

"Recent studies at Sing Sing and elsewhere have demonstrated that the institution is only the finishing school of a long educational process which begins in childhood, in the streets and alleys in which the unguarded and undirected child finds the only outlet for his energy," declared Dr. George Kirchway, a former warden of Sing Sing. "The cause of crime is bad company, and the cause of habitual crime is bad habits, kept alive by bad company. The remedy is good company," he said.

Dr. John W. Studebaker, United States Commissioner of Education, spoke on "The Community as a Unit in Social Education". Paul Garrett, founder of the conference, said in part, "We have studied statistics on crime. We know its extent and something of its cost, but we have thought of it as a far-away, national problem. . . . Most communities have factors which aggravate the crime problem. Conditions which predispose to crime, such as bad housing, lack of recreational facilities and false standards of value, warp the lives of scores, even when they do not push them into actual crime".

Other speakers were Dr. George Zook, Dr. John Ryan, Justice Florence E. Allen, Dr. Miriam Van Waters and Judge Irving Lehman. T. F. O.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Miss Meacham, Native Chicagoan, Tells of Work in Liberia.

The impress which the Church's work in Liberia is having upon the native population there was told by Miss Olive Meacham, native Chicagoan, principal of the Julia C. Emery Hall, Bromley, upon her return to the city this week. Miss Meacham addressed several church groups and spoke at St. Mark's, Evanston.

The temporary closing of Julia C. Emery Hall was one of the tangible and important effects of the depression in Liberia, said Miss Meacham. She rejoiced over the action of National Council in voting to reopen the school.

She told an interesting story of how the girls go out from Emery Hall to build Christian homes in the community about the school and how this gradual process is effecting all of the life of the natives in the district. Besides ten academic grades of book training, the school gives an intensive and practical training in gardening, mothercraft, marketing, tropical hygiene and homemaking.

Miss Meacham recalled the time when she shivered when the temperature "got down" to eighty degrees. The wild African animals and reptiles, such as crocodiles, monkeys, pythons and leopards, are not so wild after all, in the experience of this missionary. She related an incident when a python entered a henhouse at her school and stole eggs from beneath a setting hen. The python was killed and it was discovered that one of the eggs had hatched after being swallowed by the reptile and the chick was still alive.

Record for Speed!

Two hours after he was born at the West Suburban Hospital, Peter Blair Weeks, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Weeks, of Grace Church, Oak Park, became the youngest contributor to the Million Dollar Centenary Campaign. The child was born at 6 A. M. Colonel Edward J. Blair, grandfather of the child, is chairman of the Grace Church Campaign Committee, and claims the honor of having "signed up" the youngster for a pledge of $50.

Chicago Campaign Moves Ahead.

Over the top was the report of the first parish to report on its share in the Centenary Campaign of the diocese this week. St. Mark's, Glen Ellyn, was the parish. It launched its campaign a few days ahead of the general drive and sought $15,000. More than that amount was subscribed when the victory dinner was held Monday night, May 6.

Interestingly, a descendant of the missionary pioneer, Jackson Kemper, was chairman of the Glen Ellyn drive. He is John Kemper, vestryman of the parish and official of a loop department store.

Most of the larger parishes of the diocese launched their drives for the Centenary Fund the week of May 13.

Choir Festival.

Six hundred choristers representing twenty churches of the city and suburbs participated in the annual festival concert of the Chicago choirmasters' Association, composed of Episcopal choirs, at Orchestra Hall, May 19. Directing was Mr. Robert R. Birch, organist and choirmaster of Church of the Redeemer, Hyde Park.

Plan Summer Conference.

Plans for a record-breaking conference of Church School Workers of the diocese, to be held at Kemper Hall, Kenosha, for a two weeks' period, starting June 24, are nearing completion. The Very Rev. Gerald G. Moore, dean of St. Luke's Pro-Cathedral, Evanston, is chairman of the committee.

Twenty-four Nations Represented.

With representatives of twenty-four nations in attendance, including the consuls of some twenty countries, British people of Chicago paid tribute to the silver jubilee of King George V. at St. James' Church, Sunday, May 12. The service was arranged by Dr. Duncan H. Browne, rector of St. James', in cooperation with the British consul, the Hon. Lewis Bernays, and British societies of the city.

In the address, Dr. Browne made a strong appeal for international friendship, particularly between English-speaking nations. A color guard from Fort Sheridan carried the American colors in the procession, and Canadian veterans carried the British colors. The kilt band of Post No. 61, Canadian Veterans, played in front of the church before the service and marched into a reserved section as the service began.

British patriotic organizations, the mayor of Chicago, Northwestern University and the University of Chicago and Seabury-Western Theological Seminary sent delegations to participate in the service. Among the countries which sent their consuls were: Britain, France, Belgium, Hungary, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Sweden, Switzerland, Denmark and Italy.

Chicago Broadcast May 26.

A radio broadcast in observance of the centennial of the diocese of Chicago, will occur over Chicago Station WLS Sunday evening, May 26, at 7:30 P. M., Chicago Daylight Saving Time. Bishop Stewart will deliver the address, and the choir of St. James' Church will render several numbers. The broadcast is sponsored by the Bishop's Pence, and is the second arranged by the Pence in connection with Church matters. It will continue for half an hour.

Two Chicagoans Honored.

Two Chicagoans were honored this week at commencement exercises at Nashotah Seminary. They were the Ven. Frederick G. Deis, archdeacon of Chicago, and the Rev. Wm. B. Stoskopf, rector of the Church of the Ascension. Both received Doctor of Divinity degrees.

Fr. Stoskopf delivered the commencement address at the exercises. Although a member of the trustees of Nashotah, Fr. Stoskopf's degree was voted during his absence from a meeting of the body, and came as a complete surprise to him. He was rewarded for twenty-five years of service at the Church of the Ascension, and Archdeacon Deis was awarded the degree for his long missioner service in China, as field secretary of the National Council in the diocese of Fond du Lac and diocese of Chicago.

Plan Seabury-Western Commencement.

The Rt. Rev. John Newton McCormick, D. D., Bishop of Western Michigan, will deliver the commencement address at Seabury-Western Theological Seminary, Tuesday, June 11, at 11 o'clock in Anderson Memorial Chapel. Two features of the commencement exercises will be the formal presentation of the Bishop Stewart Centennial Portrait, painted by Ernest Klempner, and the commencement concert on the Allen memorial organ in the Seminary Chapel.

The alumni banquet will be held Monday evening, June 10, with the Rev. Douglass Atwill, of St. Paul, Minn., as the speaker. Bishop Frank McElwain, of Minnesota, will be the toastmaster.

Several honorary degrees will be awarded at the commencement exercises, according to the Very Rev. Frederick C. Grant, president.

EASTON.

Rt. Rev. G. W. Davenport, D. D., Bishop

Annual Diocesan Convention.

The sixty-seventh annual Convention of the Diocese of Easton met on May 7 in S. Peter's Church, Salisbury, Maryland, and was opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion, at which time the Bishop delivered his annual address. It was partly a review of the work in the diocese during the past fifteen years of his episcopacy, and showed the diocese to be in a greatly improved condition as regards physical equipment and financial standing. The Bishop highly commended the Forward Movement, and urged all rectors and parishes to make full use of the opportunity offered through the literature and suggestions sent out by the National Committee on Forward Movement.

The improved financial condition in the diocese was shown by the reports of the various diocesan and parochial treasurers.

One of the most encouraging reports was that of the Woman's Auxiliary presented by Mrs. Barclay H. Trippe, president.

At the annual dinner, which was presided over by the Bishop, inspirational addresses were made by two visiting clergymen, the Rt. Rev. Benjamin M. Washburn, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of Newark, and the Rev. S. T. Sparkman, rector of Christ Church, Baltimore, and by Mr. F. W. C. Webb, Chancellor of the diocese.

The elections resulted as follows:

Secretary—Mr. S. E. Shannahan.

Treasurer of the Convention—Mr. Barclay H. Trippe.

Standing Committee—Rev. Alward Chamberlaine, Rev. William McClelland, Rev. Robert W. Lewis, Hon. William H Adkins, Dr. E. J. Clark.

Executive Council—Rev. William McClelland, Rev. Alward Chamberlaine, Rev. David Dallas, Dr. Zadok Henry. The four other members held over.

Delegates to the Synod—Rev. Percy T. Fenn, D. D., Rev. R. B. Mathews, D. D., Rev. James W. Albinson, D. D., Rev. Herbert Jukes.

Treasurer of Field Department—Mr. E. R. Buck.

Treasurer of Pension Fund—Mr. E. C. Fulton.

Grace Church Celebrates Centennial.

The centennial of Grace Church, Sandusky, Ohio, the Rev. Donald Wonders, rector, was celebrated on Tuesday, May 21. The schedule of services was 7:30 and 10 o'clock, the Holy Communion; 4, a reception in the parish house; 6, a dinner for the visiting clergy; 7:30, evening service, with the Rev. Dr. Karl Reiland, rector of St. George's Church in New York, as guest preacher.

Grace Church was organized on March 13, 1835. The guiding spirits were Mrs. John G. Camp and her brother, Zenas Ward Barker, both of whom were members of St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, and who had recently come to Sandusky. The beginnings of the parish flourished and, on July 31, 1935, the new church was ready to have its cornerstone laid. The officiating clergy were the Rev. Mr. Shelton, rector of St. Paul's Church, Buffalo, and the Rev. Ephriam Punderson, rector of St. Paul's Church, Norwalk, Ohio. The parish is still using this original building as its place of worship.

During the one hundred years, the parish records show that 2,201 persons have been baptized; 2,034 confirmed; 766 married, and 1,434 buried.

Many young men have gone into the ministry and the following were sent directly from the parish:

Eleutheros Jay Cooke, deceased.

Charles Henry Arndt, D. D., rector-emeritus, Christ Church and St. Michael's Church, Germantown, Pa.

William J. Hawthorne, rector of St. Luke's Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

Jay J. Dimon, D. D., Diocese of Washington.

George A. Wieland, S. T. D., rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Seattle, Washington.

Rush R. Sloane, rector of St. Luke's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

William C. Seitz, S. T. D., Professor, Bexley Hall, Gambier, Ohio.

Paul R. Savanack, rector of St. Luke's Church, Cleveland, Ohio.

Louis M. Hirshson, rector-emeritus of St. Stephen's Church, Sewickley, Pa.

Ernest Risley, rector of St. Mary's Church, Beaver Falls, Pa.

Other sons of the parish who have entered the ministry from other places are:

James E. Foster, rector of Christ Church, Gary, Ind.

Franklin C. St. Clair, rector of St. James' Church, Manitowoc, Wis.

William G. Gehri, rector of Trinity Church, Morgantown, W. Va.

Philip M. Brown, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Dayton, Ohio.

At the present time there are 450 families in the parish and a communicant list of 830.

Twentieth Annual Convention for Religious Education.

A very successful Convention for Religious Education was held in Cleveland on May 7, in St. Paul's Church, the Rev. W. R. Breed, D. D., rector.

More than 500 persons attended from all parts of the diocese. The speakers included the Rev. Gerald C. Clarke (chairman); the Very Rev. Chester B. Emerson, D. D.; Rt. Rev. Warren L. Rogers, D. D., Bishop of Ohio; the Rev. Irwin C. Johnson, leader in Religious Education, Diocese of Michigan; the Rev. John R. Stalke, D. D.; the Rt. Rev. H. S. Ablewhite, D. D., Bishop of Marquette.

ATLANTA.

Diocese Endorses Efforts of St. Elizabeth's Mission.

Father J. K. Satterwhite, priest-in-charge of St. Elizabeth's Mission, La Grange, Ga., spoke to the Atlanta Clericus on Monday, May 13, at All Saints' Church.

St. Elizabeth's is engaged in a campaign to erect permanent chapel and missions buildings as a memorial to Bishop C. K. Nelson, the first Bishop of Atlanta, who started this mission, and remained an ardent supporter of it until his death.

Bishop H. J. Mikell has continued and further developed the work among the colored people of La Grange through this mission.

The Diocesan Council passed the following resolutions: "That the twenty-eighth Council of the Diocese of Atlanta, meeting in the Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip in annual session, January 23-24, 1935, goes on record endorsing the efforts of St. Elizabeth's Mission, La Grange, to build their chapel and missions buildings, thus approving this project as a voluntary diocesan priority for the current year." The entire Council burst into instantaneous applause following the talk made by the Rev. J. K. Satterwhite about the work of the mission and its effects upon the lives of the colored people of La Grange.

St. John's College Park Wins Bishop's Banner.

A very beautiful children's service was held at the Pro-Cathedral, Atlanta, Sunday afternoon, May 5. The music was by the Junior choirs of the diocese. The long line of vested choirs was indeed an inspiring sight as they sang "Onward, Christian Soldiers", in procession as they entered the Cathedral.

The Rev. David C. Wright, of Athens, delivered a message to the children, after which Bishop Mikell gave a short talk and finally divulged the secret which every child was eager to hear. "The banner this year," announced the Bishop, "will go to the College Park St. John's Church School for having the largest per capita Lented box offering." A thrill of joy went through the group as the Junior choir of St. John's marched out with the new banner. They were also happy to know that their sister church, the Holy Comforter of Atlanta, took second honors. The Rev. Woolsey E. Couch is vicar of both churches and Mr. E. L. Schenck is superintendent of St. John's School, and Andrew Shiel, the efficient and enthusiastic superintendent of the Holy Comforer Church School. Last year Holy Comforter won first place and the Bishop's banner.

Woman's Auxiliary of Athens District Holds Meeting.

The women of the Athens District of the diocese, met Wednesday, May 22, at Grace Church, Gainesville, Ga.

Members of the Executive Board were entertained at a luncheon by Mrs. L. P. Quillian, president of the Auxiliary of Grace Church.

The Rev. G. C. Hinshelwood, rector of Grace Church; Mrs. Marshall Ellis, Diocesan President, and the officers and committee chairman spoke.

The Diocese of Atlanta is divided into three districts—Athens, Mrs. Harold Castleberry, vice-president, in charge; Atlanta, Mrs. J. F. Heard, vice-president, in charge, and Macon, Mrs. Banks Yonge, vice-president, in charge, for the purpose of a closer coordination of the work of the parishes and a knitting together of the work of the entire diocese.

Student Group Plans.

The Episcopal students of the University of Georgia will hold their third corporate Communion Sunday, May 26, in Emmanuel Church, Athens. Breakfast will be served afterwards in the parish house by Louise Starr, Episcopal Student Worker at the University, and some of the members of the Woman's Auxiliary. (Rain is expected for nearly everything planned by this group is drenched by sudden showers.)

Plans are being made for the Senior Party and half-day retreat the latter part of May.

"Forward Together—Christian Youth Building a New World."

The Young People of the diocese held their annual convention at St. Thomas' Church, Thomasville, the Rev. Robb White, Jr., rector, on May 10, 11 and 12. The meeting was largely attended, there being sixty-three young people present, with ten parishes and missions represented. The theme of the convention was "Forward Together—Christian Youth Building a New World".

The convention opened formally on Saturday morning with Morning Prayer and a Litany for the Nation, conducted by the rector, following which the meeting adjourned to the parish house for the business sessions. The Rev. Armand T. Eylor, rector of Christ Church, Valdosta, who was to have spoken on "Forward Together", was prevented by illness from attending and the Rev. Mr. White made the address. Others speaking were: Miss Elsie Brown, National Field Worker for the Girls' Friendly Society, who attended the meeting to get the viewpoint of the young people of this section of the country, and Mrs. J. W. Griffeth, Executive Secretary of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education and Diocesan Counselor of the Young People's Division, who gave a short talk on "Christian Youth Building a New World". The reports of the young people as to their place in the Church were most interesting: Some are acolytes, church school teachers, sing in the choir, assist in the Every Member Canvass, visit the sick, make layettes and do other community work.

Under the general theme, "Christian Youth Building a New World", there were discussions on the "Awareness of Conditions of the World Today", unemployment, unjustness, business, wealth, war, education, etc. The young people displayed a keen knowledge of current conditions and entered most enthusiastically into the discussions.

Among the views expressed were that individuals should put themselves right before trying to right the world. That while they may not be able to get out to help their community, because they have no money, they themselves can be an example of Christian living to the community and that one community can set an example to another.

Under "The Awareness of War-clouds" hovering over us; what will the young people do in the event of war? there was much interesting discussion. War was declared barbarian and uncivilized, as murder; that the United States, in the event of a war, should not take the offensive; that the Government should control munitions and should remain neutral unless the war is brought to this shore.

That the only way by which war might be prevented is to develop in people a feeling of Christianity stronger than the feeling of patriotism. They thought that while there bad been fewer wars, that they had been more barbarous than those of old, but they did think that the people of the nations are trying to get together more. That war has never settled a question nor ended war, but on the contrary has brought up more hatred; that to prevent war is the problem. While he admitted that he did not know how it could be done, one young person said that as the Church flag flies above the United States flag, so he felt that if the Cross is put above patriotism, one would not want to fight.

Should religion be mixed with politics brought out a chorus of "noes". One of the young people said that there should be religion in politics, but not politics in religion, and to bring about better world conditions, Christians should be at the head of governments and that in their selection of civic leaders only those who have shown by their life and work that they are Christians should be elected; a person should not be elected just because he is a Christian if he has shown no qualification for leadership.

As to the unemployment situation and being friendly to everyone regardless of race or creed, they agreed that one could be friendly with individuals of any race or creed, but that that taken as a whole they just could not. Most of the foreigners they meet are not congenial socially nor intellectually, and only a few of the group could see that probably the young people of other lands see us in the same light. They all agreed that employment should be given to all American citizens, regardless of race or creed, but that the doors should be shut against newcomers as thing are now.

It was all very interesting, particularly as the delegates ranged in age from fourteen to twenty-one years of age.

On Saturday evening the Rev. Mr. White conducted a preparation service for the Corporate Communion, at which he was the celebrant Sunday morning at eight o'clock. At the eleven o'clock service he installed the newly-elected officers, and the convention adjourned after the service.

St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Hastings, An Outstanding Architectural Treasure.

The Pence Plan has been inaugurated in St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Hastings, as a means for liquidating the indebtedness on the church.

The Pro-Cathedral, designed by Ralph Adams Cram, of Boston, represents an expenditure of $165,000.00; and is free of all debt with the exception of $5,000.00. Boxes, or containers, have been placed in the homes of the parishioners, and it is expected that each communicant will place in the box before meals a penny and then offer a prayer to God.

In 1926 when the Very Rev. Francis R. Lee became Dean of the Pro-Cathedral, the congregation was worshipping in the Crypt. Six months after his installation as Dean, it was decided to tackle again the construction problem. Building operations were, therefore, resumed, and this great house of God has risen in glory.

A distinguished art critic recently stated in a public address that the outstanding architectural treasures of Nebraska are the State Capitol in Lincoln, the Roman Catholic Cathedral in Grand Island and St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Hastings. The church is English Gothic of the thirteenth century.

The Rt. Rev. George Allen Beecher, D. D., Bishop of Western Nebraska, visited the Pro-Cathedral on Sunday, May 12. At the early celebration of the Holy Communion, one hundred received the Holy Sacrament. At the 11:00 o'clock service the seating capacity of the church was taxed. Dean Lee presented a class of twenty-two for confirmation, which is the second class presented during 1935.

Thirteenth Annual Convention.

Hospitality for the thirteenth annual diocesan convention, held in Daytona Beach on May 7-9, was extended by the group of Volusia County churches and their rectors—St. Mary's and Holy Trinity of Daytona Beach; St. James of Ormond Beach; Grace Church, Port Orange; St. Paul's, New Smyrna; and St. Barnabas, DeLand. Over 2,000 persons attended the opening service, choral evensong, held in the Peabody auditorium. Choirs from several parishes combined to render special music, and the Rt. Rev. Henry J. Mikell, D. D., LL. D., of Atlanta, preached an inspiring sermon on the witness of the Church as God's spokesman to the world.

Bishop Wing's annual address called attention to the hopeful outlook for the Church in South Florida, with increasing attendance each year of laymen for the convention and of women for their meetings. Speaking of relations between the white and the Negro races, Bishop Wing said, "If we are in any wise true to the teaching and spirit of the religion of Jesus Christ, we must by word and good example strive for the elimination of racial hatred and the fostering of mutual respect, mutual understanding and mutual helpfulness."

Reports showed improvements in church property and unusual activity in the departments of Social Service and of Religious Education, also encouraging progress amid difficulties by the Cathedral School for Girls, Orlando. Deaconess Bedell told of progress made with the Seminole Indians, and Chaplain Heber W. Weller reported work among twenty-six Civilian Conservation Camps, these including 2,526 men and 36 officers. The Rev. John E. Culmer of St. Agnes, Miami, showed marked progress among the Negroes, stating that South Florida has more Negro communicants than are in nine other Southern dioceses combined.

Diocesan officers were re-elected, vacancies supplied, and deputies to the Provincial Synod elected.

Auxiliary and Daughters of the King Also Meet.

Annual meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary and of the Daughters of the King were held in connection with the diocesan convention. Mrs. E. W. Shaw, of Tampa, who has served zealously as diocesan custodian of the United Thank Offering for twenty years, resigned, and Mrs. McClellan, of Cocoanut Grove, was elected to this office.

Diocesan officers of the Daughters of the King are: Miss Mary Wicks, of Orlando, president; Miss Helen Warner, of Coral Gables, vice-president; Miss Elinor Wilkinson, of New Smyrna, secretary; and Mrs. Miriam Kirk, of Miami, treasurer.

Dignity of Worship—High Spiritual Note Mark Annual Convention.

The diocese of South Florida this year had a convention that was different. It was held at Daytona Beach, all of the other churches in that county cooperating as hosts. The Rev. Harry G. Walker, rector of St. Mary's Church, Daytona Beach, was in charge of the arrangements and determined that the Convention should strike a high spiritual note, and should show to the community the majesty and beauty of the Church's worship.

The opening service of the Convention was held in the evening in the public auditorium, an immense building, which was filled with the Church's loyal people and their friends. The huge stage was converted into an effective chancel, large palms and other shrubbery forming a wall, which effectually concealed the wings and stage scenery and gave perfectly the effect of a church in a great forest. In the center was a large altar, with all the appropriate ornaments; the red hangings, to indicate the pentecostal nature of the Convention, the tall candles and the high cross standing in beautiful contrast to the green surroundings.

The massed choir of the churches of the county, carefully trained by Dr. Walker, all of the clergy of the diocese and the Bishops, vested in the ancient insignia of their office, marched in their robes from another public building nearly a block away, amid respectful crowds, singing some of the processional hymns of the Church. In the auditorium was sung full Evening Prayer. The Bishop of Atlanta preached a powerful sermon, accentuating the ever pentecostal nature of the Church. Bishop Wing of South Florida, in beautiful raiment of blue and gold, with his mitre and pastoral staff, pronounced the benediction. The care with which every detail of the Church's symbolism was carried out, the artistic settings, and the beauty which the choir gave to the service, made a deep impression on the entire community, and was reflected in the high spiritual note which pervaded all the sessions of the Convention. When the Church is a small minority, it is especially good that its formal ecclesiastical gatherings should exhibit to all the effectiveness with which it presents the Truth in the dignity of worship; and in these days of the Forward Movement, emphasis on the everlasting and universal mission of the Church must be helpful.

South Florida has helped raise a Diocesan Convention toward the level of the memorable General Conventions.

Special Anniversary Services at Christ Church.

On Sunday, April 28, special services were held in Christ Church, Little Rock, commemorating the ninety-sixth anniversary of the founding of this historical old parish. These annual services constitute parts of the five-year centennial program. The actual centennial taking place in 1939. At that time the celebration will run through a whole week, and be elaborate in its nature.

One of the leading features of the service this year, was an eloquent and inspiring sermon by the Rt. Rev. R. N. Spencer, D. D., Bishop of West Missouri. Another feature was the wearing of appropriate badges by the descendants of the founders and pioneer builders. Another feature still was special music, particularly, a centennial hymn for Christ Church.

Telegrams and letters from descendants of founders and pioneers, as well as some of the pioneers themselves, were received from various parts of the country.

That evening a beautiful pageant, setting forth the Resurrection of Christ, known as "The Holy Sepulchre," by Lyman Bayard, was presented by a cast of over thirty. The pageant was in the church, and with this sacred background was a wonderfully impressive presentation of the Resurrection.

Altogether, the day was one of great inspiration and helpfulness to the parish and its people and friends.

WEST VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., Coadjutor

Council Report.

"A greater interest in spiritual matters must be aroused in our people," said Bishop Gravatt, speaking in the interest of the Forward Movement in his opening address to the fifty-eighth annual council of the diocese, at Trinity Church, Moundsville, May 7-9. The Rev. Dr. W. F. Tunks, Akron, Ohio, member of the Forward Movement Commission, explained the work of the Commission in an address before the council at a mass meeting on May 8.

Changes made by council on committees and boards were: Rev. George Shirley, Charleston, elected examining chaplain to the Bishop, replacing the Rev. W. P. Chrisman, deceased; the Rev. L. F. Kent, Shepherdstown, elected to replace the Rev. C. W. Sydnor, Wheeling, on the standing committee; the Rev. Ben R. Roller, White Sulphur, elected chairman of the Board of Missions.

The council favored the Pettengill Bill before Congress (remedying block-booking and blind-selling of motion pictures) and sent resolutions to the West Virginia representatives in Congress.

Delegates to the Provincial Synod elected were: Clerical—Rev. F. T. Cady, J. W. Gummere, Robert H. Gamble, Ben R. Roller. (Alternate, clerical—Rev. W. G. Gheri, L. B. Mead, John Gass, S. R. Tyler.) Lay—Messrs. E. P. May, John Hopkins, S. D. Lawrence, R. L. Boyd. (Alternates, Lay—Messrs. L. Tuke, Laidley, Nash, R. M. August.)

Council will meet in St. Paul's Church, Weston, in 1936.

Christ Church, Marion County, Commemorated Centennial.

On May 19, Christ Church Parish, Fairmont, opened its centennial program in commemoration of the establishing of the Church in Marion County one hundred years ago by Bishop Meade near Smithtown, W. Va., and at the same time observed the eightieth anniversary of the life of Christ Church Parish, Fairmont.

The week's program began in Christ Church, with the presentation of the annual confirmation class to Bishop R. E. L. Strider; the afternoon service was a "Homecoming Service" at the site of the original church in Smithtown with The Collect.

Grant, we beseech Thee, Almighty God, that like as we do believe Thy only-begotten Son our Lord Jesus Christ to have ascended into the heavens; so we may also in heart and mind thither ascend, and with Him continually dwell, who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. DECORATION DAY.

Maude Forrest Mumma.

"Why seek ye the living among the Dead?"
This is what the angel said;
Who sat beside the empty tomb,
To hearts made sad by Death's cold doom.

"We come on Decoration Day
Our love and adoration pay
To those not lost, but gone before
Whom spirits seek and hearts adore."

We kneel beside the empty tomb,
And still these words ring through the gloom,
"Why seek ye the living among the Dead,"
Words the Herald Angel said.

"They are not here whom ye would seek,
This is but the memory weak
Of those not lost, but gone before,
Whom spirits seek and hearts adore."

Vindication.

St. Augustine prayed "O Lord, deliver me from the lust of always vindicating myself." This was something that our Lord never did. He never explained anything. He left mistakes to correct themselves. Before the Sanhedrin and the Roman Courts, He was silent. He answered nothing to the accusations so that the Governor marvelled. Our Lord spoke His words out on the air of Palestine and never followed any of them with vindications. Yet His words are more potent today than they have ever been. As He prophesied, they have not passed away.—Exchange.

The Speech of Jesus: Its Power.

The test of words is deeds. Speech that does nothing is simply so much troubled air. "God said, Let there be light: and there was light"; that is the kind of speech that counts. Many men have spoken, but how few men have wrought! All really great speakers have been great doers. They spoke and shaped their words into swords and shields and empires, or into fortune, fame and immortality. Greek orators spoke, and Asiatic hordes staggered back in confusion from their coasts. Roman generals spoke, and a world empire arose around the Mediterranean shores. Luther spoke, and the grip of papal despotism was broken. Napoleon spoke, and the Alps fell flat and the boundaries of empires oscillated on the map. Lincoln spoke, and the fetters of slaves were unloosed.

But there are some words that even these men of might could not speak. They could not speak pardon to a guilty heart or pluck a sorrow from a troubled heart. Jesus Christ spoke and the burden of guilt dropped from human hearts and souls were cleansed into purity and peace. He spoke and the Kingdom of God began to rise in the world. He spoke and old empires were lifted off their hinges and the stream of the centuries was thrown into new channels. He still speaks and at His bidding missionaries go forth to preach His gospel and churches, schools and hospitals arise in every land. He speaks and our whole civilization is being troubled and transformed with a new spirit that will cast out its old evils and build a beautiful city of God.

The verdict of the Jewish officers is proved, that "never man spake like this man". Such a Speaker has something to say that we should all hear and give it our most earnest heed. We cannot turn a deaf to this Man and be as good as ever. In the day of judgment His words will rise up and condemn us. But when we hear Him and do His words we shall find that they are spirit and life.

Prayer Our Great Need.

Back of every great movement in the Kingdom is prayer. The most useful people in all of the churches today are the best prayers. They are far more useful than large givers who do not pray. They are far more useful than preachers who only preach. Great prayers are far more needed than great preachers, great givers, great singers, and great workers, all put together.

If we can have great pray-ers we can have everything else. In many a pulpit today is a cultured preacher fooling away his time on labored, scholarly sermonettes, which fall on the people as the dead leaves of the forest under mid-winter's frost. Vast sums of money may be put into great meeting houses with costly equipments, yet the whole be like a display of cut flowers, without life, and lacking the attractive fragrance of the garden of the Lord. People who are endowed with a deep sense of the spiritual essence of things refuse to be cheated by a lifeless procession. They will not accept word-pictures of bread for bread itself.

What is needed in these valleys of dry dry bones, these beautiful cemeteries of dead churches? The overwhelming need is the Spirit of power and life to make the dead live before the Lord. How can we have the Holy Spirit back in our churches? By prayer. It is a wonderful promise. If two agree as touching anything—this thing of power and life through the Holy Spirit in the church—God will do it. It is sheer nonsense to resort to tricks to work up revivals. It must come down from the Father of mercies, and the right kind of praying can get it.

Ten men could have saved Sodom. Two real pray-ers can save any church. I lay it on the hearts of all who believe in prayer. Take no fright from circumstances, or difficulties. Pray and look to God. He can manage it all. He has lifted distracted, lifeless churches from the dust and converted them into victorious armies.

The short of it is, the Kingdom will come by power, and power is with God. It comes in answer to believing prayer. —Dr. J. B. Gambrell, in Parable and Precept.

SUNRISE COMMUNION.

Rose Akin.

Look toward the East in communion, my soul!
This is the pivotal hour for the sun,
Primed and majestic, to speed for his goal
Scattering glorified beams he has spun.

Never a setting could be more sublime
Morning's quick fusion and flushing with day
Never so fitting a moment for time,
Cleared of earth's hangar to bear me away.
Gladly on wings of a swift flying hour
One could loose fetters that bind one to earth
Lay aside burdens and mount up in power
Gain for the soul the delight of rebirth.

The Goodman's House.

The unnamed faithfuls are the overwhelming majority. We know the few names of leaders. The great crowds who follow the leaders remain unknown. Who was this man in whose home the Lord's last Passover and the first Lord's Supper were eaten? No one knows. What was he? Every one knows, a faithful personal friend of our Lord Jesus.

Those were serious days for friendship with Jesus. The plot against His life was definitely settled upon. Jerusalem was the center of the plot. Things there were at a fever heat. The utmost secrecy must be observed. This man had much to risk. He may likely enough have been a man of property and position. But the Master asks the use of his house. And he gave gladly what was asked, regardless of the danger.

The Master knew his name, and has not forgotten it. He gratefully appreciated this simple token of friendship, when things were at their worst for Him. There is an advantage in being one of the unnamed faithfuls. We know within ourselves that whatever we do, we do for Jesus' sweet sake alone, not for any credit. No crowds will know about us. But He will, and so the faithfulness may be purer.—Rev. S. D. Gordon.

Straight and Personal.

All sermons should have a personal and direct note in them. You remember the time our Lord went to dinner with the pharisee, Simon. Simon neglected the courtesy of foot-washing when our Lord came and afterwards a woman of the streets supplied this lack. Simon sat in gloomy, critical thought, because our Lord let this sinner touch Him. Jesus looked across the table and said, "Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee." It was a word to Simon's thoughts. Never was there a straighter, more direct and personal word.

Christ always speaks thus to us. When our thoughts are on sin can you imagine Christ's word at such a time? When we are unkind, suspicion or censorious, surely Jesus looks at us and says, "I have somewhat to say unto thee." When we reach out our hand to take money that we should not take, when we seize an advantage in business that is not right, again His calm eyes look into ours and His words ring in our ears, "I have somewhat to say unto thee."

Those who speak in Christ's name should catch His accent and His tone. Perhaps you can remember when some man of God spoke such a word to you in some stress or darkness of your past. You will never forget it. A minister's words in the pulpit and out of it, should be kind and loving but also straight and personal.—Exchange.

"I WILL NOT DOUBT."

I will not doubt, though all my ships at sea
Come drifting home with broken masts and sails:
I will believe it is an all-wise Love
From seeming evil, worketh good for me;
And, though I weep because these sails are tattered,
Still will I cry, while my best hopes lie shattered,
"I trust in Thee."

I will not doubt, though all my prayers return
Unanswered from the still white realm above;
I will believe it is an all-wise Love
Which has refused these things for which I yearn:
And though at times I cannot help from grieving,
Yet the pure ardor of my fixed believing,
Undimmed, shall burn.

I will not doubt, though sorrows fall like rain,
And troubles swarm like bees about to hive:
I will believe the heights for which I strive
Are only reached by anguish and by pain;
And though I groan and writhe beneath my crosses,
I yet shall see through my severest losses
The greater gain.

I will not doubt. Well anchored in this faith,
Like some staunch ship, my soul braves every gale,
So strong its courage will not quail
To breast the mighty unknown sea of death.
Oh, may I cry, though body parts with spirit,
"I do not doubt," so listening world may hear it
With my last breath.

—Sir W. Robertson Nicoll.

Deep but clean—that heal!

Our Missionaries.

We send our love to our missionaries across the wide waters. They are the servants of the Church and bond servants of Christ. They have left home and friends and native land and followed the gleam in a supreme adventure of the spirit. They are soldiers in the militant army of the Great Captain, who commanded them to go into all the world and preach and teach in His name. He promised to go with them, for He called them to no easy task. And His presence is absolutely necessary to their success. But upon us rests a threefold responibility—the responsibility of intercession, of passionate interest, and of providing the means whereby our gallant and dedicated missionaries can carry on in the name of Him who took upon Himself the form of a servant and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.—Southern Christian Advocate.

If I Were a Preacher.

If I were a preacher I'd preach the love of God till my vocabulary failed. And that would be never, because the inexhaustible and never failing God is behind it.

If I were a preacher I'd preach, "What hast thou that thou didst not receive?" Of course, the answer is "nothing". But preachers know how to multiply words, and reduce the answer to this, that what we have is not our own, for our little all has been bought with a price.

If I were a preacher I'd ring the changes to the church on the money markets, and show the true Church of God in what bank to lay up their treasures. I wouldn't mind being called an "old fogy" when I know for myself the true value of money, and had found out for myself what bank is safe.

If I were a preacher I'd preach at least once on the Great Commission and emphasize that all were sent—some in one way—some in another, but all must go if they "belonged". And lastly, yes, if I were a preacher. . . .

But a woman can't preach.—Mrs. T. S. Bryan, in Christian Observer.

Without faith, the world, as we know it, would come to a standstill. Every commercial undertaking is a transaction of faith. The noblest relationships of life are maintained in faith. Such faith is the frank acknowledgment that there are some things which do not submit themselves to demonstration and final proof at the moment, and must be accepted as a kind of a challenge against the future.—Record (English).

GOD'S GARDEN.

Monica Williams.

The little flowers are coming up
And silently they'll grow
I cannot hear or see them
But they'll surely grow, I know.

For other flowers I've seen quite tall
With leaves and petals gay,
And so I know the tiny ones
Will grow the self-same way.

But they'll need the rain and sunshine
And our kind, tender care
To help them like those grown up ones
Their loveliest flowers, to bare.

And we are like the tiny flowers
And in God's garden grow,
And all our joys and sadness
Can help us grow I know.

But we must like the flowers be brave
And take all things that come
And ask Our Father that shall first
His Holy Will be done.

And then our deeds shall be all bright
As flowers with petals gay,
And we will in God's garden grow
More lovely every day.

Home Again!

M. L. G.

"Mother's comin'! Claire's comin'! Do you know that, Aunt Cindy? Do you know that?"

"What I bin doin' all day, me an' Miss Mollie, fixin' ever'thin' up bes' we kin, an' do' know dat, let 'lone yo' come hollern at me, fitten ter bus' my year-drums. You go outside, holler at de dogs, Philip, er you'll fin' yo'self war'd out fum dis broom 'fore Mistis git a chanct ter smack you down hus-self."

"Sho, Cindy," Uncle Danger put in, catching at Philip's hand as he danced around Cindy, just out of her reach, "whaffor you put such notions in his haid? Mistis be mighty change ef'n she smack one dese little fellers, no mo'n one dese-yuh love-pats. You come on alonger er Uncle Danger, Philip," the old man went on, pulling Philip gently toward the door, "Les'n us go up to de big gate, so's we kin git it open when we hears um."

"Aunt Cindy seems sorry they're comin'," said Philip, as they went up the path together.

"Nor she ain't, she jes' wo'd out her temper puttin' thin's to rights so's dey'll look scrumptious fer yo' Ma. Heyo, dar Kent a runnin' an' a cryin'. Here we is Kent, no furder dan a hopper-grass kin jump!" Uncle Danger raised his voice, and Kent ran up.

"I fought you'd gone too far to ever catch. Aunt Cindy said I could come." "Sho you kin. One boy 'pon top each gate-pos'. Den I lay we sees 'em clar ter de end er de piney-woods." And soon each little boy was atop a post, looking eagerly for the lights of the Trent's big carriage, which had been sent to the station to give Claire the easiest possible ride home.

"I don't hardly 'member Claire's face," Kent said.

"Well, you know Father, an' you know Mother and Miss Alice's 'Lijah. So if somebody isn't any of those it'll be Claire. Can I stan' on my post, Uncle Danger?"

"Nor, ain't better stan' up, Philip, jes' hol' on an' keep yo' eye-balls skunt. What dat I sees now?"

"I b'lieve it's um!" shouted Philip. He lost his balance and fell into Uncle Dangers arms.

"Umph! Yo' 'nough ter knock de breff out'n a harrycane," grunted the old man. "Stay on de groun' now, an' you git down too, Kent, now we done sight 'em. Post-top ain't no place ter dance jig on."

Soon the big black horses turned in at the gate, Uncle Danger climbed onto the driver's seat beside 'Lijah; and Philip and Kent, rejoicing, were taken within. They were awed by the sight of Claire, who lay so straight on one seat, her pretty hair cut short, and eyes opening just for one smile at them. But Mother's arms were around them both at once, the tears were overflowing her brown eyes, and Father had to say as they drew up in front of the house:

"How am I going to disentangle Mother from all these arms and legs? Out with you, boys, and Uncle Danger can—hello, son! here's David to lend a hand. And my Winnie—"

Mother somehow got up the steps to Aunt Mollie's welcoming arms. And then the door was held wide, while Claire was tenderly borne in Father's arms up the stairway and into Mother's room and to her own little bed. Cindy was ready with hot milk, and Claire soon lay in comfort, her hand in Winnie's, and her eyes following the others who moved softly about the room.

"I like home, so much," she told Winnie. In a few minutes she was asleep, but Winnie sat there, in quiet happiness.

"Let me sit with her, Winnie," said Aunt Mollie, "and you have supper with Mother and the rest."

"No, truly, Aunt Mollie, I like it here by Claire. Why, supper!—I've had those all these nights she's been gone!"

Aunt Mollie tipped away, saying to herself, "Well, the dear child, she's earned the right to do as she likes."

And what a hilarious meal was going on downstairs! Philip and Kent talked both together, describing Kent's accident to Mother.

"It was my ladder-bwidge I fought of!"

"But den, Phil, it was my arm got hurted."

"Ah, yes, Mother's precious, his poor arm," Mother had to stop her supper to pat the poor arm.

"Well, I felled off the gate-post, anyway," said Philip, somewhat abashed.

"And plenty of other mishaps," said Aunt Mollie, Coming in, "Phil gets the prize for numbers, and Kent for importance, in the matter of accidents. But that was a night, the one of Kent's broken arm. Mrs. Innis in a faint,—"

"She was out before you came, Aunt Mollie."

"Oh, well, David, out of it, but no more good than a log. And Winnie and David hadn't had a bite since school and both looking like calamity, poor chicks, and Dr. Carrington and that young fellow all but wringing their hands—"

"Dr. Carrington wrung yours all right, Aunt Mollie!" put in David.

"He'd have wrung the Witch of Endor's by that time. And old Mrs. Ins-and-Outs, I had her packing next morning. Now Brother Kent, don't tell me how good her intentions were! I can't abide inefficiency!" Aunt Mollie began an efficient attack on her chop.

"It just made us all the gladder after you did take over the job, Aunt Mollie," said David.

"Oh, I've had nothing but fun—after we got over the anxiety about Claire."

"Claire lies out more stiffer dan odder times," announced Philip.

"Now, darling, don't let her see you notice that," Mother said. "She was disappointed, she hoped to come home free of the plaster-cast; but she must wear it some weeks yet—wasn't that in her letter to Winnie?"

"Yes, dear, but this Phil here didn't know what it meant," Father answered. "Just a stiff sort of jacket, Phil, but all to help her get well. We shall have to be mighty careful of Claire for a long time yet—but think of having her well, at the end of it!"

"She's something to be careful of—worth it, I mean," spoke up David.

"Like my pink china kitty, Muvver got me," Kent said.

"And can't miouw, too, like her," added Philip.

After supper—Winnie's had been carried up to her—they gathered for prayers. No hymn tonight, lest Claire's sleep be disturbed. But Winnie joined them, and in their old way each said a verse. Kent had his old favorite, so easy to remember, so hard to fathom, "God is love".

"And now yours, Phil, old man."

"Love one a—Muvver," said Philip instantly.

Father's mouth began to curl: "Sure you don't mean 'love one another'?"

"No, I jus' means 'love-one-a-Muvver!' like I say so."

"Well, that's not a bad text for a fellow whose Mother's just come back to him!" Father said, and Mother put a quick little kiss on his tumbled head.

The older children remembered long their Father's prayer that night. All the gladness of the home-coming, all the joy that Claire was spared to them was gathered up and offered to the Father of all, a "sacrifice of thanksgiving."

Foundations.

I've been watching a road in the making. Ever since last summer, when we bought a little place in the country and have been traveling that road, until this very day, it has been of constant interest to me. Work had just begun when I first made it my daily path, and we happily said, "Isn't it fine that we will have a nice, paved road in just a few weeks!" But we had much to learn.

First they hauled in red clay and built up the low spots, corners were straightened out and hills pulled down. In that condition, with loose red clay covering it all, they left it. In dry weather it became a whirl of red dust and in wet weather it became a mass of sticky mud. I grew impatient and wondered what was causing the delay.

Then one day they began to haul in coarse crushed rock. My hopes were revived and I rejoiced that, at last, they were going right ahead and finish the road. But as soon as the rock was laid the workmen left, travel became a very annoying thing and very hard on the tires. But, little by little, the traffic pushed the larger rocks into the red soil and the rain brought the clay to the top again. Then followed another coating of finer rocks and another reviving of my hopes.

By that time it was winter—and the road still wasn't finished. I didn't go that way for quite a while and fully expected on my first trip out that I would find a finished road. But, no! it was just like I had last seen it, only worse. More red clay had washed to the top, making it dusty in dry weather and quite muddy when it rained. Then the road scraper came along and worked a day or two and left it with the rough gravel pulled to the middle of the road again. My patience was wearing out. Summer was coming and I would be traveling it every day. So much time had lapsed that I was quite sure the road commissioners had forgotten that road. I was just beginning to think seriously of calling to remind them of the unfinished road when more workmen came, scraped it again and packed it with a big roller.

The next operation was a coating of very fine gravel on an under-coat of tarred gravel. I was sure this time that some day, between daylight and dark, the men would finish. But not so! When the fine gravel was laid they forgot it again and every passing car started a whirl of fine, grey dust, which I decided was about the worst thing we had had. Why didn't they go on and finish it? Day after day I hoped and day after day I went to work covered in a coating of grey powder.

But, yesterday when I returned home the roller had packed the grey dust hard and fast and today—today they are beginning to lay the last top coat of gravel and tar. I say it is the last coat—I don't know what else they could do to any road. Only a short distance had been finished today, but it will not require more than two or three days to complete the entire distance.

A finished road! And a permanent road! A smooth road! A beautiful road! My! how good it looks. And how nice it will be to skim along that road, bordered by beautiful trees and fields. Not a bump nor a rough spot to mar the pleasure. This year, next year, and on and on for many years that road will remain smooth and firm —a joy to all who travel it.

And why? Because it has a good foundation, wrought out by time and patience and knowledge of foundations. Good foundations are not built in a day. —I stop to look at that sentence and am reminded of something Paul said when he was advising young Timothy how to plan and build his life, "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure. . . . ."—Mrs. A. B. Brown, in Christian Index.

Wings.

It was Bobby's first morning on the mountaintop with Aunt Nell and Uncle Ted. His summers had been spent at the seashore and the vacation on a far-away mountain had not seemed to him to promise to be exciting. However, here he was, and as he looked from his little bedroom window his first thought was, "This window is just like a picture frame. That hill with the blue sky and clouds above it, and the cows going along among the ferns, is just like a picture."

He reached for his towel and went down to the back porch to wash.

"Good morning, Bobby. Most ready for pancakes?" greeted Aunt Nell. "Breakfast will be ready in a jiffy, out on the veranda."

Bobby washed in a hurry and found his way out to the veranda where the table was set.

Bobby ate with a mountain relish, seeing everything that went on, which he thought was not much, compared with the seashore. No sparkling waves or little boats bobbing up and down. No smoke of steamers way out. Just green and green, and blue sky and clouds. Inside his mind was a question, "What could anybody write about for a composition, first week of school, when there is nothing going on? Not a moving thing at all."

Just then he heard the whirring of wings, almost a musical whirring. It seemed right near, yet he did not at once see what it was. Then he sat right still with his golden pancake on his fork and watched. There on the pink phlox was a ruby-throated hummingbird, darting at the flowers and away again, like a thing on unseen strings. It buzzed away, pointed its long bill and aimed it right for the honey in the flower, and darted again into the phlox, all the time keeping up such a steady fluttering of its tiny wings that Bobby could not see them move.

"Aunt Nell," he whispered, "look at that baby bird. What kind is it?"

"It's a ruby-throat, Bob. And it's a full-grown bird. See his throat in the sunlight as he turns? That's the color of a genuine ruby. The mother will be here soon. They are after honey for their babies."

"Did you ever see their wings stop?" asked Bobby. And Aunt Nell answered by telling him to watch for himself down in the garden any time, where, if he kept quiet and still, the birds would not be afraid of him.

After breakfast, Bobby was tearing up some rags for a kite tail, when he felt something almost touch him as he swung his feet off the step. "Whew!" he whistled. "That was a bird! It came down as swiftly as a bat!"

Again the light creature swooped low in front of the steps, and Bobby saw he was a swallow, with beautiful blue wings and tan vest.

"And their shadows are as pretty as they are, moving so fast over the yellow grass," he pondered. "How different they are from humming-birds!"

With Uncle Ned's help, the big kite was finally up. Bobby stood on the stone wall; holding the pulling string. Above him, white clouds were sailing like boats on a blue sea.

"What's that?" he cried. "A lighthouse up here on the mountains?"

"It's an air beacon, Bob. You just wait. The noon air mail will be along before we get this kite up very far."

"But what's it for? Someone up there signaling?"

"Oh, no, that's for the night air-mail planes. You'll see, tonight. It will make you think you are down at the shore when you see its light shine over the hills. Hark! There's the mail now. Hear its wings?"

Bobby cocked his head. "I hear it, but where is it? Oh, there, over the pines. Let's signal it."

Over it came, its great propellor and wide wings glisten in the sun. Bobby signaled by pulling the kite down and letting it up, and the big bird actually dropped a little in reply. Then on it went straight as the humming-bird, only its wings sounded a million times louder.

Bobby kept watching until it was lost, and as he brought his eyes down again, they were startled by the rushing of cloud shadows over the pasture hill. The wind was taking his fastened kite on a merry ride.

Dinner came. The humming-birds gathered their babies' honey. A crowd of noisy crows lifted up and down around a great brown hawk that sailed as prettily as a little ship. Over and over again as Bobby watched, he said to himself, "I'll write the composition about wings. Humming-birds', swallows', airplanes', kites', crows'—"

Before supper, he watched the wings of bees as they buzzed and sipped among the raspberry blossoms. He tried to catch a green katydid under the maples, and he spent a long time watching a whole family of baby bluebirds as they took flying lessons from their parents.

Bedtime finally came. The air beacon was lighted and looked just like a lighthouse. Its wide beams swept across the treetops and valleys, as regularly as the kitchen clock ticked. The night mail plane was expected to appear in the southern sky any minute with its green and red lights. Bobby sat waiting and watching. Suddenly he was almost frightened by the swooping down of a black bat, chittering its night call.

"Ooh!" he cried, "more wings! This mountain is full of them."

The giant wings of the plane were heard over the hill, the red and green lights appeared like a comet, and Uncle Ted flashed his nightly signal to the pilot—four flashes from his big flashlight.

Bobby went up to his little room. The window still framed a picture—stars, pines against a clear sky, and the tips of an orange moon over the dark hills.

"Tomorrow, I'll make a list of all the wings," Bobby whispered to himself. "Tomorrow—"—and he was fast asleep. —By Genevieve L. Hutchinson in Zion's Herald.

THE GIRL WHO SMILED.

The wind was east, and the chimney smoked,
And the old brown house seemed dreary,
For nobody smiled, and nobody joked:
The young folks grumbled, and the old folks croaked:
They had come home chilled and weary.

Then, opened the door, and a girl came in;
Oh, she was very homely—very;
Her nose was pug and her cheek was thin,
There wasn't a dimple from brow to chin,
But her smile was bright and cheery.

She spoke not a word of the cold and damp,
Nor yet of the gloom about her;
But she mended the fire and lighted the lamp,
And she put on the place a different stamp
From what it had been without her.

Her dress, which was something in sober brown,
And with dampness nearly dripping,
She changed for a bright, warm crimson gown,
And she looked so gay, when she came down,
They forgot the air was nipping.

They forgot the house was a dull old place,
And smoky from base to rafter;
And gloom departed from every face
As they felt the charm of her mirthful grace,
And the cheer of her happy laughter.

Oh, give me the girl who will smile and sing,
And make all glad together.
To be plain or fair is a lesser thing;
But a kind, unselfish heart can bring
Good cheer in the darkest weather.

Christian consciousness, Christian experience of God and eternal life, Christian character and devotion, would not be what they are today and have been all through history if there could be any reasonable doubt of the superhuman quality in the person of Christ. If His disciples had not discerned this from the first, the Christian consciousness could never have come into existence at all.—Rev. R. J. Campbell.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

Bishop Gravatt as the preacher. On Monday the parish greeted its former rectors, who returned for the celebration; the evening was given over to a pageant written for the occasion depicting the history of the parish. The Northwestern Convocation of the diocese met at Christ Church Tuesday for its spring meeting. On Wednesday the Christ Church Choir School and guest artists gave its annual Bach concert. Thursday marked the date of the Festival Service, at which time the boy choir of sixty-four voices sang Gounod's St. Cecelia's Mass; Bishop Darst preached the anniversary sermon. A centennial dinner, in honor of the Bishops of the diocese and the former rectors of the parish, concluded the celebration.

Among the rectors and assistant rectors of Christ Church Parish have been the Rt. Rev. Charles C. Penick, retired Bishop of Liberia; the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, Bishop of East Carolina; the Rev. R. S. Lambert, rector, Calvary, Cincinnati; the Rev. R. H. Gamble, rector, Trinity, Logan, W. Va. The Rev. Clarence W. Brickman, present rector, assumed duties at Christ Church in 1931. Christ Church numbers 350 communicants and over 500 baptized persons. The Parish of Christ Church includes Christ Church, Fairmont; Chapel of the Good Shepherd, Rivesville; St. Andrew's Mission, Mannington.

Rt. Rev. Henry K. Sherrill, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. S. G. Babcock, D. D., Suffragan Bishop

1,500 Episcopalians Attend Service Prior to Meeting of Convention.

An outpouring of Episcopalians that lacked very little of equalling that of Easter at Trinity Church filled the church the night of May 8, to take part in the diocesan service of worship for the clergy, delegates and members of the diocese, as a prelude to the 150th annual convention, which took place the following day:

The keynote of the service, the relation of the church toward the world-wide social changes that are in progress, was struck by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Henry Knox Sherrill, Bishop of Massachusetts, who declared the vital interest of the Episcopal Church in these changes, and the duty of church people to be sincere and active in their witness to God's truth. The delegates probably numbered from 700 to 750, of whom 500 were lay delegates. There probably were 200 or 300 spectators.

Bishop Sherrill Speaks.

Speaking of the social changes in the world, and their significance to the Church, Bishop Sherrill said:

"It seems clear to me that the Church as a body cannot be identified with any specific party or program. She has existed in the days of the Roman Empire, through the rise of monarchies and republics. She cannot be feudalistic, capitalistic, socialistic or communistic. Because she deals with the message of eternity she will exist long after our little systems have had their day and passed away. But that does not mean that the Church is not vitally concerned with the whole question of social change.

"The program of the Church is more radical than that of any other organization, in the fact that she stands, because of the fatherhood of God, for the brotherhood of man. We are infinitely more revolutionary; our goal is to change human nature itself, in the conquest of the predatory instinct within us of the tiger and the lion, and of the indifference of the oyster, that we may become the sons of God."

Reviews Progress.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Samuel G. Babcock, Suffragan Bishop in special charge of missions and aided parishes, gave a brief review of the new impetus given by the adoption of the present system of archdeaconries and the appointment of archdeacons in 1895 under Bishop Lawrence. During the past four decades, he said, the number of communicants in the diocese had increased 275 per cent. On December 31 last there were 70,000 in the diocese.

"Last year," he said, "no less than 49,500 persons left the busy city street on weekdays to worship in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, while on another busy street, Christ Church, the Old North Church of Paul Revere fame, standing in an alien population, which, from its associations, has become a patriotic shrine, was visited on week days alone by upwards of 30,000 persons. Some of these visitors knelt in prayer, others joined the congregations on Sundays, but the majority were attracted by the historical associations of the Church. The congregations which gather in Christ Church are no gauge of its influence as a parish of the diocese. Any church which attracts thousands of visitors week by week is a missionary enterprise."

Yesterday was a double anniversary in the church locally, for five years ago to a day Bishop Sherrill was elected to the office of Bishop of Massachusetts, and Archdeacon Ernest J. Dennen has completed twenty years as Archdeacon of Boston and superintendent of the Episcopal City Mission.

Adoption of Bishop's Pence Planned.

Adoption of the Bishop's Pence Plan was planned at the spring meeting of the Executive Council of the diocee. The committee to work with Bishop Abbott consists of the Rev. Francis F. Lynch, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, and the Rev. George Ralph Madson, of St. Peter's Church, Paris.

Progress and increasing opportunities in the mountain missions were reported by Archdeacon Gerald H. Catlin, at the meeting, which was held in Christ Church Parish House, Wednesday, May 8.

Annual Meeting Woman's Auxiliary.

New officers elected at the thirty-ninth annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese, held May 9 at Christ Church, Lexington, are Mrs. Thomas Thames of Ft. Thomas, U. T. O. Custodian, and Mrs. Dallas Dennis of Lexington, vice-president for the Blue Grass Region. Other officers' terms did not expire. Mrs. Almon Abbott presided.

Mrs. John Marshall of Anchorage, Ky., chairman of the recently organized St. Anne's Guild for Margaret Hall, addressed the meeting and urged the formation of branches of the Guild in the diocese. The chief purpose of the new organization, which centers at present in Louisville, is to publicize Margaret Hall School, Versailles, Ky., which is owned and operated by the Order of St. Anne.

Fourth Annual Blue Grass Conference.

The Rev. Herman Page, of St. Paul's Church, Dayton, Ohio, is the "headliner" for the fourth annual Blue Grass Conference, which will be held at Margaret Hall School, Versailles, June 16 to 21. Other faculty members are Miss Judith B. Colston, Miss Mabel Lee Cooper, the Rev. J. Wilson Hunter, the Rev. Paul R. Savanack, Sister Rachel, O. S. A., and Professor W. S. Sterling.

The Rt. Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott will preach at the opening service, and on "Auxiliary Day." The Rev. C P. Sparling is dean of the conference, and the Rev. Arthur H. Austin is chaplain. The conference is a joint effort of the Dioceses of Kentucky and Lexington.

Male Choir Inaugurated.

The only strictly male choir in the Diocese of Lexington made its appearance on Pastor Day in St. Peter's Church, Paris. Boys and men are trained by the organist and by the priest-in-charge, the Rev. George Ralph Madson. Merbecke's familiar setting for the Holy Communion was sung.

In this parish, also, the weekly early Sunday celebration of the Holy Communion has been re-established—a thing till recently impossible, because of the several services in other stations by the priest-in-charge. This was the first parish to have such a service in the State of Kentucky, back in 1854. G. R. M.

Service in Cathedral in Commemoration of 150th Anniversary of Founding of Diocese.

The annual convention of the Diocese of New York was held on May 14 and 15, at Synod Hall. The special feature of the convention was a service held May 14 in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the diocese. Addresses at the service were made by Bishop Manning on "Our Heritage From the Past and Our Witness in the Present"; the Rev. E. Clowes Chorley, D. D., historiographer of the diocese, and the Rev. Stacy Waddy, secretary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. The Mayor of New York, the Hon. F. H. LaGuardia, was present for the service. About 12,000 people attended the service. Among the Bishops present were the Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, D. D., and the Rt. Rev. Arthur Selden Lloyd, D. D., of New York; the Rt. Rev. F. W. Creighton, D. D., and the Rt. Rev. Blair Larned, D. D., of Long Island; the Rt. Rev. William Hall Moreland, D. D., retired bishop of Sacramento, Calif., and the Rt. Rev. Frank Dumoulin, D. D., formerly of the Diocese of Ohio.

The most interesting subject which arose for discussion during the convention was a resolution introduced by Mr. Charles C. Burlingham, vestryman of St. George's Church, and one of the most distinguished citizens of New York. This resolution, which amended the canon law of the diocese so as to enable those parishes which might vote to do so, to make women eligible for the vestry. The proposed change would not be mandatory, but optional. The measure was opposed by Dr. Fleming, rector of Trinity Church, who was supported among others by the Rev. Charles B. Ackley and Mr. George W. Wickersham. The resolution was defeated by a vote of 178 to 105.

NEBRASKA.

A splendid gathering for women of all societies within the Deanery was held in Trinity Cathedral on May 7. Dr. Margaret Koenig gave an interesting address on the Cathedrals of Europe.

Bishop Shayler Mothers' Day Speaker.

Bishop Shayler was the speaker at a mother and daughter banquet at Trinity Cathedral last week. He blamed lack of mother interest and understanding for the type of girl, "cheap, loud-mouthed and common", to be found in night clubs and similar resorts. "The most precious word in our language, when entwined with 'daughter', forms irresistible richness."

Wm. J. H. Petter.

Personal Notes

The Rt. Rev. Elmer N. Schmuck, D. D., Bishop of Wyoming, announces that the Rev. Eric Montizambert has been elected Dean of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Laramie, and will assume charge of his duties June 1. For the last nine years Mr. Montizambert has been rector of St. John's Church, Oklahoma City, which he built. He is a graduate of Trinity College and of the University of Toronto. He was ordained to the diaconate and priesthood in the Canadian Church. He first served as missionary at Manitoulin Island, and later was rector of Port Arthur, from whence he went to St. John's, Oklahoma City. He is the author of a volume of sermons entitled, "Faith Triumphant", which was published in Great Britain, and has written a number of theological articles in Theology of London and the "Anglican Theological Review"; essays in the "Hibbard Journal", the "American Church Monthly" and in the "Canadian Entomologist'. In addition to his post as Dean of St. Matthew's Cathedral, he will be in charge of the Church's work among the students of the University of Wyoming as Student Pastor.

The Rev. J. deL. Scovil, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Binghamton, N. Y., is in a critical condition.

The Rev. E. R. Ladbrook, of Fayetteville, N. Y., and the Rev. Alfred Martin, of Boonville, are recovering from operations.

The Rev. Henry Darlington, D. D., rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, was the preacher Sunday afternoon in the Cathedral, New York City, at a special memorial service held for the Knights Templar.

The good-will tour of the English Boy Choristers came to an end Sunday, May 19, when they sang in the Little Church Around the Corner at 4 P. M., and in the evening in the Church of the Holy Trinity in the Parish of St. James, New York City.

The Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker, rector of Calvary Church, New York, returned to his pulpit on Sunday, May 19, after an absence of two months, during which time he participated in the work of the Oxford Group Movement in Denmark.

Ordinations.

The Rev. Franklin P. Bennett, curate at St. Paul's Church, Syracuse, N. Y., was ordained to the priesthood on Tuesday, April 16, by Bishop Fiske. At the same service Mr. John F. Hogben was made a deacon.

Mr. Robert Chace Scott was made a deacon in All Saints' Church, Johnson City, N. Y., on March 30, by the Rt. Rev. Edward H. Coley, D. D., Bishop Suffragan of Central New York.

Obituaries.

Deaths has recently taken two of the leading clergy of the Diocese of Central New York. The Ven. Almon A. Jaynes, D. D., the beloved Archdeacon, died in St. Luke's Hospital, Utica, New York, of coronary thrombosis, May 7.

The funeral was held in Trinity Church, Syracuse, which was built while the Ven. A. A. Jaynes was rector of that parish. The service was read by the Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., the Rt. Rev. Edward H. Coley, D. D., the Rev. Herbert Coddington, D. D., and the rector of the parish, the Rev. Claude H. Leyfield.

The Rev. Dr. Jaynes served as chaplain during the World War, and was under fire many times. Former officers of his division served as pallbearers: Col. Harry H. Farmer, Maj. George A. Elliott, Capt. Walter N. Horsburgh, Capt. George A. Goodrich, Capt. Charles O. Maxwell and Capt. Edward M. McCabe. The burial was in Oakwood Cemetery.

The Rev. Henry Harrison Hadley, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Syracuse, dropped dead while playing golf. His personal physician, Dr. Edward C. Reifenstein, was his partner, and the first to reach him.

Dr. Hadley had been a delegate to the General Convention seven times, and was a prominent figure in its deliberations. He served on numerous and important committees of that governing body. He was a member of the standing committee of the Diocese of Central New York, and was prominent in diocesan and civic affairs.

He was born in Brooklyn, June 6, 1875, a son of Henry Harrison and Elizabeth Catherine Anderson Hadley. Following his graduation from Pennington Seminary in 1894, he entered Princeton University, from which he was graduated with an A. B. degree in 1898. He studied in the Cambridge Theological Seminary and graduated in 1901. He was made a deacon and ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Henry C. Potter, D. D., Bishop of New York.

He served as curate in St. Michael's Church, New York, and was later called as rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Ind., which he served until 1906. In that year he was called to St. Paul's Church, Newark, N. J., and was their beloved rector until 1916. In that year he came to Syracuse. The University of Syracuse honored him with the degree of Doctor of Divinity in 1922. The diocese and the city of Syracuse has lost a strong Christian character, beloved by all.

Thrice fools are we who, like newborn princes weeping in the cradle, know not that there is a kingdom before them.—Samuel Rutherford.

The old notion that miracles are impossible was simply a part of the old notion that Materialism was inevitable; thought it is no longer inevitable, and hardly even possible.—G. K. Chesterton.

A cure and the only one, for all the irregularities both of hope and fear, is found in submission to the will of God. Happy they have it!—William Cowper.

"The pearl of great price is not to be picked up by the roadside."

If we pray for a small good when we want a larger one, we limit ourselves. What we really want and should ask for is the fullness of Good, even "those great things and difficult", which our Father hath prepared for us.

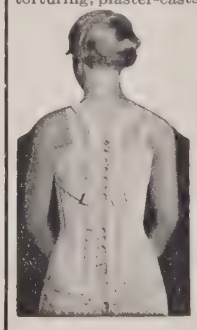
Crooked Spines Made Straight



GREATLY BENEFITED OR ENTIRELY CURED

An Elderly Lady, all bent over, was straightened wonderfully. A Grateful Father writes his daughter had a bad curvature, yet was completely straightened. A Man helpless, unable to stand or walk, was riding horseback and playing tennis within a year. A little child, paralyzed, was playing about the house in 3 weeks. A Doctor, confined to a wheel chair for 8 months time. Thousands of sufferers have found relief, benefit or cure through the PHILO BURT METHOD. Over fifty-nine thousand cases in the past 30 years.

30 DAY'S TRIAL

We will prove its value in your own case. The Philo Burt Appliance is light in weight and comfortable to wear entirely different from the old, torturing, plaster-casts, leather and celluloid jackets or steel braces. Every afflicted person with a weakened, injured, diseased or deformed spine owes it to himself to investigate. Doctors recommend it, and the price within reach of all.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Birth Control.

Mr. Editor:

I am amazed that the Council of the Diocese of Virginia, following the General Convention, should have endorsed the Birth Control Movement. It is a matter that one dislikes to speak of, but it is to the fore and we must deal with it. That those solemn and serious matters that belong only to God should be taken into man's hands seems to be substituting the Brain Trust for God. They have advocated destroying a part of the crops that God has given, and now they urge the destruction of what the Bible says is the gift of the Lord—children—even the heritage of the Lord. One may lend a sympathetic ear to the plea of economic necessity, and the relief of suffering women, and the correction of present evils. But one is staggered by the thought of the evils to which it opens the door. Whatever the interpretation of Genesis 6:1-2, it would appear that evils in the marital relationship brought on the flood. When we hear that animals mate for reproduction only, we can see in this a thinly disguised effort to protect and sanction evil lust.

In a picture of grief in the Bible, we are told of Rachel weeping for her children and refusing to be comforted because they are not. But under this panacea for our ills, it would have to read, Rachel rejoicing because they are not. Our Lord said, "A woman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour is come, but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world." But now we are told that there is no joy at the birth of a child but a calamity and it must be avoided. Whose word is true? What are we going to do with the following passages—"Be fruitful and multiply"; "I will that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the house"; "Children are an heritage of the Lord . . . blessed is he who hath his quiver full of them". But now we are told to destroy this heritage and rob God of that which is said to be His reward.

Susanna Wesley had nineteen children. What if she went through a hard struggle with poverty to bring up the children, was the hardship worth enduring to bring John, to say nothing of Charles, into the world?

Who can estimate what God has done through John Wesley? And yet, if this policy prevailed in his day he would never have lived. Who would want to keep out of the world some Moses, whom God may desire to send, to lead us out of the wilderness? Virginia's religious and educational life would be poor indeed, if we had to wipe out some of her gifted sons who came from large families. It seems akin to Herod's slaughter of the innocents. Nothing but the supernatural intervention of God saved the Christ child. And in this matter of Birth Control, I cannot but see that they are interfering with the purpose, that God may have through children yet unborn, and they must beware lest they found even to be fighting against God.

The winds of vain doctrine and the cunning craftiness of man are playing havoc with the faith of many in these days. How necessary it is to be "rooted and built up in Him and established in your faith. Take heed lest there shall be any one that maketh spoil of you through his philosophy and vain deceit after . . . the rudiments of the world and not after Christ".

Pembroke W. Reed.

Child Labor Amendment.

Mr. Editor:

Please permit me to second the excellent letter of Mr. Tuley published in your issue of May 18. It seems to me that his criticism is fundamentally sound. The Amendment is in line with the trend of exalting the powers of Federal Bureaus. It is very alluring to many earnest reformers. By such, however, as will give serious thought to the matter, I can not but believe that the Amendment, in its ultimate results as a piece of public policy, will be regarded as an ill-advised measure. Specific cases of abuse can be dealt with without this sweeping Amendment. It should be remembered that, in spite of what Bureaus may do, it remains true that the welfare of children will depend mostly on homes and parents. Every one is, of course, aware that many homes and parents are sadly deficient, but homes and parents will never be improved by taking responsibility from them.

Pioneering Today.

Our Church, as we are often wont to point out, failed as a pioneer Church. First amongst the English-speaking people in a great English-speaking land, we had our troubles that caused us to remain in more settled communities when the West and South were being developed. Later we tried to make up for our early loss with only small success, but today there are signs that a new pioneering opportunity is coming to us.

Particularly in the South, but also in every rural territory, transportation of a modern kind has come into being, and people are leaving the farm lands or, as is often the case, more modern influences are coming to the rural areas. The Church which originally was the Church of these simple and strong people has a new opportunity, for the type of religion which they had to adopt because of a lack of anything else, can no longer hold them. As education and good roads come into the lives of these people, such sects that are generally designated as "Holy Rollers", rapidly disappear. The sad part is that often there is nothing to take their place.

In the Tennessee Valley, where the government is making its great experiment, there is a particularly ripe field for our Church to do a great work. Soon many homes, long crude in material resources, will be most modern. Religious problems that our Church can help solve will predominate. Can we face this great task and have we the resources to do anything about it?

It seems to us that here is a great opportunity for that fine organization, The Church Army, to step in and show its power. Easier to finance than the ordinary parochial and diocesan channels, it could bring to these people something more in the outward form to which they have been accustomed and at the same time present an intelligent approach to Christianity. A training center in the midst of this great Valley would be a step in the right direction, and we as a Church would not again miss a great opportunity.

We must never forget that our Church is originally the Church of these very people. They belong to us, even though we have long neglected them. Unless we go to the Promised Land now, another generation more worthy than we will have to carry on where we have neglected. The Southern bishops are aware of this opportunity. All they need is the knowledge that our National Church is behind them. Surely the fields are white and ready for the harvest. May we not fail to provide the workers!

Jane Addams.

Certainly religious people should feel that Jane Addams represented the best in Christian tradition. While she may not have been in her later life what one would call a church person in the traditional sense, she was always an idealist and surely she was guided and directed by the Quaker background and tradition under which she received her earliest lessons in real idealism.

More than any other person she exemplified what we mean by Social Service. Someone has defined Social Service as Christianity in action. And Jane Addams was certainly an exponent of action. She showed that there was a force the equal of physical force, that adhered to, would be greater than the physical. And her whole life was always one of actually going to "the least of these my brethren". She was a pioneer in every good cause, and was never content to merely administer relief medicine, but insisted that primary causes of decay be discovered and abolished.

As an exponent of Peace, she certainly showed the best of Quaker tradition, and, may we say, the best of Christian tradition. Few women of the world have received the Nobel prize—that queer reward for peace donated by a manufacturer of explosives—and it was a tribute to the womanhood of America when it was awarded to Jane Addams. For in every way she was the outstanding and, therefore, the ideal woman of America.

Jane Addams detested and fought against what she called "the stupid atrocities of contemporary life, its arid wastes, meaningless labor, needless suffering and its political corruption". If she sometimes had to turn to forces that are not popular to gain support for her earnest convictions, it is only an indictment against us who are supposed to be the idealists of religion. As an advocate of peace, she expressed what millions of women are too inarticulate to express, the whole horror of war. If she actually accomplished little, she did give an expression to the course that should be followed by intelligent women.

But as an advocate of decent social service of the type that we feel sure The Master would have approved, she will go down in history. It seems a shame that there is no prize awarded to those who perform the noble and hard tasks of the social worker. Day by day in conditions that seemed seldom to get better when one was forced to live amongst the conditions, she toiled and showed the way to a better method of social relief. Christianity of today has much to be thankful for in Jane Addams' life in this world.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Slums.

The Canadian Churchman, May 18, 1935.

Over in England great steps have been taken in removing slums. The Bishop of Southwark said "The Church considers it as much a sin to own bad house property and to neglect house property as to commit adultery." When leaders speak out in terms like that, something is sure to happen. We hear of vast changes in England. Great tracts of slums have been taken down and replaced by dwellings with modern conveniences and with ample sunshine in every dwelling. It is noteworthy also that these new properties are rented at a profit.

It is in the slums that infant mortality is highest. The slums breed disease. They are as some one has said, "social murderers". Slums must come down. They should never have appeared in this new land. The indignation of the citizens must compel those in authority to take action. The time is fast coming when any town or city will be ashamed of having slums within its borders.

"Back to God."

Church of England Newspaper, May 3, 1935.

Who that listened to his Majesty's broadcast message coming direct from his heart could fail to realize his simple, strong faith in God?

> "I look back on the past with thankfulness to God. . . . Other anxieties may be in store. But I am persuaded that with God's help they may all be overcome if we meet them with confidence, courage and unity. So I look forward to the future with faith and hope."

Have we not here an example which all should follow? If the King is not ashamed to speak of the innermost secrets of his heart why should statesmen and Churchmen be so diffident and hesitant in their witness to the one source of help? Let there go forth a national call—"Back to God." We are persuaded that the response would astonish the world. Who will dare to follow the King's lead?

Mr. Baldwin on the Maintenance of Religion.

Mr. Baldwin did well to remind the members of the Primrose League at their Albert Hall demonstration that one of the fundamental principles of the League is "the maintenance of religion". This was one of the things continually stressed by Disraeli. Mr. Baldwin did not know how far Disraeli had in his mind the continuation of the Establishment of the Church of England, although in those days there were mighty attacks on the Establishment. So far as Mr. Baldwin himself was concerned, he interpreted the word "religion" in the widest sense. He little thought that he should live to see ministers of the Gospel suffering for their beliefs in countries believed to be civilized. Continuing, Mr. Baldwin said: "I do not want you to lose sight of certain anti-Christian movements in Europe at the present moment, and to resolve firmly that in this country at least there shall not be one inch of ground that shall ever be ceded to those who fight the battle against whatever we may mean by religion."

This is a warning which we hope British folk generally will take to heart. The best way of fighting anti-Christian movements is to make our religion overwhelmingly vital and positive.

A Christian Peace.

The Guardian, May 10, 1935.

The prayer written by General Botha in Afrikaans on the card which marked his place at the Versailles Peace Conference is a moving utterance. Translated into English it is as follows:—"God's justice will be meted out to every nation in His righteousness under the new Sun. We shall persist in prayer in order that it may be done unto mankind in love, peace and Christian charity. Today the 31st of May, 1902, comes back to me." It was the date of the signing of the Treaty of Vereeniging, which brought the long-drawn-out Boer War to an end. In that peacemaking General Botha represented the defeated party. Though it was a treaty that was not dedicated but negotiated between parties who recognized one another as gallant adversaries, he could recall the sense of defeat and all that it meant. He was moved to those recollections by the contemplation of a treaty that was being made under his eyes of a very different kind, a treaty that was imposed and was designed to keep the defeated people for an ill-defined period in a position of restraint and (necessarily) of humiliation.

To one of General Botha's simple nature and clear outlook the Treaty of Versailles was defective because it left out God, and therefore could not last. It is well that at this time the judgment of this fine gentleman and good Christian should be recalled. It is possible to defend many of the single points of the Versailles Treaty. What from the Christian point of view is quite indefensible is its spirit. Until that is exorcised there can be no peace. But it is worth while to point out that facts are making it daily plainer that peace can come only when all civilized peoples are prepared to shoulder the responsibilities of maintaining peace through a worldwide order. For the Christian, sentiment is not enough. Christian charity involves sacrifices. The nation which holds back from a world organization until it is satisfied that its private interests require adhesion is imperfectly Christian, and misreads the Will of God.

Through the Editor's Window.

The Living Church, May 18, 1935.

That doughty militant Protestant, Bishop Seaman of North Texas, has this snake story to tell in an article on "Dry Pastures" in "West Texas Today": "Soon after coming to the Panhandle I experimented one day with the cowboy's trick of snapping off a snake's head. Fortunately I was trying it with a non-poisonous snake, for I failed to take hold just right, the tail came off instead of the head, and the rest of the snake landed in the midst of my family on the back seat of the car. It makes quite a difference how a fellow takes hold of any job, whether it be fighting ordinary snakes or that old Serpent himself, the Devil."

The following card in a Florida paper, reprinted in "Pollock's Newspaper News", is quoted as testimony of the value of classified advertising: "Thursday I lost a gold watch I valued very highly. Immediately I inserted an ad in your lost and found column and waited. Yesterday I went home and found the watch in the pocket of another suit of clothes. God bless your paper."

The Heavenly Places

Ascensiontide reminds us not only of our Lords' return to the Father, after He had accomplished His great work of Redemption upon this earth, but it also reminds us that He has opened up to us a way to the Heavenly Places, that "so we may also in heart and mind thither ascend, and with Him continually dwell". There are impassable limits which restrict our passing from this earth into the vast universe which surrounds us. But Christ has revealed to us the truth that there are no such limits, so far as the spiritual world is concerned. The words which He has given us the right to utter, "Our Father, who art in heaven", reveal to us the possibility of our being present in heaven in a spiritual sense, while at the same time we are here on earth in a physical sense.

A Marvelous Miracle.

This is a privilege which we may well meditate upon with wonder and thankfulness, for if we will but avail ourselves of it, day by day, our lives will be lived far above the commonplace routine of an earthly existence, and given a foretaste of the life which lies beyond this. We are told by St. Paul that, "We all have access, by one Spirit, unto the Father". That is to say, as the children of God, we have the right and the power to enter God's Presence as often as we will and just as freely and naturally as we enter our own homes. There are two great wonders in this connection, one being the privilege above described, and the other the inherent power in our spiritual nature, which enables us to take advantage of it. That we can "with heart and mind thither ascend" shows that our spiritual nature marvelously transcends any faculty or power belonging to our physical nature. It may be, however, and it is doubtless the case, that it is through union of our spirits with the Holy Spirit that this miracle is made possible. There has been a question, in these latter days, as to the possibility of physical miracles, but what are they in comparison with the spiritual miracles which form part of the Christian experience?

A Daily Miracle.

Prayer is a daily miracle of such transcendent importance, since it links earth to heaven, that when we realize its full significance, many physical miracles seem to be trifling in comparison. Christ's passing into the Heavenly Places at His Ascension gave to us a rightful place there, which even in this earthly life of ours constitutes our true home, to which we can betake ourselves and find that peace and rest which this world cannot give. There are some, perhaps many, who look upon this point of view as an illusion, because their spiritual nature is more or less dormant, and they have not sought to enter into the experience above described. Nor have Christians as a rule, made the most of this great privilege, and therefore gained from it the illumination and the inspiration which would make it possible for them to prove the reality of such an experience.

A Common Misunderstanding.

It has been too often supposed that a close connection with the spiritual world, renders one unfit for the practical details of daily life, whereas the fact of the matter is, that many of those who have most profoundly influenced the life of humanity, have been men who have lived very close to the unseen world. Thus St. Paul, in the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, 4:18, says:—"While we look not at the things which are seen but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal." And yet his Epistles are full of advice about the practical details of daily life, and his influence in the world is far more powerful now than when he was alive. Human personality takes on more heroic proportions and attains greater and a more far-reaching influence, when it is linked up with the Eternal Realities. And this is so because man's natural powers must necessarily be more effective when they are brought into close alliance with the divine power. Man's greatest possibilities can only be fully developed when God is using him, because He alone knows what he is capable of and how these latent possibilities can be fully utilized.

The Greatest Benefactors of the Future.

It is along these lines that we may well expect the greatest results in the future, for it is in the spiritual world that we shall find and enter into our true birthright. What is waiting for us there is something far greater than we can at present conceive of, but we believe that it is those who will see to penetrate and explore this fruitful region who will be accounted in the future, the greatest benefactors of the human race. Material progress has had the right of way so far, at any rate within the last few generations, and its accomplishments have been truly great and wonderful; but the spirit of man is that which marks him out as akin to the divine, and is that which entitles him to be called a child of God. It must be, therefore, through the higher development of his spiritual nature and his inherent ability to work in alliance with God, Himself, that His mightiest works will be hereafter revealed. St. Paul says that, "the whole creation waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God". That is to say, creation will not have reached its highest point of development till this human nature of ours takes on the glory which rightly belongs to it, as made in the Image of God.

ASCENSION.

The eagles build their nests on high
Where mountain summits touch the sky.

The lark, that wings his eager flight,
Sings while he seeks the upper height.

The tree from earth doth heavenward climb,
And teaches us a faith sublime.

So we as well, in heart and mind,
The heavenly places, too, may find.

And where God and the angels dwell
May seek our special place as well.

With right of entry through His name
Who to our earthly rescue came;

That we might ever share with Him
A place amid the Seraphim.

Problems of a Domestic Missionary Bishop

By WALTER MITCHELL,
Bishop of Arizona.

A SURVEY OF THE STATE shortly after my arrival, disclosed the presence of a surprisingly large number of earnest people who had just unchurched themselves when they came out here. (Of course, many another did so, too, for other reasons—materialism and worldliness.) They found themselves no longer able to go along with the Church of their youth, usually of the extreme Fundamental type, and of the Puritanical sort, who seem to feel that anything which gives pleasure and amusement is necessarily of the devil. Whether they know it or not, ours is about the only Church which can really interpret our Lord to them in terms which do not affront their common sense. It seems to be the fact that out here even the Presbyterian work is in the hands of the branch holding these views. In the copper mining towns, and there are many of them, there are a considerable number of technically trained engineers—copper seems to require a large number of them—who brought to the study of the sciences a juvenile conception or a warped idea of God. The two did not agree so in many cases, they gave up the latter. To reach these, requires men of more than the average ability and consecration.

We found also some fourteen towns and hamlets in which no Church was at work, where Sunday was just like any other day and the people, especially the children, growing up in actual paganism.

We have been able to go into a number of these places and one field in particular, covering 5,000 square miles, we have given good attention. In this field has occurred an old-time pioneer homesteading venture, such as has characterized every section of the country from the coming of the first settlers. For the most part these settlers have been made up of ex-soldiers, war casualties, taking up homesteads in the effort to regain their health. We have followed them and built simple guild halls, so made that the altar can be screened off when the hall is used for other purposes. Seeing how little the women had in their lives, the wife of our missionary sent herself to school at the University of California and learned to weave; so we are establishing an infant industry which has great promise. The men have taken up woodwork, using the beautiful native woods. Still another and newer industry is the utilizing of the desert wild flowers, in frames to hang on the wall, or in table and tray tops and as panels in lamp shades for floor lamps.

To give you an idea of what a cosmopolitan set we have, at one such settlement, after a service, I asked the missionary to find out from what states the people came. There were slightly over one hundred of them; they came from twenty-three states and three foreign countries!

NEXT COMES our Indian Work. This is among the Navajo, said by all workers in the Government service with whom I have talked, to be the ablest of all the Indians in this country. There are about 45,000 of them in the one organization, although for purposes of administration split up into small sections. It is practically foreign missionary work. Their language is said to be much more difficult than Chinese even, and, so far as I have heard, only two missionaries have come anywhere near mastering it, one a Roman Catholic and the other a Presbyterian missionary. They are industrious, competent people, who live on the poorest sort of land; land on which white people would starve. Their chief wealth is in their herds of sheep and goats. Everybody knows of their artistic ability by way of the Navajo rugs and blankets, but if one could remain long enough to see the women, squatted in front of four straight sticks, giving the final touch to her yarn by a whirl of a little hand-loom, and see the intricate and vari-colored pattern begin to appear and realize that it was all in her head, you would appreciate her ability the more. Similarly to watch the man take a Mexican silver dollar and a piece of turquoise and watch what happens. Or, as I did once, to see a little boy eleven years old, all but totally blind, weave a napkin ring out of many colored beads, which he had had some one else arrange for him, you would know that they are a gifted people.

It is said that the Navajo is hard to convert, but I think the trouble is not altogether with the Navajo. Here again, the extreme fundamentalists are in control of all the missionary work done among the Navajo in Arizona, unless the Roman Catholic work could be excepted. As I understand it, they expect the Navajo to regard and renounce all he has ever believed as devilish; the desire to sweep the ground bare and then build a new structure. The Navajo is unwilling to do that. Our policy, here as elsewhere, wherever the Church is doing missionary work, is to follow St. Paul's policy—"Him Whom you ignorantly worship I declare unto you". We take what is true in their native religion and build upon that.

They are largely under the control of evil spirits. Sickness or any bad thing is due to them and the devils have to be driven out by the medicine man and his followers in "sings", which last anywhere from three days and nights to six or nine, depending upon the "sing". For the first the medicine man receives six sheep or three ponies. If one should die in the hogan, the one-room home, no Navajo, unless a Christian or educated, would dare to touch the body. For some reason the body could not be carried through the door; instead a hole has to be made in the wall, the body is pushed through, the few belongings are hastily gathered up and the family flees, the hogan standing thus with the hole in the wall to tell the reason, to the end of time.

Years ago a Miss Thackara, on a visit to Ft. Defiance, seeing the pitiable condition of the Indians, established the first hospital among them. When the Government took over that work, ours became the first hospital for Trachoma, that dread disease of the eyelids, leading to blindness, which has apparently, always afflicted the human race and very serious among the Navajo, since they know nothing of sanitation; if one member of the family gets it, the rest are very apt to.

FINALLY, a Dr. Nauguchi, a famous Japanese scientist, working in the Rockefeller Institute, for the first time in the history of the human race, isolated the Trachoma germ. The man who collaborated with him was a Dr. Richards, attached to our little hospital and all the material with Dr. Nauguchi worked also came from that little hospital.

This attracted so much attention that the Government took over this work. We then turned our mission into an orphanage, the only one among the entire 45,000, and the plight of the orphan among the Navajo is very serious; not because the people are cruel, but because they are so poor. Such a tot is like a stray puppy or kitten, moving about from one place to another. If it survives until it is around ten some mythical uncle or aunt is apt to turn up, claim the child, because such a child with a good dog, can herd sheep and there is a sort of peonage among them. The death rate is very high. We were asked to take two little orphans, twins, some distance away. There were all sorts of delays, with the result that, when we finally got there, we found one of them suffering with tuberculosis. Another, who had three or four stopping places between the death of her parents and coming to us, is now stone deaf. In an ordinary white family the initial trouble would probably have been cured, because taken in time, and so it goes.

We can take only about thirty-five. We could take probably ten times that number, but as always, there is the lack of money.

Work among those suffering with tuberculosis,—for this work we have two small hospitals, St. Luke's Home, Phoenix, and St. Luke's-in-the-Desert, Tucson. We can do no more than touch the fringe of the need in the hospitals, but they serve as a spring-board for doctors and chaplains who work out among the much larger number in these cities.

I know of no sadder situation than that of one who, in the last stages of the "White Plague" comes out among strangers, usually having exhausted their resources. Think what it means to find a sunny, spiritually-minded clergyman ready to care for you! Here again, it is a question of funds. Today, for the entire work, we are expected to do with forty-five cents for which we formerly received one hundred cents, and this has fallen particularly heavily upon the hospitals, until, in the case of St. Luke's Home, it receives nothing, and St. Luke's-in-the-Desert but $1,000, which goes toward the salary of the chaplain. One incident will illustrate the tragic side of our work. I had no sooner arrived, after a wonderful send-off at my consecration, where I was assured that the whole Church was behind the work, than I received a telegram to the effect that our appropriation had been cut $4,350. I called our leaders together to decide where it should fall. It was decided that the hospitals would have to take the most of it. The Superintendent of St. Luke's-in-the-Desert said he was willing, but that he might as well knock two men in the head before he threw them out; he had found them on the outskirts of Tucson, more nearly dead from starvation than tuberculosis; too weak to work and too proud to beg; they were coming along nicely, but were paying nothing, the hospital was on the bread line already, and with that much of a cut they would have to go. I realize that people at home did not mean that when they reduced their contributions to the "red side", but that is what happens all over the mission field in some form or other when they do.

UR NEWEST WORK, just a little over five years old, is among the Mexicans. My experience in Porto Rico convinced me that the Latin Americans are ready for the Church, which is Catholic, but not Roman, but our difficulty was that we had no one who spoke the language. Finally the Archdeacon plunged in and the results are remarkable. We now have two flourishing missions requiring all the time of the Archdeacon and a native Porto Rican clergyman plus two U. T. O. workers. We have only scratched the surface. There are considerably over 35 per cent of our entire population who are Mexicans. We have taken this part of their native land away from them as we did other parts away from the Indian. Some of them were born in Mexico and from among

Whitsuntide

Whitsunday, June 9, 1935.

By CHARLES W. F. SMITH,

Assistant Rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond.

THE name of Whitsunday comes, by an interesting philological development traceable in many English place-names, from White Sunday, the popular designation of Pentecost. It was so called from the fact that the newly baptized in the north of Europe wore their white chrysoms on this day. The popular name was in use before the Conquest, but the official name of Pentecost remained until the Reformation.

The Prayer Book makes Whitsunday, along with Christmas and Easter, one of the great communion Sundays by providing two Collects, Epistles and Gospels. Also at the last revision new Collects were provided for the Monday and Tuesday in Whitsun Week. In the four collects thus provided the work of the Holy Spirt, comforting, guiding, unifying, and indwelling is fully expressed.

The Holy Spirit is the immanent activity of God, directly at work in the world, seen in all progress, whether of the race or individual, toward a higher life. It is "God in you the hope of glory". Pentecost means that the Spirit of God was received anew in the understanding that Jesus had given, just as he had made new our every thought of God.

Jesus told His Apostles to await the promise of the Father and to "tarry . . . until ye be endued with power from on high". It was futile to attempt to establish the Kingdom of God in their own strength. Alone they were inadequate. The adequacy which came to them at Pentecost is testified to by the Book of Acts and made Whitsunday the birthday of the Church. God believed in is not enough for our life and work as Christians today. He must be actively present in power. We would do well, as the Forward Movement Commission suggests, to start on Whitsunday daily meditation on the Book of Acts in the convenient form the commission has made available for us.

The Spirit of which Jesus spoke was, as we see from the Gospel, promised to His followers. He said He would be manifested to those who love Him, that is, to those who keep His commandments. The fruits of the Spirit are all activities of personality. He enables us. As Studdert Kennedy used to say, the Spirit of God is not the not-bodily, but the meaning of mind and body. The Spirit of God is the love with which we love God and man, the love that impels us to pray and do and give all for the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth.

We are inadequate. The purposes of God for the world shipwreck on our inadequacy. We need the power of God present by His Spirit, and the Spirit needs us through whom to work. Some of our inadequacy comes from lack of unity. The unity of the Christian fellowship is real wherever the spirit is present (see the Collect for Whitsun Tuesday), but is inadequately realized in corporate action.

The word our Lord used for the Spirit was Comforter or Paraclete. Paraclete meant one who was called to be with another to give strength. It is not that the Spirit of God has not touched us, but that, the Spirit already being at work within us, is not recognized and His power not released in the Church. This Pentecost can be another birthday for the Church in the real sense of the word—an entrance into new life.

Where the Road Forks

By JAMES E. FREEMAN,
Bishop of Washington.

Bishop Freeman.

THE MASTER sent a group of His followers upon an errand, giving them certain directions pertaining to it. We read that they went their way and "coming to a place where two ways met", there they found the object of their search.

This fragment from the narrative is suggestive of an experience that happens to us frequently in the course of life. We are constantly coming to a fork in the road, and when we come to it we pause to determine which road we will take. At such a time we are compelled, not only to determine the course we shall pursue but, the objective we have in mind. So long as the highway over which we travel remains level and straight, we move along our way uninterrupted and secure in our confidence that it leads in the right direction. Once we come to the place where the road forks, we are met with a new situation. The one road may seem the way to travel and full of promise; the other may look less attractive and suggest difficulties ahead. Many, possibly most of us, hastily reach the conclusion that the more attractive, well-paved road is more appealing, hence we take it without any definite conviction as to whither it leads. The youth inevitably takes not only the easy road, but the one that promises a "short cut" to the object he seeks. Frequently he finds the need of re-tracing his steps and following the more difficult but secure way that leads to attainment. The whole world today seems to be standing without definiteness of decision at the fork of the road. The advocates of the two ways are strong and appealing. The advocates of one way have programs and systems that suggest the solution of our problem, they seem to indicate an easy solution of our ills. Their program appeals to the unthinking and superficial. Its whole purpose is the satisfaction of our physical and materials needs. Satisfy these and all will be well. Their program has in it nothing that calls for self-discipline and self-restraint, nor is it suggestive of the course we have pursued at other times when we found ourselves in a like situation.

The other and the more difficult way has its earnest and sincere advocates who recognize that all attainment is secured by those who are willing to pay a consistent and reasonable price for that which they seek. The way ahead may look difficult and it may call for self-accepted restraint and imposed self-discipline, it certainly calls for that kind of moral worth that is able to stand trials and, if need be, suffering, that it may come at length to the object of its desire. It is a way that is bound to develop the strong muscles of the mind and of the soul. Whether in our individual or corporate life the fork of the road calls for and demands decision, and the choice we make involves not only the kind of highway we would follow, but the kind of objective we seek ultimately to attain. Obviously, if in this life only we have hope, if all that it consists of is getting and spending, leading ultimately to a dead end, then it will not be difficult for us to make our choice. If, on the other hand, we believe we are put here for the purpose of developing the finer things of our nature, in fine, that we are put here to "grow a soul", with the assurance that at the end of the road a larger and fuller life opens up before us, then we will carefully consider the cost in the light of that which we seek to gain.

The whole purpose of the ministry of Jesus was to indicate to men when they came to the place of decision, the only way that leads ultimately to satisfaction here and the fulfillment of their highest hopes and aspirations in a world that lies beyond the outmost boundaries of time and place. The Master never promised that the way He proposed should be an easy one. In His own life He strikingly illustrated its difficulties and perils. His own highest attainment was effected on the Cross, but from that Cross He has laid a strong grip upon the hearts and minds of men the world over. He chose the hard way and He did it deliberately, and in doing so He furnished an example to those who, coming after Him, would achieve life's choicest gifts and know the "peace which passeth all understanding".

PROBLEMS OF A DOMESTIC MISSIONARY BISHOP.

these we hope to develop first-rate workers to return to Mexico; being natives they could work there. Here again, we are stopped by the lack of money. The Mexicans are very poor, so the welfare work among them is enormous.

If we could have the money we could do vastly more for the Kingdom and the lack of it is heart breaking. Time and again we have to refuse to grasp opportunities for lack of the money. In one new town we were offered an attractive lot and $5,000 toward a $10,000 church. The Roman Catholic and Presbyterian Churches, I was told, said, "Thank you, we accept." We had to say, "Thank you we are sorry". Again in another new town we were offered a lot and $5000 for a church plus half the salary, but the missionary would have to live there; we had to decline. It is a heart-breaking situation, as though the Church, through ignorance were saying, "There is no use in your succeeding, because we would never stand to have the work increased."

Well, that is the story. If it results in more earnest prayer that God will send laborers into His harvest, we shall be very grateful.

Jefferson Davis: Leader of a Lost Cause

By CHARLES W. LOWRY,

Professor in the Virginia Theological Seminary.

An address delivered before the Jefferson Davis Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy in San Francisco, California. President Davis' birthday is June 3.

THE War Between the States produced or rather revealed an unusual number of very able Americans. On the side of the South three easily stand out: Jackson, Lee, and Davis. Of these Jackson met an untimely death at the middle point of the war in time and at the zenith of success gained by Southern arms. He was then but a young man and had not held an independent command. Yet, in two years' time this obscure professor from the Virginia Military Institute, had carved out the most brilliant military career in American history and had shown himself "one of the foremost strategists in modern history". He was probably the nearest to a sheer genius which the Civil War produced. It was as if Providence in order to effect the downfall of the South had first to dispose of Stonewall Jackson.

Lee, after his assumption of the command of the Army of Northern Virginia on June 1, 1862, and his success in lifting the siege of Richmond, became and remained the idol of the Southern people. This faith and affection was justified. As a general, Lee belongs by common consent in the company of the very greatest military captains of the English-speaking race. The English General Sir Frederick Maurice ranks him above Wellington.[1] But it is in the lofty realm of manhood and character that Lee is supremely great. Here he belongs with Washington, although Lee, difficult as it is for us to realize it, remained in one sense in the conduct of the war a local figure. Save for the brief period of March 13 to May 31, 1862, when he was given "under the direction of the President . . . the conduct of the military operations of all the armies of the Confederate States", and for a similar period at the very end, when the debacle of the Confederacy was all but complete, his responsibility was never national. The arbitrament of arms outside of the Eastern or Virginia front was not in any sense in his hands or a direct concern of his.

It was not so with Davis. He was not only President, but as President he was commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the Confederate States. On his shoulders rested the full responsibility and on his head fell the brunt of criticism and blame during the war and of recrimination and persecution after the final surrender of the Southern armies. The role of Jefferson Davis was incomparably the most difficult in the whole war. Let us never forget this. Had he been successful, he would have gone down in history as a very great figure. And contrariwise only a man great in supereminent degree could have compassed so mighty a success as the victory of the Southern cause and the establishment as a nation of the Southern Confederacy would have been. It was not to be; and probably it is well that Davis was not great enough. The idea of a separate nation in the South, expanding as it almost certainly would have done into an empire embracing Mexico, Cuba, and possibly Central America, and of a vast experiment in what has been called tropicalized Nordicism, is of course fascinating. And whereas a few years ago most Southerners would have held up their hands with scarcely less horror than their Northern compatriots at the mention of such a thing, today we are not so sure. The machine age has not proved to be all that believers in the dogma of inevitable progress fondly expected. The superiority of industrial slavery to domestic servitude is at least debatable. There are some of us who find it difficult to see that an oligarchy of financial barons is a decided improvement over a planter aristocracy. Some of the fruits of democracy in this country a hundred and fifty-seven years after the inauguration of the greatest experiment in popular government ever tried are the most misgoverned municipalities in the civilized world, a reign of corruption, lawlessness, and organized crime which staggers the imagination and sickens the heart, a deplorable and decadent standard of public taste, manners, and morals among large sections of our population, not less than a fourth of the American people unemployed or dependent on persons who are unemployed, and government at Washington by a virtual dictatorship. The "noble experiment" of prohibition has ended after thirteen years and has strikingly vindicated a pronouncement and a prophecy on the subject by Jefferson Davis in 1886, when in consequence he was publicly assailed by Bishop Galloway of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was made the theme of sermons from many pulpits.

ALL this to be sure is only one side, though I do not think that I have laid on the colours too darkly.[2] There are other things to be said. Even the present situation is not without its gleams of light breaking through the thick, foreboding clouds or its rainbow of hope spanning one segment of the national horizon. Then we have no way of knowing the course events would have taken in a Southern nation and empire. We cannot be sure that it would have resisted with any measure of success the onrush of a mechanized and industrialized civilization. While there were many owners of slaves who, like Jefferson Davis, almost convince us willy-nilly of the potential beneficence of the institution of slavery, we know that Southern Nordic human nature did not differ greatly from universal human nature, that there was much cruelty and barbarity associated with slavery, and that it already stood condemned at the bar of conscience for such Southerners as Thomas Jefferson and Robert E. Lee. On the whole, therefore, I say, it was probably well that Davis was not great enough to have become the father of a new nation on this continent. It is better and in the end we may think wiser to accept history in its main tendencies with natural piety and try to trace in them the pattern of a just and noble design and the operation of "a power not ourselves that makes for righteousness".

But there were elements of greatness in the Confederate President. It can be truly said that he narrowly missed being a great man. He had been splendidly endowed by nature, although, unlike Lee and Washington, he was not of aristocratic lineage and station. He was born in Kentucky, by a strange coinci-

It should be noted, however, that it was written at the height of the American crisis, and almost daily reports of new kidnappings, and on the heels of the dire analyses and predictions of the "technocrats". YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

STORY OF ST. COLUMBANUS.

Many people have gotten the idea that the English Church, from which our Episcopal Church comes, was founded by Henry VIII in the sixteenth century. Of course all Young People of our Church are well aware how preposterous this is, and can immediately tell their less informed friends that the Church of England is mentioned in Magna Charta four hundred years before the time of Henry VIII, and also in one of the letters of a Pope of Rome, Gregory the Great to St. Augustine of Canterbury, six hundred years before Magna Charta.

But even before the time of Augustine, there were Christians in England with bishops, priests and deacons. These were among the Welch, or British, as our History books prefer to call them. The British Church could not do anything to convert the heathen English when they came into the country. For the English were great fighters, and they did not respect any people whom they could beat as easily as they could the British, so that they would not listen to them. But the Welch sent missionaries to the Irish.

Under the preaching of these missionaries, Ireland became a great center of Christian learning and culture, and sent missionaries in their turn to many parts of the world. Thus Scotland, Norway, Sweden and Germany are greatly indebted to the Irish monks.

These brave men preached and practiced a Christianity that was most appealing in itself and doubly so because of their intense earnestness. There was nothing that they would not do, and nowhere that they would not go for Jesus. It was a warm, loving, all embracing and most lovable way they had of doing things, wonderful to make converts, but not so strong on organization and keeping them busy. Thus the missions the Irish started were often firmly established by them and, after a strong fight for the Irish customs, usually went over to adopt the more sensible and practical customs of their neighbors.

Thus the English people who were converted by the Irish monks eventually left the Scotch-Irish customs for the Roman. Nevertheless, the story of their work is very interesting. So we have, tonight, the story of one of their Saints as our program.

St. Columbanus.

In the year 543 there was born in the southeastern part of Ireland a boy who was to become known and loved in four countries. He was called Columbanus. Though his name means "dovelike", his disposition at times was anything else but dovelike. For, being a true Irishman, he possessed a great amount of the two qualities of lovableness and of loving a fight.

When quite a boy he was very religious. He used to like to read the Psalms aloud to his playmates and to talk about them. An aunt of his noticed this habit of his and said that he should study for the ministry. But his parents did not want him to leave home to go to the schools. But the aunt and Columbanus stuck to their point and finally one. So Columbanus soon went to the famous monastery school of Bangor, in the north of Ireland. There he soon became a prize pupil and one of the most popular boys in the school. This being the case, when he graduated he became one of the teachers.

One day, when he was approaching thirty years of age, he came across the passage in the Bible where God told Abraham, "Get thee out from thy country and thy kindred to a land that I shall shew thee." This he considered was a call for him to go as a foreign missionary, so he went to see the head of the monastery to ask his permission. The abbot did not wish to lose his best teacher, and refused to allow him to go at first. But Columbanus made the subject a matter of prayer, and after a while the abbot not only let him go, but also got twelve companions who agreed to go with him.

Eventually the band of Irish monks landed in France. That country was not at this time one as it is now; indeed, it had many kingdoms in it. Three of them were: Burgundy, Brittany and Austrasia. Our friend went first into Burgundy, where they were well received at first by the King. He gave them an old castle in a desert. This they repaired and used as a monastery. Being so far away from any city people, thought that they would hear nothing more of them. But Columbanus and his companions were such wonderful preachers that many people left their homes and came to live with them. Thus their monastery grew very great.

Now, Columbanus was an Irishman, and so a follower of St. Patrick. But St. Patrick had been a Briton, and as a member of the British Church he had a number of different customs from those of France and Rome. Thus the Irish had the custom of celebrating Easter at a different time than the Burgundians. This was called to the attention of the Bishops of Burgundy, and a great fight ensued when the Bishops tried to get the Irish to change. The Bishops wrote the Pope of Rome and the Pope wrote the Irish, but Columbanus wrote back to explain why the Irish were different and intended to stay different. Incidentally, it was not until about four hundred years after this that the Irish did change. They clung to St. Patrick against the Pope.

Their first monastery now having become very large, they left it and built and another one eight miles away. Though this also was in a desert soon a town grew up around it, which is still in existence. It is called Luxeil. Columbanus himself used to divide his time between the two.

At about this time the king of Burgundy had a lady at his court that was not a very good character. On one occasion Columbanus came to the palace to preach. Along with the others she came to hear him. After the service, she stopped to ask him to bless her children. But the Saint knew what kind of a woman she was and gave her quite a call down for her many sins.

The lady must have had a wonderful pair of lungs. An eye-witness tells us she first sent away her children, then she started. Scolding and screaming, we are told she made the palace shake with her voice until long after the preacher had left the building. The king tried to stop her, but could not do so until he promised to drive the Irish monks out of his territory.

Driven out of Burgundy, the Irish monks were taken to Britany in the west of France. There they thought that they would be sent back to Ireland. But instead, they were allowed to go free. So they came east again, only this time they came into the kingdom of Austrasia, just south of Burgundy. There the king bade them welcome, and asked them to go as missionaries to the Swiss and German tribes that lived just over the border of Switzerland.

There our friends worked very hard and won many people to Christ. But the King of Burgundy seems to have heard of them being in Austrasia. Perhaps the lady with the voice had begun doing her vocal exercises again. At any rate, he made war on the King of Australsia and beat him. So Columbanus left some of his followers in Switzerland under one of his companions named Gall. It is interesting to know that one of the cantons, or counties, of Switzerland, is named after this man St. Gall. He is called the Apostle to the Swiss.

Columbanus, with the rest of his followers, crossed the Alps and came into Lombardy, as the northern part of Italy was called at that time. The King of Lombardy received them well, so they settled here and built the monastery of Bobbio. In Lombardy, a town today is named after Columbanus. He died at Bobbio at the age of seventy-two.

He is said to have been a great organizer. He and his followers founded a string of monasteries that stretched from Italy to the North Sea. He was also a wonderful preacher. He used all sorts of imagination in his most flowery oratory. It is said that he made people do anything he wanted them to do for a time. He was loved, he was hated. He was learned and was a hard worker. He was kind, but he was stubborn. Or to put it in one word, he was a true son of Ireland.

St. Margaret's Summer Conference.

The conference at St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock, Va., will be held July 1 to 6, as a Young People's Division, and July 8 to 13 for adults and children.

The cost of either division is $6, plus registration fee of $1, and the children under twelve years of age will be charged $450, plus registration fee.

The faculty consists of the Rev. Herbert Donovan, chaplain; Rev. Cary Montague, for Church History; Rev. Robert Goodwin, Old Testament Prophets; Rev. Calvert Buck, Personal Religion; Miss Marjorie Bowman, Demonstration Church School; Mrs. J. H. Moore, Miss Rowena Brown, Mrs. G. W. Barton, for Woman's Auxiliary; Miss Elizabeth Gibble, Church Music. Bishop Goodwin will be present the first week, and Bishop Tucker, the second.

A recreational program has been prepared that should keep everyone entertained and happily occupied in free time.

BOOK REVIEWS

THE UNION SEMINARY REVIEW. Paper. Published by The Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va. Price, 45 cents per copy.

The Union Seminary Review, just completing its forty-sixth year of publication, is making its July issue (of one hundred pages) a Karl Barth number. Its contents will include a sermon by Dr. Barth; "The Absoluteness of Jesus," by Dr. Brunner; "Barth and the American Theological Scene," by Dr. E. G. Homrighausen, of Indianapolis, a leading authority on Barth; "The Barthian Theology in Great Britain," by Dr. John McCannachie, of Dundee, Scotland, author of "The Barthian Theology and the Man of Today"; "The Plane on Which God Can Be Known," by Dr. Harris E. Kirk, of Baltimore, author of "Stars, Atoms, and God," and other widely known books; "Dialectic Theology in the English-Speaking World," by Pastor H. Jochums, of Germany, and a descriptive bibliography of all the books on the Barthian movement available in English, by Dr. Holmes Rolston, Jr., of Rockbridge Baths, Va., whose book, "A Conservative Looks to Barth and Brunner", has been widely read in America. Orders for this special number (forty cents) should be sent promptly, as the edition is strictly limited.

IN THE STEPS OF THE MASTER: By H. V. Morton. Published by Dodd, Mead & Company. Price, $3.

For anyone who has not had the privilege of traveling in the Holy Land; also for the reader who would like to follow in the steps of one whose keen observation has traced the footsteps of the Master with his own art, built upon knowledge of the facts and the places.

In beautiful English, the author describes the scenes with splendid insight and simple reverence. The book lives in the atmosphere of Palestine, and in vivid and tender retrospect we turn its pages, beginning our journey at starlit Bethlehem to Calvary and its darkness, to the thrilling new day that dawned on the first of the Resurrection mornings.

RELIGION MEETS THE MODERN MIND: By Russell Henry Stafford. Published by The Round Table Press, Inc., 354 Fourth Avenue, New York City. Price, $2.

A book addressed to those who are anxious about the truth of religion in the modern thought world.

Its chief merit derives from the fact that the author gives us his own experiences in quest for the truth. And And that has been a varied experience. Dr. Stafford states that he has tried everything and in the end he has found for himself the manifold riches of the Gospel Truth. He has worked inward from the circumference of things to the centre, upon which the Christian philosopher builds: namely, Christ.

This is a book for the counselor and leader of youth; but not for the average reader, who would grow weary in following the paths along which this splendid spirit has trod.

JEFFERSON DAVIS: LEADER OF A LOST CAUSE.

dence only some hundred miles from the place where eight months later and in the same state Abraham Lincoln first saw the light. Of Welsh and Scotch-Irish extraction and of Baptist heritage in religion, Davis' family belonged to "the middle class of Southerners whose members owned few slaves and whose children often did much of the daily labour of the farm or small plantation". His father, Samuel Davis, had been an officer in the Revolutionary War and, after his marriage to Miss Jane Cook, a South Carolina lady, had settled near Augusta, Georgia. Here he subsequently became clerk of the county court. But he does not seem to have been successful, for in a period of a few years he moved three times and covered a distance of twenty-five hundred miles. He finally settled in Wilkinson County in lower Mississippi Territory, and here Jefferson spent his early boyhood. But there was good blood in the boy; and, thanks to his oldest brother, Joseph Emory Davis—a remarkable man who in an astonishingiy short time established himself as a prosperous and influential planter—he received the education and cultural privileges usually restricted to young Southerners of some wealth and social station. His record at Transylvania University, then the most important institution of learning west of the Alleghanies, does not seem to have been particularly distinguished, and at West Point, in contrast to Robert E. Lee and Joseph E. Johnston, he graduated only twentieth in a class of thirty-three. One explanation of this mediocrity, it has been thought, was his fondness for literature, a trait which retarded similarly the scholastic progress of Emerson at Harvard and of Poe at the University of Virginia. West Point none the less put its stamp on him, and he became a distinguished soldier (in the Mexican War) and later Secretary of War in the Cabinet of President Pierce. In between he lived the life of planter, scholar, and gentleman; went into politics and became successively Representative and Senator in the United States Congress. In the Senate he became a leading figure and earned a national reputation. He was an orator and parliamentary debater of eloquence and distinction. In appearance, we are told and the impresson is verified by a glance at his portrait, he "was, beyond doubt, very striking—rather tall, thin, arrow-straight, Indian-looking. . . . Few American public men have ever had a finer presence. . . . The heavy, square chin, thin lips, high cheek bones, hollow jaws, broad forehead, beautifully formed aquiline nose and long skull were typically Nordic, while the colouring of skin, eyes and hair showed the dark Welsh breed. His face, indeed, was impressive and unusual". In disposition he was affectionate, loyal, and devoted. While at West Point he was more popular with his fellow cadets than with the authorities and narrowly escaped expulsion, owing to his refusal to answer questions regarding a roommate, who was under suspicion as the fomenter of a riot. Here also he sent his mother what he was able to save from his small salary, in gratitude for the sacrifices that his family had made for him. In character and mind he was earnest and elevated, actuated by what he believed to be the highest principles. A good illustration of this and of the enlightenment and humanity of the man is the methods which he practiced as a slave-owner. Davis was honestly convinced that slavery was a divine institution and that it should be perpetuated. But he felt keenly the responsibilities which devolved upon him as the proprietor of human beings, and he accordingly brought to a high level of perfection the institution of slavery. "He placed the relation of master and bondman on the basis of justice; he was in fact, as well as in theory, the father of his servants. His slaves were excedingly well-cared for and remarkably trained. Capable Negroes were trusted in a high degree. No corporal punishment was allowed on the plantation except by the judgment of a Negro jury, which sat on all offenses against the rules of the place. The Negroes were happy and remained devoted to Davis through their whole lives; he was on terms of almost intimate friendship with them." During all the demoralization of the war and even the occupation of the country by the enemy, they remained steadily at work; and after the war were pointed out as examples of what slaves when freed might become.

EAU CLAIRE COMMEMORATES BISHOP KEMPER'S CONSECRATION.

(A part of Bishop Wilson's address to Annual Council Meeting, May 22, at Eau Claire.)

The centennial of Bishop Kemper's consecration is worthy of observance for two reasons. First, the man himself demands our admiration and our gratitude. It took no small measure of devotion and self-sacrifice for a man to give up a comfortable parish in the East and face the trials and dangers of life in what was then at best an undeveloped region abounding in uncertainties and in many parts a veritable wilderness. There was no easy way to do the thing he was asked to do. Many a man might well have been excused for shrinking from the task, but it is not with such human material that the Kingdom of God moves forward. Rather, it is intrepid souls, like Bishop Kemper, who carry the torch of Christian progress and spread the light of the Gospel wherever men and women elect to live—whether in the sparsely settled prairies, in the wooded North country, up the mountains or over the seas. Christ does not call us to the easy way. He calls us to the spiritual opportunity whether it may be easy or hard. We, who are the heirs today of such a Father in God as Jackson Kemper, may well examine our consciences and ask ourselves if we are keeping faith with him and exhibiting any reasonable degree of his courage and devotion upon which our own Church privileges depend.

THE RT. REV. JACKSON KEMPER, D. D., LL. D.

Consecrated September 25, 1835, as Missionary Bishop for Missouri and Indiana. Translated 1854 and First Bishop to Wisconsin.

But there is a second reason for keeping this anniversary, namely, because it marks adventure on the part of the Church one hundred years ago. For half a century following the Revolutionary War, the Church concerned itself with the problems flowing out of its colonial background along the Atlantic Seaboard. It was building its habits of thought and its methods of operation in conformity with the conditions prevailing in the more settled parts of the East. Meanwhile, the country was undergoing a quick change and the Church was in danger of slipping behind the times. The stream of Western migration had set in and the Church was confronted with the necessity of breaking loose from its Eastern anchorage and launching out upon an uncharted sea. It called for more initiative than we can quite understand today. Anglican tradition visualized first a diocese and then a bishop to administer it. Actual conditions clamored for a bishop to go out and create a diocese for himself. Misgivings over such an experimental novelty were natural, but the fact could not be blinked that something different had to be done. With a fine spirit of faith and vigor the Church set a new precedent. Not only was Bishop Kemper sent to the Northwest, but other missionary bishops were similarly sent to the Southwest and to the Far West. The wisdom of the policy soon began to prove itself. Within the next fifteen years the number of communicants and the number of clergy had more than doubled and everybody wondered why it had not been done earlier.

The significance of all this for us of the present day lies in the fact that we are again confronted with a fundamental change in our national life. It is easy to paint a picture of a possible crisis at any time, but I think everyone will agree that, since the close of the World War, the United States has been clearly faced with a new condition. The Church cannot cling to obsolete habits in a changed world today any more than it could a century ago. Again, misgivings are natural but timidity has never been a Christian asset and it cannot be allowed to stand in the way of the Church's advance. Farsighted Churchmen have realized this for some time past and last year another new departure was projected, in which the Diocese of Eau Claire was asked to take an important part.

Upon my request, at the last annual council, you elected Bishop Torok as Suffragan Bishop of this diocese—which election was part of a program to be presented to the last General Convention. For having done this, I am very grateful to you and I congratulate you

THE RT. REV. FRANK E. WILSON, D. D.

Present Bishop of Eau Claire, Wisconsin

on your courage and your vision. Large bodies move slowly, and are reluctant to commit themselves to important undertakings in which novel features appear. Perhaps it was expecting too much to think that General Convention would acquiesce without further information as to the existing need. Much was accomplished, though not all that we desired. A new canon of real importance was adopted and a lively interest was evinced in the possibilities of the near future. Confirmation of the election of Bishop Torok was denied by the House of Bishops—not because they were out of sympathy with the program as presented, but because the circumstances were so extraordinary that they hardly felt justified in taking normal action upon an obviously abnormal situation. However, the bishops did not want to see the matter dropped. A really large number of them have spoken to me and written to me offering suggestions and expressing the hope that we would not think of abandoning our plans, but would present another proposition which could gain the approval of the House. Meantime, the bishops agreed that we should carry Bishop Torok with his episcopal title, but without the faculty of performing episcopal functions. After consultation with several bishops I have placed Bishop Torok on the Cathedral Staff and have made him Assistant to the Bishop of the diocese. Further, I have asked the Presiding Bishop to appoint a special committee to investigate the whole situation and report to the next meeting of the House on the double question of Bishop Torok's consecration and his status in the Church. What I want you to understand is that you have done a constructive piece of work, the outcome of which is still to be determined but in which our confidence may continue to be securely placed.

WEEKLY GIFTS, METHOD OF RAISING MONEY.

St. Paul's Church, Meridian, Miss., with fewer than 400 members, set out to raise $2,000 in five weeks and ended with nearly $2,600. The method used was to ask each member for a gift each week, with successive weekly goals of $200, $300, $4000, $500 and $600. The week's total was announced each Sunday. On the second Sunday it was $269, but before the congregation was out of the church a check for $50 took it over $300. On the fourth Sunday it was $493, and when this word reached one of the oldest communicants of the parish, an invalid, she had herself propped up in bed long enough to sign a check for the missing $7. The Rev. William G. Christian is rector.

MANY CHILDREN IN NEED OF HOMES.

The Children's Bureau, State Department of Public Welfare, Richmond, Virginia, is desperately in need of the right kind of foster homes for its wards. It is also often called upon to recommend suitable foster homes to judges of juvenile courts who need such homes for their local wards. Any resident of Virginia willing to offer a home to one of these children may get additional information by writing the Bureau, at 11 South Twelfth Street. Some typical cases are described below:

Betty is a rather timid looking, eleven year old girl with large grey eyes and a bright smile. Her parents are divorced, the mother has remarried, but her home is not at all suitable, and the whereabouts of the father is unknown. Betty seems hurt and bewildered and anxious to find someone who will understand and love her.

Evelyn, who is slender, dark and sixteen, has heard nothing from her parents in years and came to the agency because of dependency. She does well in school and is active in church work.

Rose is a spritely little girl of ten with a sweet disposition. She is very appreciative of kindnesses shown her and anxious for a good foster home in the country.

Tom and Jack are two little brothers. Their parents have separated and each has remarried. Neither offers a proper home for these children and the boys are rather unhappy as a result.

Dan is a Negro boy of sixteen, who made his home with his aged grandmother before coming to the Bureau. He is anxious for a wage home on a farm.

Bill is a lonesome little Negro lad, who is badly in need of affection and kindness. He realizes his mother has never wanted him and he never knew his father. Attempts to get the mother to care for him have accomplished little. Although she supported him for a while, she didn't want to do it and he felt unwelcome and rejected.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED AT MEETING OF TRUSTEES GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

At a meeting of the Trustees of the General Theological Seminary held May 21, the following resolutions were passed:

The Reverend Horace Percy Silver, S. T. D., LL. D., a former member of this Board, died suddenly at his residence in Bedford, New York, on December 15, 1934. Throughout his ministry in the church he gave himself without reservation, especially to the poor, the needy, prisoners, the afflicted and the underprivileged. He was a faithful follower of our Lord Jesus and very grateful for the high privilege of serving his Master in the ministry of His Church. He was an alumnus of the Seminary of the Class of 1894, and was ever a loyal and enthusiastic supporter of the Institution. He was a faithful member of this Board for ten years, and unfailingly regular in his attendance at its meetings. He took a leading part in the effort to increase the endowment of the Seminary and the measure of success that it attained owed much to his generous and self-sacrificing interest. To the deliberations of the Board his clear thought, decisive utterances and genial humor made signal contribution. He was held in high and affectionate esteem by all of its members. It was a great privilege to be associated with him.

May he rest in peace and light perpetual shine upon him.

Be it Resolved, That the foregoing be spread upon the minutes of the Board and a copy be transmitted to the members of his family.

The Honorable Edward Lawrence Katzenbach, LL. D., who died December 18, 1934, had been a member of this Board since 1931. A distinguished layman, for many years Chancellor of the Diocese of New Jersey, he brought to his service of the Church the rich experience of long leadership in public affairs, for he had been Attorney General of New Jersey, President of the State Board of Children's Guardians, a Trustee of Rutgers University, and Lecturer on Politics at Princeton University. He contributed to the deliberations of this Board a ripe knowledge of educational problems and a generous interest in all that pertains to the welfare of the Church. His deep Christian devotion and his genial personality profoundly impressed his associates, and they desire to place on record their great gratitude for his services.

May he rest in peace and may light perpetual shine upon him.

Be it Resolved, That the foregoing be spread upon the minutes of the Board and a copy be transmitted to the members of his family.

At the same meeting a resolution was passed extending the sympathy of the Board to the family of the Right Reverend Ralph Ernest Urban, S. T. D., Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese of New Jersey, a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, Class of 1899, who died May 19, 1935, at Philadelphia, Pa.

GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY ALUMNI MEET.

The Associate Alumni of the General Theological Seminary held their annual meeting last week, in Seabury Hall, the Rev. Francis H. Richey, of Maplewood, N. J., the retiring President of the Association, presiding. Two important changes were made in the Constitution and By-Laws of the Association: the Nominating Committee is hereafter to be appointed by the President a year in advance; and the dates for nomination, issuing of ballots, and election of the Alumni members of the Board of Trustees of the Seminary are to be advanced by two months. The following officers were elected for 1935-1936. President, the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes; Vice-Presidents—First Province, the Rev. S. Atmore Caine, Brighton, Mass.; Second Province, the Rev. Frederick C. Lee, Rochester, N. Y.; Third Province, the Rev. Gordon B. Wadhams, Baltimore; Fourth Province, the Rev. William Way, D. D., Charleston, S. C.; Fifth Province, the Rev. William B. Stoskopf, D. D., Chicago; Sixth Province, the Rev. William F. Lewis, Bozeman, Mont.; Seventh Province, the Rev. Robert G. Mize, Jr., Hays, Kans.; Eighth Province, the Rev. Perry G. M. Austin, Long Beach, Calif.; Recording Secretary, the Rev. Gregory Mabry, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Corresponding Secretary, the Rev. C. Lauderburn, New York Cory; Treasurer, Rear Admiral Reginald R. Belkpap, New York City; Necrologist, the Rev. Charles N. Shepard, D. D., New York City; members of the Executive Committee, the Rev. Edmund Sills, New York City; the Rev. Francis H. Richey, Maplewood, N. J., the Rev. Thomas A. Sparks, New York City. The Alumni were guests of the Seminary at luncheon. In the afternoon the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes read an essay of unusual merit on "Fresh Techniques in Pastoral Care". The Rev. William H. Dunphy, Peekskill, N. Y., was selected to read the Alumni Essay next year, with the Rev. Elwyn H. Spear, New York City, as Substitute.

In the evening the class of 1915 held a Reunion Dinner on its twentieth anniversary of graduation, in Seabury Hall, and the Rev. Gregory Mabry, Brooklyn, N. Y., was elected permanent secretary of the class. They are proposing an even larger occasion in 19340, their twenty-fifth anniversary.

PER CAPITA GIFTS.

The annual figures have now been published for 1934 showing how much each of twenty-five non-Roman communions gave for their own congregational expenses and how much they gave for "others", i. e., missionary work outside the parish.

For parish expenses, in per capita gifts the Episcopal Church is near the top and the amount is $13.69. The highest and lowest amounts in this column are $19.58 and $3.50.

The work included in the general budget of the several communions, figures are given for only twenty groups. Of these, the Episcopal Church is the twentieth, 89 cents per capita being the smallest amount in the list. Our per capita is figured on the basis of baptized members.

Commenting on these figures, Dr. Lewis B. Franklin observed that the actual per capita gift for work outside the parish would be much higher if it were obtained by using the actual number of givers. What drags down the figure is the inclusion of the large number of Church members who give nothing at all for this purpose. While an increase in all gifts is much to be desired, it is still more important to enlist every member as a regular contributor.

CHURCH PERIODICAL CLUB.

The May meeting of the Church Periodical Club executive committee had a rare treat in hearing Mrs. Paul Matthews tell about the trip around the world which she has just completed with Bishop Matthews. The chief point she made was that wherever they went, they were deeply impressed with the high quality of our missionaries. Everywhere, Mrs. Matthews said, she found them eager and devoted, often overworked, because of a depleted staff, but never complaining about the cuts, except to explain how much they long to go ahead with the work and can not because money is lacking. In Jerusalem Mrs. Matthews saw the library of the Armenian Theological Seminary and was told, "Most of the books came from the Church Periodical Club". This was the first meeting of the executive committee in Church Missions House, where the C. P. C. now has its offices, at 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

British Jewry is to celebrate the Silver Jubilee by the planting of a forest in the hills of Nazareth, to be named by his Majesty's permission the "King George V Jubilee Forest".

Afforestation is one of the great needs of Palestine today, and in expressing their gratitude and loyalty to the King in this way, British Jews are at the same time making a valuable contribution to the development of the Holy Land.—Exchange.

Pilgrimage to Lawrenceville.

In preparation for the Whit-Sunday offering, which is asked of the Church, the "Challenge" Campaign is being vigorously pushed in all parts of the diocese. During the past week meetings were held in towns and cities, where large congregations gathered to hear of the needs of the Church, encouraging the leaders by the interest manifested.

The churches in Richmond conducted a pilgrimage to St. Paul's Industrial School in Lawrenceville, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Frederick D. Goodwin, which was attended by about fifty men and women from the city churches. At the school the visitors were met by a welcoming committee, and after a short service in the assembly hall, began their inspection of the buildings. This proved a much longer task than was anticipated, and before the rounds was completed, the delicious lunch, which was served the guests, proved a welcome interruption, after which the remainder of the buildings were visited. Amazement was expressed at the completeness and size of the establishment, and also at the handicaps under which the work is carried on with vigor and thoroughness. The new Domestic Science Building, now nearing completion, is partly occupied, the well-equipped hospital serves not only the school, but the entire colored population of the county. Both pride and gratification in the work was manifested by the "pilgrims" and a fuller knowledge was gained by them of the importance of this institution to the Church and the colored people in Virginia.

Grace Church, Cismont, Honors Their Parson.

A large gathering of devoted friends, and admirers from a distance, assembled at Grace Church Parish House, Cismont, May 10, to honor the Rev. F. S. Robinson's twenty-fifth anniversary of faithful and devoted service. Miss Margaret Randolph had planned for months beforehand to have a "silver tea" to celebrate the occasion. All of Mr. Robinson's missions were represented by loving friends and Mr. Murray Boocock made the opening address and presented Mr. Robinson with a very handsome silver dish, to which "our parson" responded most graciously. A box for any silver gift was placed near the door and a most generous offering given him. After many congratulations and much "talk and tea" all went home with the feeling of gratitude for such an occasion.

Mass Meeting Held.

A mass meeting was held in All Saints' Church, Richmond, the Rev. E. Van R. Stires, rector, Sunday night, to present to the Church people of the city the urgent needs of the work in the diocese. The "Challenge" Campaign, which starts May 27, has set as the goal to be reached $25,000, of which $6,500 will go to St. Paul's School to meet the needs for the year's work. The speakers, in short but forceful addresses, set before the congregation the tragic results to the mountain, rural and colored work, if the sum asked is not raised. Virginia has always met such appeals for the missionary work of the Church, and there is no apprehension that the diocese will fail in this crisis.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop

A Faithful Vestryman Passes.

Mr. Charles S. Shepherd died suddenly at his home in Covington, the morning of Saturday, May 18, at the age of seventy-seven. Mr. Shepherd was a native of Louisa County, Virginia, a son of William and Lucy Shepherd. He married Miss Alice Amelia Smoot of Maryland, forty-eight years ago, moved to Covington about two years later, and ever since has made his home there.

Mr. Shepherd had a unique record of association with Emmanuel Church in Covington. The parish was organized in 1890, with five vestrymen, of whom Mr. Shepherd was one. From that time he served continuously on the vestry, a period of forty-five years, and for twenty-five years was Senior Warden of the parish, relinquishing this office to a younger man about ten years ago. When the vestry of Emmanuel Church adopted the system of rotation in office for vestrymen, Mr. Shepherd was elected a life member of the vestry.

During his long period of service to the church, Mr. Shepherd saw his parish grow from a handful of communicants, worshipping in a small frame church, to a strong parish of more than 300 communicants, with one of the most beautiful churches in the diocese. He attended the consecration of the frame church in the early nineties and also that of the new building consecrated by Bishop Jett in 1932. The passing of this devoted layman is a real loss to his church and to his community.

The Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., conducted the funeral services Monday afternoon in Emmanuel Church, being assisted by the rector of the parish, the Rev. Warren A. Seager, and by the Rev. Dr. E. R. Rogers, rector of Boys' Home.

To quote the Covington paper: "A chivalrous Christian gentleman gone to his rich reward, his memory will ever remain with us as an admirable example of fine citizenship."

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D. Bishop.

Regional Service Held at St. John's Church, Hampton.

The first Regional Presentation Service of the Church School Mite-Box Offering to be held in the Diocese of Southern Virginia was held on the Second Sunday after Easter, May 5, when the Church Schools of the Tidewater Peninsula gathered in St. John's Church, Hampton.

The Rev. Theodore St. Clair Will, rector, was in charge, and was assisted by the Rev. J. K. M. Lee, rector of St. Paul's Church, Newport News, and the Rev. Samuel H. Sayre, rector of St. Mary's Church, Williamsport, Pa. The Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., rector of St. James' Church, Richmond, gave a most inspiring address.

Superintendents, teachers and pupils of the six Church Schools assembled in the Parish House and marched in procession carrying banners into the church. The largest representation was from St. Paul's Church, Newport News. The Junior Choir of St. John's Church sang.

The following Church Schools responded to the roll call and representatives placed their offering on the alms basin—Bruton Parish, Williamsburg; St. Andrew's Church, Hilton Village; Emmanuel Church, Phoebus; Grace church, Newport News, St. Paul's Church, Newport News, and St. John's Church, Hampton. The total offerng amounted to $723.92.

This service was considered by all to be a great success and it is hoped that similar Regional Services will be held through the diocese.

Service of Rededication.

The Birthday of Florence Nightingale was celebrated in St. John's Church, on Sunday night, May 12. One hundred and fifteen nurses marched in uniform from the Parish House and were seated in the nave of the church. The rector, the Rev. Theodore St. Clair Will, conducted the service and preached on "Florence Nightingale, the Ideal of Nurses".

After the offertory the church was darkened. A candle lighted from the altar lights was placed on the communion rail. The nurses came forward in single file and each one knelt separately for a prayer of dedication as she lighted her candle. When all the nurses had returned to their pews, they stood while the benediction was pronounced. Preceded by the choir in silent procession, the nurses left the church carrying their lighted candles.

The rector spoke of the fact that this was the first time such a service had been held in this section and hoped that St. John's would have the privilege of having a similar service annually.

The attendance and interest at the Lenten services this year were much better than in past years. The church was crowded for the three-hour service on Good Friday, and at all the services on Easter Day.

Thieves Entering Churches.

There appears to be an epidemic of buglaries of Communion services in the State of Georgia. During the past six or eight months three parishes in this diocese have had their Communion services stolen and at least one parish in the diocese of Atlanta.

On May 10, burglars broke into St. Mark's Church, Brunswick, and made off with two heavy silver alms basins, chalice and wine flagon. It is estimated that the value of the articles stolen, in silver bullion, would amount to around $100. It is believed that professional thieves engineered the robbery for the purpose of melting the plate and selling it on the present high silver market.

As noted in a recent news letter, a new Communion Service was recently given to Christ Church, Valdosta, by members of the parish to replace the stolen one.

Mr. Stovall, editor of the Savannah Evening Press, died suddenly at his home on May 15.

Mr. Clapp had taken an active interest in the work of Christ Church since coming to Savannah in 1929, and at the time of his death was a vestryman, and parish chairman in charge of the Every Member Canvass.

The Marine Band was present and several drum and bugle corps were in the procession, which covered fifteen minutes or more in filing out into the vast ampitheatre. Several hundred official standards, banners and flags waving in the breeze made a sight at once dramatic and thrilling.

The Rt. Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D. D., Bishop of Long Island, celebrated and preached. The number of communicants was very large—perhaps larger than ever before. The convention assembled for business immediately after the service, Bishop Stires presiding.

The Rev. Benj. Mottram, chairman of the committee on the Church Pension Fund, introduced Mr. Bradford Locke, who made an illuminating address on the Fund, and answered many questions that were put to him from the floor. The convention voted to support the Bishop in receiving letters dimmissory only on presentation of evidence that pension fund premiums are paid to date; and in licensing clergy to officiate in the diocese only on condition that they arrange to keep themselves in benefit in the Fund.

In Bishop Stires' annual address, he reported that mortgages on mission church properties had been reduced during the year by $9,550. He spoke of his request to General Convention last fall for permission to ask for a Bishop Coadjutor; and declared that having received that permission, he had no intention of using it until there was unmistakable evidence of an overwhelming desire on the part of the diocese. He reminded us that it will be ten years next Sunday since we elected him to be our bishop, and asked that prayers be made in all the churches that day for God's increasing blessing on our diocese. During ten years he has traveled upwards of 150,000 miles; more than 26,000 persons have been confirmed, more than half of them by himself; seventeen new missions have been established; eleven missions have been admitted into the convention as parishes; twenty new churches have been built, seven remodeled; one is under construction; there have been eighteen parish houses and four rectories built, and one rectory reconstructed. To this should be added the great achievement of building the new St. John's Hospital, in Brooklyn, in 1927-8.

The Rev. Dr. Jones reported for the committee on Placement and Salaries of the Clergy. A questionnaire had been sent to the 184 clergy, and 54 per cent had replied. A majority of those replying favored setting a minimum salary for the clergy and favored establishing a fund from which to augment salaries that were too small; they were willing to contribute to such a fund. A majority were opposed to the present method of securing a change of cure, and desired a national and a diocesan agency to help in suitable placement.

A resolution cordially commended the Forward Movement and called upon all to enter heartily into it.

A fraternal message from his grace the Greek Archbishop, Athenagoras, was received with appreciation. A message of affectionate greeting was sent to Colonel Wm. S. Cogswell of Jamaica, for many years a member of this convention, but now kept at home by the infirmities of ninety-odd years of age. A vote of congratulation and good wishes to Bishop Stires apropos his birthday yesterday was passed, and the convention adjourned.

Thanksgiving to Almighty God.

Prayer suggested by the Committee appointed by the convention in commemoration of Bishop Stires' tenth anniversary.

Most Gracious God, who hast promised manifold gifts of grace—the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and ghostly strength, the spirit of knowledge and true godliness—we, Thy children, praise Thy Holy Name and render this our special thanksgiving.

For ten years Thou hast sustained our beloved Bishop—Ernest Milmore Stires: sustain him still. Thy gifts have been made manifest to us in him: the wisdom of leadership, the understanding of the hearts of men, the courage to undertake difficult tasks and the strength to follow through. For these and all Thy blessings we praise Thy Holy Name.

But particularly do we thank Thee for the kindness, generosity, courtesy, and sympathy of this Thy servant. Through him men have been drawn to the love of Thee; his life has revealed his Master Christ.

To our grateful praise we add our earnest prayer that for our beloved leader and his gracious wife the years to come may be years of continual growth in Thy love and service, To the honour and glory of Thy Name; Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

St. Paul's Prepares for Anniversary.

St. Paul's Church, Brooklyn, will hold its annual service for Acolytes of the Metropolitan Area on Thursday evening, June 6. The Rev. W. D. F. Hughes, Precentor of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, will be the preacher. In connection with this occasion a new Shrine of the Sacred Heart, which is being installed, will be blessed. It is a memorial to the late John Traxel, given by his family. The statue of our Lord was executed by Angelo Lualdi of Florence, Italy, and the base, reredos, and canopy were executed by his studios in Cambridge, Mass., after his design. The figure stands seven feet high, the face expressing all that is meant by the Sacred Heart, the strength, understanding, sympathy, compassion, mercy, and love of God, as we know Him in our Lord Jesus Christ. The containing structure, richly carved and polychromed, is nineteen feet from floor to pinnacle, and symbolically embroidered dossals will hang on either side.

In preparation for the observance of the eightieth anniversary of the founding of the parish a renovation and restoration fund has been raised among the parishioners under the leadership of the present rector, and that in spite of the depression and the raising of the largest pledge to missions in the history of the parish. The exterior of the buildings have been fully repaired, the many splendid windows of the church restored and protected, the interior of St. Andrew's House, the rectory, redecorated, a new oil-burning heating plant installed in the church, and this summer the interior of the church will be redecorated, the pavement put in condition, and the pews reupholstered. The anniversary of the founding will be kept next St. Paul's Day, January 25, 1936, at which time the present rector, the Rev. Gregory Mabry, will also observe the fifth anniversary of his rectorship.

Philadelphia Entertains Distinguished Visitors.

General Sir Edward Colpoys Midwinter, K. B. E., and the Rev. Canon Stacy Waddy, D. D., as the official representatives of the ancient Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in the Church of England, were the guests of the Rev. Dr. Louis C. Washburn, rector of historic Old Christ Church in connection with visitations which the distinguished vistors are makng to the Colonial Churches of the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country.

Following their arrival, Sir Edward and Canon Waddy attended a luncheon given in their honor, when they were greeted by Bishop Taitt and representatives of the fifteen Colonial Churches of the Protestant Episcopal Communion in this diocese, whose congregations were served by missionaries of this famous Missionary Society during the seventy-five years prior to the War of Independence.

More than ordinary interest and importance attaches to the coming here of Sir Edward and Canon Waddy, as recent researches of the archives of the Society have unearthed a vast amount of unpublished source material of American history in the form of letters and reports from the missionaries sent out by the Society between 1701 and 1776 to the Colonies in North America. It is from a study of this mass of original and first-hand information that both Sir Edward and Canon Waddy have been preparing the addresses which they have been making.

The headquarters of the Society is in London. Sir Edward is the Custodian of the Archives of the Society, and Canon Waddy is its Secretary. The Society itself has a continuous record of service covering 234 years, and it was due to its missionary efforts that, from its foundation in 1701, the English colonists were supplied with clergy.

Sir Edward and Canon Waddy have been in this country since the early part of the present month. During this period they have visited the Colonial churches and made addresses in New England, New York and New Jersey. They have just completed their visitation of the churches in New Jersey. Upon their arrival here, they will go direct to Old Christ Church, where they will be met by Dr. Washburn and members of the vestry of that historic church, which was founded in 1695, and was the first Church of England congregation in the Colony of Pennsylvania, and which is of added historical importance in that it was within its walls the Protestant Episcopal Church in Pennsylvania and the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States was organized.

Following their visit to this city, Sir Edward and Canon Waddy will leave for Washington and will visit the Colonial Churches of Maryland and Virginia.

Memorial to Late Cyrus H. K. Curtis Dedicated.

Leading citizens of Philadelphia, representing its financial, business, professionary, official, religious and social life, took part in the dedication, on May 24, in Old Christ Church, of the Curtis Organ installed in that historic sanctuary as a memorial to the late Cyrus H. K. Curtis.

The Rev. Dr. Louis C. Washburn, rector of Old Christ Church, officiated at the dedication, the dedication address being delivered by the Hon. George Wharton Pepper, former U. S. Senator from Pennsylvania.

The Curtis Memorial Organ, which was formerly in Mr. Curtis' home, was the gift to Old Christ Church of Mr. Curtis' daughter, Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok. For the past thirty years of his life Mr. Curtis was a pew holder in historic Christ Church and maintained a close interest in the work of the church. It was he who erected the bronze tablets at the Franklin Tomb in the Churchyard of Old Christ Church at Fifth and Arch Streets.

The Memorial Organ, which is one of the largest church organs in this city has been installed in the famous Tower of Old Christ Church, where there is also the cherished ring of Eight Bells, erected there in 1754, largely through the leadership of Benjamin Franklin.

Twentieth Anniversary and Fifty-second Annual Convention.

The fifty-second annual convention of the diocese met in St. Paul's Church, Beaufort, N. C., May 15 and 16, 1935.

The main feature of the convention was the celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the consecration of the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., as Bishop of the diocese. The anniversary sermon was preached by the Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, D. D., Bishop of North Carolina.

The Rev. C. A. Ashby for the anniversary committee and the people of the diocese presented to Bishop Darst a loving cup, a Book of Remembrance and a purse.

The Rev. W. H. Milton, for the anniversary committee, presented a plan that will take care of a large diocesan debt over a period of four years, and will, it is hoped, raise enough funds for the beginning of an endowment for the support of the Episcopate.

At the afternoon session the annual address of the Bishop was delivered. In speaking of the anniversary, he stated that during the past twenty years he had laid his hands in Confirmation upon the heads of more than seven thousand people, and that he had ordained forty-five deacons and forty-four priests. During the same period, East Carolina has been represented by her faithful daughters in Alaska, the Philippines, Porto Rico, China, Japan, and numerous dioceses and missionary districts in this country. He also said that six new churches to replace those already established and twelve churches where we had never been represented had been built. He recommended very highly the Forward Movement. "The Church must go forward with Christ," he said. "It must recover its lost radiance. It must cast off its sloth and indifference and worldliness, or it must be honest enough not to call itself by the name of Him whose life it no longer cares to live, and whose Body it no longer strives to represent."

Another feature of the convention was a change in a canon that will make it possible for one-third of the members of any vestry to be women.

The budget recommended by the finance department was adopted for the year 1935.

The invitation of St. Paul's, Edenton, was accepted for the next meeting, May, 1936.

Church School Closes Its Doors.

After a long and useful life of service, beginning in 1871 as a parish school, St. Katharine's School for Girls, at Bolivar, was closed on May 21, not to reopen.

Diminishing numbers of pupils, dilapidation of buildings, with failure to realize funds expected for their repair and upkeep, lack of any endowment, are among the causes of this loss to the Church, which is deeply regretted by many.

On the closing day, a Corporate Communion was celebrated in the morning by the rector, the Rev. James F. Plummer, and in the afternoon the Bishop Coadjutor, the Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, D. D., preached and confirmed two, presenting diplomas and certificates to two girls who had completed their courses of study.

Confirmation classes have been unusually large this spring. Both in Memphis and in Nashville there have been classes of more than fifty each and even in the smaller churches the numbers have been greater than usual. The proportion of adults has been noticeable.

At the spring meetings of the convocations, special stress has been laid on the Forward Movement, and efforts are being made to secure a real Corporate Communion of each parish on Whitsunday and to extend the impetus of the Forward Movement into the summer.

RHODE ISLAND

Rt. Rev. J. DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop

One Hundred and Fofty-fifth Annual Convention.

The most outstanding items of business transacted by the diocesan convention at its one hundred and forty-fifth annual session, held last week in the parish house of the Cathedral of St. John, Providence, were the following:

The selection of a committee to arrange for the fitting observation of the twenty-fifth anniversary of James DeWolf Perry as Bishop of Rhode Island on the Feast of the Epiphany, January 6, 1936; condemnation of the State's partnership in horse-race gambling; opposition to the establishment of a State lottery; a suggestion that the Metropolitan Park Commission purchase the historical Glebe House, where the famous Colonial priest of the English Church, Dr. Mac Sparran, lived for many years of his quaint ministry; Bishop Perry's address on diocesan affairs; Bishop Bennett's on "The Forward Movement" and Dr. W. Appleton Lawrence's on "The Partnership Principle," in which he revealed a distressing selfishness on the part of parishes in their relations with diocese and General Church.

Only one debate developed unhappy feeling. At the convention of 1934 a resolution was passed requiring priests in charge of dependent parishes—missions—to make monthly reports to headquarters with the provision of "no report, no check". Fr. Charles S. Hutchinson, D. D., and the Rev. Anthony P. Parshley, both rectors of independent parishes, displayed a knightly spirit by undertaking in the spirit of sportsmanship to have this measure rescinded, which the missionaries complained set them off as belonging to an inferior order of clergy and hurt their feelings. After a debate, which on the whole dsplayed a surprising amount of indifference on the part of rectors once themselves in charge of remote missions, to the comfort of the present body of missionaries, the whole matter was peacefully and equitably disposed of. It was unanimously referred to the Bishop and Council where, the missionaries say, their case will receive sympathetic treatment.

The trouble was, according to the aggrieved group, not that monthly reports had to be made out, but that a threat of dire punishment for failure to perform their duties was incorporated in the records of the governing body of the diocese. But the curse was taken off that, too, when the Chancellor declared that the power in such concerns lay with the Bishop and Council and rescinding the resolution would be only a gesture. The comfort for the missionaries came in the implication that if the rescinding of the resolution was only a gesture, the original passage of it by the same token was merely a gesture also, a bit of gratuitous impertinence. To show his spirit of fair play, Canon Parshley at one point in the rather spirited argument moved that the rectors of independent parishes be forced to make monthly reports also. Altogether not a little wine of comradery was poured upon missionary wounds, and a spirit of brotherly love now prevails throughout the diocese.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

Annual Council.

The ninety-second annual council of the diocese was held in Christ Church, Pensacola, the Rev. G. Hendree Harrison, D. D., rector.

Meeting at the same time as the council was the forty-fifth annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary and the Twenty-seventh Annual Assembly of the Daughters of the King.

The high lights of the council were the addresses of the Bishop, to both his men and his women, and the address on the Forward Movement, delivered at the diocesan banquet on Wednesday night by the Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Tennessee. A special speaker to the Woman's Auxiliary sessions was Miss May McCormick, Executive Secretary of the Florida Tuberculosis and Health Association, and the Rev. Newton Middleton, rector of St. John's Church, Jacksonville, held a Quiet Hour for the Daughters.

Bishop Juhan called attention to his tenth anniversary, recently celebrated in the diocese and gave a splendid and challenging report of the work of the diocese throughout the past ten years. Special tribute was paid by the Bishop to the late Rev. Walter S. Cavell, senior priest of the diocese. During the council sessions special resolutions were adopted in memoriam to the Rev. Mr. Cavell.

A twenty-five per cent falling off in the confirmations of 1934 over those of 1933 brought forth an urgent appeal from the Bishop for the cooperation of the laity in bringing persons to confirmation. The Bishop expressed himself as feeling that the lesser number confirmed in 1934 may be due to more thorough preparation and higher standards being demanded by the clergy.

Improvements in Church property were enumerated and the completion of the remodeled Weed Hall, Chaplain's Residence and Student Center at the University of Florida, in Gainesville, was considered by the Bishop as an achievement of the year that will greatly enhance the effectiveness of the Chaplain's work among the boys of the two Florida dioceses.

Bishop Juhan reported an increase in 1935 of five clergy, three white and two Negro.

A special committee was appointed to cooperate with the Commission on the Forward Movement.

Captain Charles L. Conder, of Church Army, made effective addresses to both the council and auxiliary sessions.

Mrs. J. D. Russell, of Jacksonville, was reelected president of the Woman's Auxiliary, and Miss Marjorie J. Yonge, of Pensacola, was reelected President of the Daughters of the King.

The council and women's conventions will meet next May in Holy Trinity Parish, Gainesville.

Very Rev. R. L. McCready Resigns as Dean of Christ Church Cathedral.

The Very Rev. R. L. McCready, dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville, announced his resignation, effective September 30, on last Sunday morning, declaring he had "reached the retirement age." He has been Dean of the Cathedral for eighteen years, having been installed October 1, 1917.

The text of Dean McCready's resignation follows:

"My Very Dear Bishop Woodcock:

"In accordance with the purpose expressed in our personal conference today, I herewith present my resignation as Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, to take effect September 30, next; or at any earlier date, that may be agreeable to you and the chapter; and ask that you will announce the same to the chapter at its meeting, which you have called for tomorrow.

"It must be needless for me to say that my years at the Cathedral, which will be exactly eighteen on the date named, have been for me years of peace, of happiness, and of joy; and the thought of severance of the pastoral relationship brings the sense of keenest pain and regret, and is taken only under the compulsion of the sternest sense of duty, to what I conceive to be the best interests of this oldest and most important congregation of the diocese.

"As I said to you when I entered the ministry, I fixed upon an age for retiring. I am long past what seemed to me then the wise limit for the pastorate, and I have seen no reason to change my mind. The marvelously rapid, radical, and perplexing changes in every department of life in recent years, warn me that this is pre-eminently the day of the young man, who is abreast of, and can more rapidly adapt himself to current needs.

"The wardens and other members of the chapter have been kind enough to give expression to their personal affection and confidence, and their appreciation of the work which has been done since I have been privileged to be at the Cathedral. Whatever has been accomplished has been, under God, the result of exceptionally united, able, and earnest cooperation on the part of the staff, the chapter, and the congregation. While there have been, as is inevitable, differences of opinion, there has also always been not only the effort toward, but the attainment of, the unity of Spirit, in the bond of peace.' For this we cannot be too grateful.

"My deepest affection will always abide with the Cathedral, its people, and its work; and my most earnest prayers will always be offered for the continued prosperity and the true success of this mother congregation of the diocese, from which so great a part of its strength is derived.

"Yours in the work of our common Lord,

Richard L. McCready."

Festival Service.

The annual festival service of the diocesan Acolyte Guild was held on May 24 at Grace Church, Grand Rapids, with 110 young men and boys in attendance and with fourteen of the diocesan clergy in the procession. Bishop McCormick, the Rev. L. B. Whittemore, rector of the parish; the Rev. W. A. Simms, and the Rev. A. Gordon Fowkes, Warden of the Guild, made addresses at the dinner and the sermon of the evening service was preached by the Rev. G. C. Story, rector of the Church of the Mediator, Chicago. At the business meeting Mr. Fowkes was reelected Warden, and Earl Brown of St. Philip's, Grand Rapids, was elected Secretary.

Challenges Pope's Declaration.

Denial that the Anglican Communion need establish relationship with the Church of Rome in order to maintain its catholicity, was made in a statement by Bishop Stewart, issued in comment upon the Pope's invitation to the Church of England to "return to Rome."

"The utterance of the Pope is in accordance with Rome's policy of assuming that the Roman Catholic Church is the whole Catholic Church and that communion with the Bishop of Rome is a sine qua non of Catholicity," said Bishop Stewart.

"This assumption the Anglican Communion repudiates and denies. The Archbishop of Canterbury, before whom the King recently knelt to receive a blessing, and the Archbishop of York, must have smiled when they heard the papal invitation.

"There are about forty millions of Anglicans and four times that many Eastern Orthodox Churchmen who are Catholics and not Protestants, holding the historic Catholic faith, sharing in valid Catholic sacraments and ministered by valid Catholic priests and bishops who prefer to live their life without the dominance of a sovereign pontiff in Rome whose reiterated claims to sole and autocratic rule are not justified by the practice and rule of the primitive Church as reflected in the New Testament, and in the early days of the Church before Rome based her claims upon grounds which later critical ages showed to be unwarranted.

"Anglicans prefer catholicism which is less feudal in its government and more consistent with the principles of true democracy."

VISION.

I saw Thee as a shadow in the sky
Upon the swirling tempest passing by,
That frowned upon the earth's rebellious night,
And spake a judgment from the holy height.

I saw Thee where the helpless lambs were born
Upon an early April all forlorn,
And there was bleating by the shining pool
For hands that laved them in the waters cool.

I saw Thee in the streets of hungry men,
And I was old as Abraham again,
That found a better world beyond today
And went with Thee upon an unknown way.

The Bulwark of Conscience.

A return to prayer life will also restore for us the bulwark of conscience. This is the aim of every Christian's life, "Whatsvoever ye do, do all to the glory of God". That is Christian conscience. Not for a single moment would any of us admit that this is the only desire of the human heart. Other considerations come forth to challenge this supreme good, this highest goal of action. A Chinese philosopher once said, "Four desires are central in a man, giving him no rest. They are the desire for long life, for reputation, for dignity and for wealth". What man is not in this day tempted to subordinate the glory of God and Christian conscience to any of these four inferior aims? How easy it is for anyone to sell his soul for reputation, dignity or wealth. What pressures crowd down and are exerted upon the temples of our idealism in these hard days! How necessary it is that moral courage be fortified by steadfast praying. It may be said of many men as was said of one man in the marketplace, "He simply let his hand slip from God's". Moral breakdown comes when we cease to pray. A minister once said, "My soul life raveled at the point where I ceased to pray because there were some things of which I could not speak to God. No man gets far from God who finds himself able to speak with God on bended knee of all that goes on in his business, his profession, his society and his home. This is the hope of business, of government, of law, of everything, that enough people in every department of life, laying before God in prayer the failures, injustices, the wrongs of their particular sphere, cry out, "Lord, Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven, and let it begin in me. This evil must be set right, use me to right it, for this task give me courage and give me strength". Out of such souls shall come the dynamic of reform, uplift and moral reconstruction.—Presbyterian Banner.

THOUGHTS, WORDS AND DEEDS.

Wm. P. Rockey.

When thoughts perplex and faith grows dim,
We may God's wisdom seek;
If we all put our trust in Him,
He will His promise keep.

Our words should all be wise in choice,
Accord with God's command;
If we all listen to His voice,
We all may understand.

Then there are deeds we all may do,
For friend, as well as foe;
These will be good our whole life through,
If we God's spirit show.

Thoughts, words and deeds, what e'er our lot,
Mean much while here on earth;
Do not these things determine what
Our character is worth?

The Greatest Victory in the World.

That is the victory over the greatest enemy in the world. The greatest enemy in the world is death, the last enemy that shall be destroyed, implacable, inescapable. For the Christian anyhow, death is by appointment only. It is an old saying that man is immortal till his work is done. And it is a true saying that it is appointed unto me once to die. Death an appointment with God!

Death is an enemy. The Bible says so. It does certain things that an enemy does. It breaks up homes; it unsettles and disturbs the ordinary affairs of life; it creates desolations; it causes grief and loneliness; it makes people afraid. Death is that kind of an enemy.

But death is a conquered enemy. And he who says, I am the Resurrection and the Life, has said to death, Thus far shalt thou go and no further. Some very precious things cannot be destroyed by death. Death cannot destroy a good name. On the contrary, death is the great amplifier. When one lives the good life, the Christian life, and serves his home and his community and his church, and builds up for himself a name, a good name more to be desired than great riches, death is powerless to hurt that. Death cannot destroy either memory or hope, the two angels God has given us to come in and comfort the sorrowing heart. Death cannot take away the comfort in believing that to die is gain, that where our loved ones have gone it is better than where we are. The chief function of death for the Christian is to be outside usher at the gates of pearl.

Death cannot take from us the precious friendship of the surviving. On the contrary, death sounds a siren call to friendship to prove its tenderness. Just as when a part of the body is bruised the blood of the body instantly rushes there to help and heal, so friendship hastens to share the burden of a broken heart. And God is like that. Never far from us at any time, he becomes very present in trouble. Our friends are never far away, ready to come any time we call. When death intrudes, these friends come without being called. Like God, they become very present.

Death cannot separate us from the life of a loved one gone to Heaven. Death can separate us from the body in which the life dwelt for a time. But that life could not be holden of the body. That life overflowed the body, became part of the life of others, a very wonderful part of the life of a married mate. And in the innermost being of the survivor there lingers and lasts the life of the loved one gone ahead.

Death cannot destroy, but rather must needs deepen the life of God in a Christian, on either side of the grave. Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted by a deeper experience of God. O death, where is thy sting?—George Luccock, in Ex.

A MEDITATION.

Sue Blandy.

When lowering shadows cross our mental sky,
We ask the one eternal question, "Why?"
The answer, both immutable and old
Is this: We all are made in human mould,
When God is inspiration for our thought,
Then every act in kindness will be wrought,
And His own Kingdom will be here on earth—
Each soul will have accomplished its rebirth;
But since we all are human, therefore weak,
We need to pray and diligently seek
To guide our thoughts by His great law of love;
So shall we live on earth, but dwell Above.
Then shadows will not mar our mental sky,
Nor human weakness cause us even a sigh;
For deep within our hearts will be His Light
To guide our every thought and act aright.

Horace Greeley's Advice.

Horace Greeley once received a letter from a woman stating that her church was in distressing financial straits. They had tried every device they could think of—fairs, strawberry festivals, oyster suppers, a donkey party, turkey banquets, Japanese weddings, poverty sociables, mock marriages, grabbags, box sociables and necktie sociables. 'Would Mr. Greeley be so kind as to suggest some new device to keep the struggling church from disbanding." The editor replied: "Try religion."—The Presbyterian Record.

Jane Addams Dies.

Chicago lost one of her outstanding citizens in the death this week of Miss Jane Addams, founder and for many years director of Hull House. Representatives of all faiths and creeds and thousands of poor families on the west side turned out to pay tribute to her. Speaking over a national hookup on the Columbia network in her honor, Canon David E. Gibson, head of the Cathedral Shelter, said in part:

"The nation has met with a great loss in the death of our friend, Jane Addams. She did not labor in vain. She built a social settlement that has brought sunshine into thousands of homes. The highest tribute that could be paid her would be to say that she went about doing good. To improve the material conditions of God's less fortunate children was her constant aim. In this labor of love she was actuated by the purest of motives. With a marked singleness of purpose she steadfastly pursued her course and has left a legacy of loving hearts and willing hands to continue her work."

Golden Jubilee of St. Andrew's Memorial Church.

The fiftieth anniversary of the founding of St. Andrew's Memorial Church, Detroit, was observed in Golden Jubilee celebrations during the week of May 12-19. The first event was a homecoming at a celebration of the Holy Communion for all past and present members of the parish, with sermon by the rector, Rev. Gordon Matthews. On Friday evening, May 17, the actual date on which the first service was held fifty years ago, there was the anniversary dinner held in the parish house, at which Mr. Fred Wardell was the toastmaster. The speakers included the rector and the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, who extended greetings; and brief addresses on St. Andrew's, Past, Present and Future, by Fred Cowley, John C. Spaulding and Robert Hutton respectively. There was a musical program under the direction of Edward C. Douglas, organist and choir director. On Sunday morning, May 19, was held the Jubilee Festival Service, with presentation of the Golden Jubilee Offering. The Rev. Francis B. Creamer, rector of Christ Church, Detroit, was the preacher. The first charge on the Golden Jubilee Fund, for which a mark of $5,000 has been set, will be the payment in full of the debt on the Community House. The second objective is the restoration of the chancel window, a project assumed six years ago by the women of the parish, but never brought to completion. This window is a memorial to the late Rev. William L. Torrence, for sixteen years rector of St. Andrew's and a considerable nucleus has already been collected towards this purpose. It is hoped that the Jubilee Fund will enable the work to be completed.

St. Andrew's began as a group of thirteen children and nine adults in a cottage, as an Episcopal Sunday school. Later an evening service was started, the first having been held on May 17, 1885, by the late Rev. Rufus W. Clark. The name of St. Andrew's was given to the mission by the then Bishop of the Diocese, Rt. Rev. Samuel S. Harris. The parish was incorporated in 1889, the original church completed in 1902. This edifice burned in 1906 and was restored in 1907. The Community House and rectory were built in 1924

Women's Auxiliary Meets at Ypsilanti.

The Women's Auxiliary of the diocese held its monthly meeting at St. Luke's Episcopal Church, Ypsilanti, on Monday, May 27, beginning with a Communion service at eleven o'clock. Reports were given on a recent conference held at Brent House, Chicago. Mrs. W. T. Barbour gave a lecture on the Migrant Situation, illustrated by moving pictures entitled "Gypsies of the Crops".

King George's Perquisites.

Monarchies are strange things to the republican mind. Old laws and tradition make curious situations, and although the present-day king does not often avail himself of his privileges, it is surprising how many queer sources of income he actually could use were he so inclined.

Take the British monarch, King George V, for instance. He may claim for his own any ship that illegally changes her name and flies the British flag, if she has no right to do so. This may seem a remote contingency, but it was not so many years ago that a large steamer was pronounced forfeit to the king in the Australian courts.

In British law, all people who die without a will leave their money to the king, whether they intended to do so or not, and each year the crown receives a large income from this source. If you were digging in your garden and happened across a buried treasure, you might think yourself lucky, but not in England. Oh, no! unless the owner could be found, all buried treasure belongs to the king.

All whales and sturgeons caught by his subjects belong to King George, if he cares to claim them, and every swan in his dominions is also his property, no matter who owns them. All wrecks of the sea in British waters are the monarch's own property, and he is entitled to any money from the cargo or to any money received from their sale.

One can hardly imagine King George taking a shovel and coming into your back yard to dig for saltpeter, but he may do so if he wishes, for the old law says that all saltpeter found belongs to the king, and he may enter any man's land to dig for it or send anyone he wishes to dig. This ancient law dates from the days when saltpeter, being an indispensable ingredient to gunpowder, was invaluable to national safety.

Also, the king may enter any man's land and build fortifications, and if he suddenly took a notion to erect a fort in your front yard, there is nothing you could do about it. This is one privilege that is by no means obsolete, for many an unwilling owner has to give up his land for government defenses. In this day, however, the owner is paid for it.

All gold and silver found in the United Kingdom is the absolute property of the crown. It is never claimed, but if a man wishes to work any precious metals in England he pays very heavily for his license to do so. As a matter of fact, the king could set up a mint of his own and coin all the money he wished for his own use, and nothing could be done about it without some form of new legislation, for the king cannot, by law, be a counterfeiter.

England having a state Church (the Episcopalian), the king could make considerable money from that source also, if he wished to do so. As he is the legal head of the Church, he can appoint any qualified person as bishop, and can appoint any minister to any government church he sees fit. He owns the copyright to the Authorized versions of the Bible and to the Book of Common Prayer, and could also draw a revenue from that source. Many years ago, however, a charter to print these was granted to the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and licenses to certain firms known as "King's Printers", so these permissions would have to be revoked.

If he wishes to do so, the king can pardon every convict in the country, and there is only one crime which he cannot pardon. Curiously enough, this single thing over which the king has no power is Sabbath breaking. Not even he can pardon a man who is convicted of this. Also, he may grant a title to whomever he will, and it is quite possible for King George to make every single man in the country a knight or a lord or an earl, without asking anyone. And the man who refused the title would be breaking the law.

Many queer perquisites come to the king by law. The Duke of Marlborough and the Duke of Wellington each present him with a French flag and a royal standard on the anniversaries respectively of the battles of Blenheim and Waterloo, in memory of their famous ancestors, who won those battles for the English. Another noble family has to present him each year with six Cashmere shawls; another with a pair of milk-white greyhounds; another with a certain number of horseshoes, and still another with a bunch of red roses. The Duke of Atholl must present a single white rose to the sovereign whenever the latter visits him, and the Munros of Scotland must give him a snowball any day of the year which he may demand it. It might even be in hot weather.

All these things are, of course, queer forms of rent. Generations ago some king presented the living representative of the family with a tract of land in memory of some deed performed, and as a nominal rent demanded a rose or a snowball or a dog, and this old law still stands. Incidentally, it has been the means of some funny things happening. Once, without thinking, Queen Victoria visited the Duke of Atholl in the depths of a hard winter, and the latter nearly had a fit of apoplexy trying to get her a white rose. It was finally sent by a special messenger from the south of France.

King Edward, who was a great lover of a joke, ran across the old law regarding the Munros, and suddenly demanded a snowball in one of the hottest summers known in England. In this case, though, the poke was on the king, for the Munros own a mountain named Ben Wyvis, where, in a great chasm, there is a glacier that stays all the year around. So King Edward duly received his snowball.—Ernest H. Barbour, in Young People.

CHAPTER XXI.

The Far Ridge.

M. L. G.

A soft breeze stirred the old hemlock, the tree which in the winter had showered Claire with cold drops when its snow-blanket was loosed. Very different the air was now, and very different was Claire. She had grown better fast in the atmosphere of home. After two months she went back to the hospital, and returned in triumph, and without the plaster cast. Now, in the sunshine of late July she was having her morning walk. From the chair where mother sat with her darning to the hollihocks ranged in gay battalions against the side fence and back again. Even this was not to be done without a few minutes' rest, and Claire sank weary and smiling on the grass by the hollihocks, her bright head level with their lowest blooms.

"That's the farthest yet, honey," cried mother. "Do rest, you have all morning to take the walk back. Or shall I put you in the hammock now, and in an hour or so you can walk back to the hollihocks?"

"No, mother, I don't feel tired much. Could I just lean back here a few minutes and then come back?"

"I know, Claire!" Winnie cried from the porch upstairs. 'Stay there just a little while and I'll come down and do my drawing lesson on you—" She disappeared, and was soon on the lawn beside mother's chair, with a drawing pad and pencils.

"Miss Sarah said I could sketch from life. It would be sketching from life, Claire, if I can draw you up against the hollihocks. And she said I must take only fifteen minutes. It's quarter to twelve now, I must be through by twelve. It won't be so very good, but that's the lesson. I tried Phil, but he just can't keep still. Will you, Claire?" Winnie was already eying Claire, a pencil held at arms length from her eyes.

Claire, leaning back in lazy comfort, nodded and except for the gray eyes, that followed Winnie's pencil, she was so still she might have been asleep. Mother, looking over Winnie's shoulder saw the likeness grow with each quick strike—there was Clare's head, with the soft hair falling across the forehead. The eyes were Claire's; the other features, hardly more than suggested, yet gave the impression of the still half-smile that was so truly Claire's own. Winnie even put in a few deft strokes that showed the hollihocks abloom behind Claire before the sound of the clock from within the house warned her that the time was over.

"Winnie, it is good!" Just look here, dear," as father appeared in the doorway, "Miss Sarah has made an artist of our little girl."

Father took the sketch. "Miss Sarah has helped her, certainly, but the making was done before that. But, indeed, this is the best you've done, Winnie. How like Claire, and how few strokes to get it!" Father studied the little sketch, crude, but full of unmistakable spirit and strength.

Claire began her walk back, balancing with her arms, but smilingly refusing her father's help.

"Where are the boys?" he asked when Claire was comfortable in her hammock and he on the grass by its side.

"Kent and Phil are catching bugs for their pet toad," said Winnie. "He lives in the garden, and he doesn't look so thin, really, but they thought he needed bugs."

"Had they any luck?"

"Well, not when I saw them, but I heard Phil tell the toad he'd have plenty by the toad's lunch time."

"And where's David?"

"Gone to the swimming place on Little River," answered mother. "Mr. Price came by for him, with Ham and Joe and Pat and some others. And, dear, Mr. Price said David's swimming is improving and that he has a fine influence on the group!"

"That's good," father answered. "Price was not easy to convince at the time of that misunderstanding in David's class. I'm glad for him and David to become better acquainted."

Father sat silent awhile, stroking the silky ears of Noel, who had come to share with him the space by Claire's hammock.

"I've been pretty nearly to the top of Far Ridge this morning," he said at last. "I have a head full of pictures, Winnie, of the mountain road, so cool and dark in the woods, so beautiful where it comes out and one sees the valley below. But all is not beautiful," he added, his voice dropping.

"How was the poor boy the sawmill injured?" asked mother.

"Too far gone to help. We had a prayer together, though, before he died. But one thing—" Father got to his feet and began pacing up and down from the hammock to the hemlock tree. "One thing has come more than ever to my mind. Those people must have help—something nearer than Grace Church here in the village or the chapel over on the other side. I've been thinking of it for some time. They need someone to live up there. Why, we might have saved Elmer if there had been some one near to give him first aid."

"It would be lonely for just one person," mother said hesitatingly.

"Perhaps not for the right one. Just where to get the money—but I must work it out. There's a real chance up there. Come with me to the funeral, dear, tomorrow. All the neighborhood will gather for that. We'll see them, and you can sing a hymn or two, for Elmer's mother, at the service. Will you?"

"Of course, the poor mother! And take some flowers, too, and some of Cindy's chicken soup; perhaps she could take that more readily than her usual fare."

Father and mother were gone all the next day, and it seemed long to the children, though the sun shone in as blue a sky, the hollihocks fluttered as gaily, the toad accepted as placidly the little boys' attention. Winnie had put Philip and Kent to bed an hour after supper, and she and David were playing checkers with Claire looking on, when the welcome sound of wheels on the driveway was heard.

"There they are, David! Cindy will have their supper hot—she's going to bring it to the side porch. But I must light the candles and get the ice cracked. I told Aunt Cindy I would."

"Well, Win, I'm beaten this game already. You just didn't know it. Next play I'd jump both your kings," said David, laughing as he gathered the checkers into their box. "I'll go help Uncle Danger with Frank."

A few minutes more and father and mother were having their belated supper on the porch, Winnie fluttering about in her anxiety that all should be as nice as possible, and Claire on father's knee.

"How can you reach your plate, around me, father?" she asked.

"What's my long arm for if not to reach around small objects between me and my supper? And it tastes good!"

"Aunt Cindy's cooking and Winnie's serving," said mother, giving Winnie's arm a squeeze as she took her glass of iced tea.

"Was it nice up on the mountain, father?"

"Beautiful where God has had His way, Claire. Not so good where His way has been misunderstood or hindered."

David had come up the low steps and seated himself on the top one.

"A mission up there—that would be to help Him have His way again?"

"Yes, son, that's the work of a mission—of the Church itself, of all who call themselves by His name. And the Far Ridge, mother and I both think, is our chance to do one bit that needs doing."

They were silent awhile, thinking of the Far Ridge.

"Can I go with you some time, father"

"Glad to have you, David. But here's Claire gone to sleep—"

"Not quite, father."

"Let's have prayers here on the porch," suggested mother, "then Claire and I will go upstairs. Let's just say the Shepherd Psalm together."

Claire, lying content in father's arms, looking at the stars over the hemlock tree, joined in every now and then; "green pastures"—"Thy rod and Thy staff"—"my cup runneth over"—"the house of the Lord—forever."

She slept; and father, without disturbing her to kneel, prayed the prayers they all knew, and added a new petition, for the coming of His way on the Far Ridge.

An Unexpected Object Lesson.

How hot it was that Sunday morning in July! All the windows and doors of the church were thrown wide open. Even the sliding partition between the junior and intermediate departments had been pushed back. Miss Carew and Miss Simpson, the teachers, said they'd rather teach above each other's voices than shut off any breeze that might be abroad.

The lesson was about Elijah being fed by the ravens.

"What is a raven, children?" asked Mis Carew of the juniors.

"I know,"' said Jackie Horner. "It's a big, black bird.

"No, Jackie," said his twin sister, Jill, "I don't believe it's a blackbird. We have lots of blackbirds in our yard and they just sound like the door opening and shutting when the hinge gets squeaky. I don't believe they'd feed Elijah. They just feed themselves."

"There are different kinds of blackbirds," explained Miss Carew. "Your blackbirds are purple grackles, but there is another—"

Just then there was a whirr at the open window and a big, black bird flew into the room.

"Oh, teacher, teacher! Is that a raven?" cried Dick Arnold. All the children were at once excited.

"I bet that's the very one that fed Elijah," shouted Tommy Greyson.

"Aw! How could that be?" laughed Junior Hale.

"The raven—" began Miss Carew, but nobody listened. Every eye was turned to the big bird that was flying about the room, strange to say, to all appearances, unfrightened.

What could be done about it? The bird circled the room a time or two, then sat on the top of a window and looked down without making a sound.

"Perched, and sat, and nothing more," quoted Miss Carew to herself.

"Now, children, never mind the bird," continued she. "The ravens—"

Just then the bird flew down from his perch, circled the room again and flew into the intermediate department through the opened partition.

"Oh, Miss Simpson, look!" giggled Dorothy Taggart. "Elijah's raven!"

All the intermediates laughed.

"That's little Sam Connor's tame crow," said one of the boys. "He follows Sammy everywhere he goes. I guess he thought he'd come to Sunday school."

"If Sammy is in the junior room," said Miss Simpson, seeing she'd have no lesson as long as the crow remained, "maybe he'll come and get him."

She went to the door, but there was no Sammy.

"Does anybody know where Sammy is?" asked Miss Carew when Miss Simpson appealed to her.

"He started to Sunday school," said Junior Hale. "I saw him. He started before I did."

"I bet the crow followed him and he doesn't know where he is and he's hunting him," said Dickey.

The lesson had become hopeless. Every eye was riveted on the crow.

"There goes Sammy now," piped Jill. "He's looking all around."

"Run over, Dickey," said Miss Carew, "and tell him his crow is here. Tell him to come right straight over and get it, so we can go on with the lesson."

Dickey darted off, and in a minute was back with Sammy, whose face shone with delight now that he had found his pet.

"Get him and take him home, Sammy," said Miss Carew, anxious to resume the lesson.

Sammy whistled. "Come on, Jim."

The crow looked down from the high perch he had chosen, but he did not move. "Caw!" he cried, to the children's glee.

"Quoth the raven, 'Nevermore!'" quoted Miss Carew to Miss Simpson.

No cajolery would bring the crow. In dignified silence he looked down from his perch.

Miss Carew and Miss Simpson abandoned their lessons in despair and made up their class reports.

"I'm going to get my dog and bring him over, Miss Carew," announced Sammy.

"Your dog, Sammy!" gasped Miss Carew. "No, indeed! He'll make more mischief than the crow."

"It's not that," said Sammy, eagerly. "You see, Jim and Rex are pals. If Rex comes over, you see Jim'll come down." He ran off.

A song or two and Sunday school was over. If only Jim Crow could be banished before the church service! What if he'd take a notion to fly down and perch upon the pulpit during the sermon!

In two minutes Sammy was back with his dog. The children, wide-eyed with curiosity crowded round.

"Stand 'way back," warned Sammy, "if you want to see what they'll do."

Rex, a young collie, stood obediently at Sammy's side. Suddenly the crow looked down and uttered an unmusical "Caw". Rex looked round in surprise.

"Caw, caw," called Jim.

Rex looked up, saw the crow upon its perch and gave a joyful bark. The crow flew down on the floor immediately in front of the dog.

"Play dead bird, Rex," called Sammy, forgetting where he was, though both the teachers stood looking to see what would happen next.

Rex raised a paw and gave the crow a gentle blow. Over went Jim upon his back, his claws in the air.

"Oh, oh! he's dead!" cried several voices in alarm. "Your dog killed him."

"Did you, Rex?" asked Sammy with a laugh. "Make Jim get up."

With another joyful bark, Rex touched the crow again. Jim opened his beak side wide it looked as though it would come apart. Rex stepped back as though he feared he might be swallowed.

"Once, when Rexie was too rough, Jim pecked him," laughed Sammy. "Now he watches out, and when Jim opens his beak, he gets out of the way." The crow rolled over, stood erect and spread his wings, then flew upon Rex's back.

"Now, Rex, we'll go home," said Sammy.

Reluctantly, the children made way for them as the little procession, Sammy leading, Rex following with the crow on his back, left the room. Then the children darted after them in time to see the crow unfurl his wings and fly home, to be ready to greet his two pals, Sammy and Rex, when they returned afoot.—By Etta W. Schlicter, in Advance.

EMMANUEL CHURCH WOMAN'S GUILD,
Franklin, Va.

BY DIRECTION OF THE RICHMOND CLERICUS, AN APPRECIATION OF JAMES SOLOMON RUSSELL, D. D.

I first met ARCHDEACON RUSSELL at the Diocesan Council of Southern Virginia in 1896, though I had previously known of him and his excellent work. From that time on I became interested in him and his work and kept both under constant survey. For about twenty-five years I heard him deliver his report to Council and heard his addresses, debates and discussions before the Council of Southern Virginia and also before various Convocations and whenever possible, I went to hear him speak. I also made visits to St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School at Lawrenceville and frequently discussed the Archdeacon and his work with others. His great work in the school and with the colored churches and missions of Southern Virginia speak for themselves.

Dr. Russell was an outstanding personality and what he was and did was characterized by a simple dignity, adequacy, courtesy and faith that gave to him and his labors the qualities of greatness and merited success. As far as I was able to learn, under the most adverse circumstances and in the face of great difficulties, he won the respect, confidence and admiration of all with whom he came in contact, both white and colored. To have known him well was an inspiration and benediction and I was glad to have him as my friend.

He was a very able and interesting speaker. He had a good voice and an impressive delivery and seemed the master of the themes he discussed. What he said was always clear and to the point and expressed in the best of good English. I never knew him to make a slip either in statement or diction. He always kept his audience interested to the end, and then afterwards, which is the great test and measure of both the preacher and teacher.

No one could come in contact with him without being impressed also with the high quality of his tact, politeness, consideration and understanding. He never seemed out of place and in dealing with his white brethren made no miscues and no errors. The colored people did not hold him in any higher estimation than did the white people who knew him. He rightly deserves to be held as one of our most able and valued colored citizens. In all relationships, he was the able and efficient Christian gentleman. He possessed true humility as well as great ability. Not only did he meet the highest requirements in his public relationships and contacts, but the work that he did, impressed me as having been done with great efficiency and economy. I have often said that a dollar spent at St. Paul's School always brought the church more than two dollars in return. In the course of my ministry, I have had a great deal to do with the colored people, and was for some years the preacher and pastor of a large and changing group of colored people at Hot Springs, Va., and also served them elsewhere. I found without exception that those who had been trained at Lawrenceville under Dr. Russell, both men and women, were excellent and reliable persons in whatever capacity they served.

Having often heard of the remarkable record of the pupils of St. Paul's School for the absence of crime and misdemeanor in Brunswick and adjacent counties, I called on old Sheriff Turnbull at Lawrenceville to ask him about the report, and he declared that the report was entirely and absolutely true and paid an additional tribute to the School, its alumni and pupils and especially to its great and able Principal and Founder.

Though he was full of years and honors, this church has lost an able and valuable man in the passing of Dr. James S. Russell; but let us see that the great work that he accomplished for the training of our colored youth is carried on and enlarged to the blessing of his race, our country and the Glory of God.

Respectfully submitted,
JOHN G. SCOTT.

The Convocation at Reisterstown.

The convocation of Towson met on May 23 in All Saints' Church, Reisterstown. This date marked the resignation of Mr. Armstead M. Webb as secretary of the convocation. He has held this position for well over twenty-five years and he will be greatly missed in this capacity. He has been prominent in the Church all his life and, with his brother, the late Rev. William Rollins Webb, is responsible for the good work done in St. Mary's Church, Franklintown.

The Rev. Dr. Marshall B. Stewart, professor of Dogmatic Theology, will be a member of the faculty of the annual summer clergy conference of the Diocese of Newark late in June. Dr. Stewart and the Rev. Dr. Howard Chandler Robbins, professor of Pastoral Theology, will both conduct courses in June at the College of Preachers.

The Rev. Randolph Ray, D. D., rector of the Church of the Transfiguration, New York City, expects to sail soon for a short visit to England, returning in July. During his absence the Rev. Lansing G. Putnam will be in charge of the parish. Mr. Putnam will be assisted by the Rev. Otis L. Mason.

The Rt. Rev. Hayward S. Ablewhite, Bishop of Marquette, is spending approximately two weeks in the Diocese of Michigan, assisting the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of the diocese, by conducting a number of Confirmation services. Bishop Ablewhite visited Michigan for a similar purpose last month.

The Rev. W. W. Memminger, D. D., rector of All Saints, Atlanta, preached on Mother's Day to the French Protestant Church in Charleston, S. C., at a service commemorating the ninetieth anniversary of the dedication of the present church building and two hundred and forty-eighth anniversary of the founding of the parish.

Clerical Changes.

The Rev. Charles C. Fishburne, Jr., of Winnsboro, S. C., has accepted a call to the rectorship of Christ Church, Martinsville, Va., and plans to take charge the middle of June. Mr. Fishburne is a native South Carolinian, and a graduate of the Theological Seminary in Virginia, class of 1931. Upon his graduation, he took charge of St. Mark's at Chester, St. Peter's at Great Falls, and St. John's at Winnsboro, in the Diocese of Upper South Carolina, and he has had this important field ever since. While he was at Virginia Seminary, Mr. Fishburne spent the summer of 1930 as minister at Christ Church, Big Stone Gap, and Grace Mission at Appalachia, in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, where he made warm friends in that diocese.

The Rev. Wm. John Cordick, rector for nineteen years of St. Thomas' Church, Plymouth, Ind. (Northern Indiana), has resigned, effective June 1, and will retire. During his long pastorate, Father Cordick has taken a prominent part in community and diocesan affairs. In the diocese he has served as President of the Standing Committee, President of the Board of Examining Chaplains, a member of the Bishop and Council, and several times was elected a deputy to General Convention. In the community he has been President of the Hospital Board, during which time a substantial addition to the Marshall County Hospital was built, as a member of the Library Board, and as President of the Ministerial Association. Fr. and Mrs. Cordick will reside at 7516 Cornell Avenue, Chicago.

The Rev. B. A. E. McLaughlin, who has served on the staff of the Church of the Transfiguration, New York City, for a number of years, has resigned to become a member of the Anglican Order of the Benedictine Monks. After a brief period of rest Father MacLaughlin will go to England to begin his novitate in the monastery.

The Rev. Lansing G. Putnam, until recently rector of All Saints' Church, Atlantic City, has been appointed to succeed Father MacLaughlin at the Church of the Transfiguration. Father Putnam has done supply work in the Church of the Transfiguration for a number of summers and is well known and liked.

The Rev. Albert Linnell Schrock, rector of St. James' Church, Goshen, Ind. (Northern Indiana), for eleven years, has resigned, and on June 1 will become rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Allegan, Mich. (Western Michigan). During his rectorate a fine three-story Parish House has been built and completely furnished, the entire property greatly improved, and the Endowment Fund of the parish substantially increased. Fr. Schrock also has been prominent in diocesan and community affairs. He has served as a member of the Bishop and Council since 1925, with chairmanship of several departments, as a member of the Standing Committee, Examining Chaplain, as a deputy to every Provincial Synod since 1926, and as a deputy to the General Conventions of 1928 and 1931, an alternate, 1934. Address: 414 North Cedar Street, Allegan, Mich.

The Rev. Dr. William Jackson Morton, a native of Orange County, Virginia, and for the past thirty-three years rector of the old and historic Christ Church, Alexandria, has just resigned that charge on account of ill health, and has gone to Charlottesville to reside with his son, who is a physician and a member of the faculty of the University of Virginia.

The Rev. Edmund T. Simpson, for eight years in charge of the mission at Salome, Arizona, retired on the Pension Fund on May 1. When Mr. Simpson took over his field he found a territory over a hundred miles square with no churches. During his incumbency a splendid church, a rectory, and a house for associate clergy has been built at Salome. Several churches are maintained at eight stations. An important feature has been the development of the Harquehala Industries, for the weaving of bags, rugs, wood working and allied crafts. This was started by Mrs. Simpson and she has built up a most interesting and important work. The population of the entire district expressed in many way their sense of loss at the leaving of the Simpsons, and their appreciation of their many services.

The Rev. Westwell Greenwood, formerly assistant rector of Christ Church, Baltimore, has become rector of St. Simon's Church, Glendale, Ohio. Mr. Greenwood resigned from Christ Church on May 5, but will not take up his new duties until after June 1.

The Rev. Albert H. Frost, assistant of the Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore, has received and accepted a call to become rector of St. Peter's Church, Salisbury, Md.

Mr. John Pomfret, a student at the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, who has been ordained deacon by Bishop Sherrill, has become assistant in Grace Church Parish, Everett, Mass., where the Rev. William Henry Pettus is rector.

Resignations.

The Rev. William Baker, as vicar in charge of the Mission of the Transfiguration, Evergreen, Colo.; due to ill health.

The Rev. Charles D. Burrows, rector of St. Matthew's Church, Jamestown, R. I., for the past thirty-five years, has retired. The Rev. and Mrs. Burrows sailed for England for a holiday.

The Rev. Horace N. Cooper, as missionary in charge of St. Andrew's Church, La Junta, Colo., and stations in the Arkansas Valley. Temporary address, 715 E. 10th St., Denver.

The Rev. Francis Slade Danzoll, as associate rector of Holy Trinity Church, New York City. Address, 175 Riverside Drive, New York City.

The Rev. Percy A. Paris, as rector of Emmanuel Church, Little Falls, N. Y. (A); to be dean of the Pro-Cathedral, and rector of St. Luke's Parish, Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Can. (Algoma). Effective May 15.

The Rev. Irving Spencer, as rector for seventeen years of St. Matthias' Church, Los Angeles, Calif.; to retire.

Ordinations.

Thomas Porter Simpson and William Sentelle Lea were ordained to the diaconate on May 23, in St. James' Church, Knoxville, by Bishop Maxon. The candidates were presented by the Rev. E. N. Hopper, rector of St. James' Church. The preacher was the Rev. James R. Sharp, Secretary of the diocese. The Rev. Messrs. Kilvington, Geiger, McLester, Melcher and Thrasher also took part in the service. Upon his graduation from the Virginia Seminary in June, Mr. Simpson will go to work for the rest of this year with the New York City Mission. Mr. Lea, after graduating from Sewanee, will be assistant at St. Paul's Church, Chattanooga.

DEATHS.

Rev. Robert Johnston, D. D.

News has reached Washington that the Rev. Robert Johnston, D. D., eleven years rector of old St. John's Church, the "Church of the Presidents," died on May 23, in Canterbury, England, as the result of an automobile accident several months ago. Dr. Johnston resigned the Washington church about two years ago because of poor health, and had gone to England with the hope of recovering his health. He was born in 1871 at Berwick-on-Tweed, and was a graduate of St. Augustine's Theological School, Canterbury. He had been in America since 1909, and was rector of the Church of the Saviour in Philadelphia, before coming to Washington. He was a member of the Cathedral Chapter, and was, perhaps, the leading Episcopal preacher in the national capital during his prime. He was a scholar and a theologian with the genius of a poet, liberal and progressive in his intellectual trends and an outstanding personage in any company.

Editorially, the Washington Post said of him in part: "When Dr. Johnston was compelled to give up his pastorate because of ill health, the community lost a Churchman of broad liberality of thought and of deep spirituality. His was a rare mind, of poetical as much as of philosophical bent, which best displayed its powers in the scholarly and original sermons which he delivered to an appreciative congregation. . . . All who were privileged to any close association with him knew him for the tender and polished gentleman he was. His type cannot pass without a mournful sense of loss."

On May 26 a memorial service in Dr. Johnston's honor was held in St. John's Church, conducted by the rector, the Rev. Oliver J. Hart, D. D., and hundreds assembled to honor his memory.

He leaves his wife, who, with a daughter, Margaret, lives at Bryn Mawr, Pa.; two other daughters, Mrs. Theodore Morrison, Cambridge, Mass., and Mrs. Brinton Colfelt, Philadelphia, and a son, Robert G. Johnston, now residing in Canada.

Lewis H. Paddock, LL. D., D. C. L.

Dr. Lewis H. Paddock, for seventeen years Chancellor of the Diocese of Michigan, and an outstanding and devoted Churchman, died in Detroit on May 11. The burial service, read in Christ Church, Detroit, of which Dr. Paddock had been Treasurer for thirty years, was conducted jointly by the Rev. Francis B. Creamer, rector of the parish; the Rev. J. Francis Sant, assistant minister; the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of the diocese, and the Rev. Wm. D. Maxon, D. D., rector emeritus of Christ Church.

Dr. Paddock was born in Detroit in 1866. He was the son of the late Bishop Benjamin H. Paddock, D. D., a former rector of Christ Church, and Bishop of Massachusetts from 1873 to 1891. The Rt. Rev. Robert Lewis Paddock, now retired, is a cousin. He was a classmate of Bishop Page at the Boston Latin School. Dr. Paddock's keen and kindly interest in every phase of the Church's work will be greatly missed in Christ Church, in the diocese to which he gave so much of his wise counsel, and by the countless men and women who valued his opinion and his influence.

Horace Marshall Brown.

The Rev. Marshall Brown, 36, retired priest of the Diocese of West Virginia, died suddenly on May 7, in Dallas, Texas. The son of H. M. Brown, M. D., and Mary Eliza Rudd, he attended the Southern Methodist University, and was graduated from the Virginia Theological Seminary in 1923. During the ten years of his ministry, he was rector of Emmanuel, Keyser; St. Luke's, Charleston; and Trinity, Moundsville, W. Va. Permanent disability forced his retirement to Charles Town, W. Va., in 1933. Burial services were conducted May 11, in Union, W. Va., by Bishop Gravatt and Bishop Strider, assisted by diocesan clergy.

Mr. Fred A. Twamley, one of the most prominent Churchmen of the Diocese of Western Michigan, died at his residence in Grand Rapids on May 22 at the age of eighty years. He was a former vestryman of St. Mark's, Grand Rapids, and had frequently served as lay-delegate to the diocesan convention and as deputy to several General Conventions.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

To be popular at home is a great achievement.—Thomas Dreier.

A man's life is the picture-book of his creed.—Emerson.

"It is not by argument that God saved the world," so wrote one of the old fathers.

I have found that those who love
A dog, a cat, a bird and flowers,
Are usually thoughtful of
The larger needs that may be ours;
Who for God's creatures small will plan,
Will seldom wrong his fellowman.
—Edgar A. Guest.

Many a time, through ignorance, or through some disobedience or failure to obey, there has come a break, a slipping of a cog somewhere, and so an interruption of the flow of power. And so a new start is necessary. Then a full surrender is followed by a new experience, or a re-experience of the Spirit's presence. This new experience sometimes is so sharply marked as to begin a new epoch in the life. Some of the notable leaders of the Church have gone through just such an experience.—S. D. Gordon, in "Quiet Talks on Power".

There are some things God wants us to forget, and other things we are to remember. "Forgetting those things which are behind," but "Remember all the way that the Lord thy God hath led thee." We can look into the past, not to see our achievements, but to see God's blessings.

May each one of us learn every day to say: "Truly my soul is silent unto God!" And may every feeling of the difficulty of attaining this only lead us simply to trust and look to Him whose presence makes even the storm a calm! Cultivate the quietness as a means to the abiding in Christ! Expect the ever deepening quietness and calm of heaven is the soul of the fruit of abiding in Him!

"Though men should rend your heart, let them not embitter or harden it. We win by tenderness; we conquer by forgiveness. Oh, strive to enter into something of that large celestial Charity which is meek, enduring, unretaliating, and which even the overbearing world cannot withstand forever."—F. W. Robertson.

Jesus becomes for us historically both Christ and Lord (i. e.. absolute authority) only through His death and resurrection. Authority does not lie in Christ as the Superlative of conscience, but in Christ as the Redeemer of the conscience and its new life.—Dr. P. T. Forsyth.

Just before Pentecost the one hundred and twenty disciples were assembled for ten days in prayer, expectancy and hope of being endued with power from on high in fulfillment of the promise of the Father, and on the day of Pentecost the Spirit came in great demonstration and power. Three thousand souls were converted and added to the Church. It worked in the first century of the Church and it will work in the twentieth century.—The Christian Sun.

Of honest fame than shedding seas of gore."

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Province of the Pacific,

Reasons Why Election of Bishop Should Not be Deferred.

Mr. Editor:

The enclosed statement prepared by a Committee of the Synod of the Province of the Pacific, gives the reasons why, in the judgment of the Synod, the election of a Bishop for the Missionary District of Idaho should not be deferred until the next General Convention, and is sent you with the request that it be given space in an early issue of the Southern Churchman.

As you undoubtedly already know, the Synod will nominate to the House of Bishops of the Church when the House meets in Houston in October, the Very Rev. Harry Beal, D. D., Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles. The delegates and the visitors at the Synod from Idaho were enthusiastic over this nomination and were greatly concerned over the possibility that they might have to wait for more than two years before a Bishop was given them. For this reason the Synod knowing the situation far better than those who are two or three thousand miles away felt that the Church people generally, and especially the Bishops, should know the concern the Synod had over any postponement or delay in electing a Bishop for this field.

Alfred Lockwood,
May 25, 1935. Secretary.

Memorial to the House of Bishops.

The Synod of the Province of the Pacific, meeting at Pendleton, Oregon, May 22, 23, 24, begs leave to memorialize the House of Bishops, requesting it to elect at its meeting in Houston, Texas, a Bishop for the vacant Missionary District of Idaho. It bases its request upon the following considerations:

1. It is not only the desire of the clergy and people of Idaho, but it is also the judgment of the Synod that a prolonged vacancy will be detrimental to the life of the Church there to an unusual degree, because of pending financial and other problems requiring early and authoritative handling.

2. Any proposal to readjust the territory of this District is regarded as inadvisable by the Synod and the people of the District in view of these considerations:

(a) Idaho is a political and social unit that takes pride in its integrity as a State.

(b) Improved highways are making all parts of the State accessible from the See City.

(c) Complications are likely to arise regarding the title to District institutions if divisions and annexations are made which will involve the laws of other states.

(d) In the judgment of the Synod no reallocations of territory can be made at the present time which do not create more serious problems than now exist.

(e) In the judgment of the Synod the argument for economy is at best a doubtful one and likely to be quite overbalanced by the sacrifice of esprit du corps in the District and of intimate episcopal oversight.

The Handmaids of Mercy.

May 27, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

After answering more than a score of inquiries about the Handmaids of Mercy, I am begging the hospitality of the Church Press, that I may bring our aims before Church people and interest those who approve the plan.

It is, briefly, to start an Order on much simpler lines than those now existing, with all due respect to these. There will be no vows, and the Rule, Habit and devotional life will very simple. We hope to devote ourselves to the various works of mercy, as opportunity shall open. We welcome aspirants from all and any of the various schools of thought in the Episcopal Church—what we want is devout communicants, wanting to work for the love of God, the Church and humanity. The quality of earnest devotion is valued above all things. There will be no forcing into a mold, in the religious life of the individual.

We await, prayerfully, Divine guidance and provision for starting our work. If it appeals to you—though you may not consider joining—will you help in some way? Pray for us, if you have not other help. If you have, pray anyway. We should like either a definite assigned work under some Bishop, or the loan of a house for about two years, as a Mother House in which to start the Order going. Two years should give some evidence of whether we are to succeed as an Order or no. We feel, and so do some of the New York clergy, that there is room for some such Order as this, and that it "should do a world of good." We want as aspirants those who do not feel called to the more rigorous life of the Sister as at present organized, but who do feel the urge to give themselves more fully to forwarding the Church's work at this time, and to helping the unfortunate, "The Church's Treasures."

There are about four ready to begin, none of us rich. About as many more are considerably interested, and think of coming in some time. And new letters come in each week. May God guide and provide.

Missionary "Carrying on the Noble Tradition of Virginia" is Son of North Carolina.

May 19, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

In your issue of the eighteenth instant, is an article taken from The Living Church, with the heading "Dauntless Discipleship", telling of the devotion and determination of William Franklin Draper, a student at the Virginia Theological Seminary, who, when he found that the National Council could not send him to the foreign missionary field on account of lack of funds, raised a trust fund of $15,000 among his relatives and friends to pay his expenses for five years.

While thoroughly agreeing with the writer of the article in saying that Mr. Draper's action is a note worthy example to the whole Church, and he is to be congratulated upon his refusal to let seemingly insurmountable obstacles block his answer to the missionary call, he conveys the idea that Mr. Draper is a Virginian in saying that he "is carrying on the noble missionary tradition of Virginia, which has given so many valiant leaders to the cause."

As a matter of fact, Mr. Draper is a North Carolinian, lives in Charlotte, and is a member of St. Martin's Parish, that city.

Individualism and Cooperation.

"The Forward Movement leaves me cold," writes one clergyman. "It is childish in its approach and I do not feel moved by either its pamphlets or its schemes. I believe there are times when the Church should wait, and such a time would seem to be the present. Until we get our debts cleared up there is no moving forward."

Aside from the similarity to Mr. McCawber's attitude of mind, this clergyman reveals an abysmal ignorance of what The Forward Movement is and what it is trying to do. We have grown so used to "pep" campaigns since the time of the war, that we cannot conceive of anything that is not a whirlwind rush leading to some "going over the top". Our correspondent probably conceives of The Forward Movement as such. In that he is greatly mistaken.

There is much more truth in comparing The Forward Movement with a "five year plan", though that would in all probability be erring also. There is in our Church great potentiality if that power that is dormant is consecrated. The Forward Movement is merely trying to awaken that which is already there. We have laity that cannot be equalled anywhere in the world for ability. If aroused to truer and deeper discipleship there is no limit which can be placed upon their power to do great things for The Kingdom. There are clergy that certainly, as a whole, measure up to the best personnel that can be found in Christendom. If their listlessness can be dissipated and their enthusiasm aroused, our Church will have the greatest opportunity ever presented in hundreds of years for true Christian leaders.

Of course we have individualists. The beauty of The Forward Movement is that the individualist can present that which belongs to him and which the others should share in. We have those who know and realize the greatness of the meditative and prayerful life. We have those who preach and know what they mean when they say "the social gospel". We have those to whom intellectual advance is the greatest need—there is room for all.

But to talk about pamphlets being "childish" is childishly ignorant. The great majority of our people are densely ignorant of the simplest things about the gospel. To write in a highly intellectual strain and neglect the fundamental truths in religion would be the greatest mistake possible, and The Forward Movement made no such mistake.

We need the cooperation of the individualist to make the movement as a whole truly a "forward movement".

The Problem of the Tenant Farmers.

The Rev. James M. Stoney's article in the Southern Churchman of April 20 in regard to the tenant farmers in the Southern States brings before us one of the great social problems of our day. In its larger phase it is a part of the national problem of "marginal" people or those living on an income far below that necessary to obtain the barest necessities of wholesome living. Not all tenant farmers are marginal people, but the great majority are, especially in the South. It should not, however, be overlooked that tenant farming is not a problem of the South only. Some sections of Illinois have as high as 60 per cent tenant farmers. In the South the percentage varies from 28.1 per cent in Virginia to 72.2 per cent in Mississippi. When allowance is made for those who are non-rural in some states, it is seen that nearly all the rural population is of the tenant group.

The solution of this whole problem is of national importance, not only for the tenant farmers, but for the welfare of the country as a whole. One of the needs of our country is for new markets. Because of the closing of foreign markets we tried to take care of our overproduction by reducing production. At the same time in our own country we have the field for the new markets. If the marginal people of America could buy the necessities of normal healthy life we would discover that we are not suffering from overproduction but from under consumption. Here is the opportunity for the business men of America to find a new market. But it is doubtful if the business men of America will do it unless they adopt the principle of Jesus, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and his righteousness: and all these things shall be added unto you." In terms of the present situation His words mean "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God for the marginal people and good business will follow".

The second problem that tenantry raises is that of home ownership. The home-owning are the home-loving people, and good citizens. They are an asset to any community, especially a rural community. There are now before Congress two bills, one introduced into the Senate by Senator Bankhead of Alabama, and the other into the House by Representative Jones of Texas, to make it possible for the tenants to buy farms by borrowing money for a long period of time at a low

Lawrence of Arabia—War's Spiritual Toll.

Christian Century, May 29, 1935.

Volumes have been and will be written about Colonel T. E. Lawrence—"Lawrence of Arabia"—who died after a motorcycle accident in England on May 19. But the glamor of his war career fades before the disillusionment which came to him when he surveyed the results of his unparalleled services "for king and country." Lawrence, the young archeologist who persuaded the Arabs to revolt against the Turks, thus saving the empire's line of communication with India and the empire itself, is a figure whom the chronicles of heroes will magnify to vast proportions as time goes on. But how much will be said about the Lawrence who renounced his rank, who refused the decorations offered by his king, and whose intimate friend quotes him as having recently said: "I look upon what I did in Arabia as morally indefensible, and I only ask to be forgotten by my friends"? Will the youth of England, the youth of all the lands who read the Lawrence story, remember that second Lawrence?

The Way of Peace.

The Guardian (English), May 17, 1935.

A timely contribution to this problem has been made by the Archbishop of York in a pamphlet entitled "Christ and the Way to Peace." Dr. Temple, with his customary lucidity, lays down the great principles that lie behind the discussion. For the Christian, absolute allegiance to God is imperative. Yet normally the Christian has a duty to obey the State and its laws. If the claims of the State and the claims of God conflict, the State must be defied. At the same time it is the duty of the Christian to use his share of political power to promote the world-fellowship which is implicit in the nature of the Christian Church. Dr. Temple applies these principles to the Christian's duty as a citizen in times of peace, and he does so in realistic fashion. He recognizes that the problem for the Christian is not merely to unite the fully Christianized members of the different nations, but to work for the subordination of national egotisms to the service of justice and peace.

Effect of Executions on the Community.

The Canadian Churchman, May 23, 1935.

The effect of capital punishment upon the minds of people contemplating crime is perhaps less important than its effect upon the others. Consider the appalling and degrading interest that attaches to the condemned person. This morbid excitement is bound up with the death penalty in no small measure. Multitudes of people, moreover, see only the horror of the penalty and evince a sentimental sympathy with the perpetrator of an atrocious crime. Furthermore, there is not only among children and adolescents, but among adults an admiration and a respect for those who risk their lives "who gamble with death", which invest with a halo those who would otherwise be shorn of this fictitious glory. Would the newspapers fill their columns with the account of the life, hour by hour, of a murderer, if he were not sentenced to death? Does the excuse which the death penalty affords for this display of pity act as a deterrent from crime?

"My King as Well as Yours."

Church of England Newspaper, May 17, 1935.

That was a capital story which Sir John Simon recalled at Kilmarnock on Monday in connection with the King's illness seven years ago.

"A resident in London who had to catch a train at Victoria Station started an hour early and told the taxi-driver to go round by Buckingham Palace, as he wanted to read the latest bulletin. The cab was kept waiting for an hour at the Palace gates until the bulletin was posted up and then the man drove the fare to the station to catch his train, but when it came to paying there was only a shilling on the clock.

"'Your meter is wrong,' said the passenger have kept you waiting for an hour.'

"'Well,' said the taxi-driver, 'what's wrong with the meter? Isn't he my King as well as yours?'"

Some Japanese Ideas of Christianity.

Missionary Review of the World.

In a Japanese magazine, edited by a Japanese Congregational minister of Tokyo, two questions were asked:

1. In what points is Christianity superior to other religions?

2. What is the greatest mission of Christianity to modern Japan?

Here are some of the answers, mostly to the first question:

Naoshi Kato, editor of the Kuristikyo Sekai (Christian World) says: "Christianity emphasizes the value and dignity of personality. Religiously, morally, politically and literally, we lack this emphasis."

Professor Keiji Ashida, of Doshisha College: "We lack today a strong religious faith with ethical colors, and a strong idea of personality. Christianity must supply these."

The late Bishop Honda, of the Methodist Church: "The belief in God's fatherhood and man's sonship."

Masanori Oshima (not a Christian), editor of an educational review: "In doctrines, Christianity is not superior to Buddhism. But Christianity is far more ethical and practical than the latter."

The Rev. Seizo Abe, a Congregational preacher: "The unparalleled personality of Jesus Christ."

Professor Tomeri Tanimoto (not a Christian), of the Kyoto University: "The revolutionistic spirit of Christianity, and its emphasis on human personality."

Dr. Eun Mayeda, an eminent Buddhist, and lecturer at the Tokyo Imperial University: "The practical social work of salvation and help, Buddhism is learning this."

The editor sums it all up, the following points of Christianity being looked upon as superior: the transcendent and yet immanent idea of God; the value and dignity of human beings; the highly ethical and social nature of Christianity (morally, especially the purification of motives).

(These Japanese replies are far from complete or satisfying to the Christian who takes the New Testament view of Christianity. None of these Japanese point out the fact that Jesus Christ is the only adequate and true revelation of God and that He offers the only salvation from sin and the way of life eternal. Through Christ only comes the power to live the life of Victory.—Editor.)

"If—"

If we do not have the Spirit of God, it were better to shut the churches, to nail up the doors, to put a black cross on them, and say, "God have mercy on us." If you ministers have not the Spirit of God, you had better not preach and you people had better stay at home. I think I speak not too strongly when I say that a church in the land without the Spirit of God is rather a curse than a blessing.—Charles H. Spurgeon.

Where Are the Prophets

There have been attempts made to communicate with our nearest neighbor, the planet Mars, but so far without success. It may be supposed that if Mars is inhabited, its people may have advanced further than ourselves in scientific knowledge, and that we may, therefore, learn some new wonders from them. This may be a mere dream which is incapable of being realized, but there is a far greater opportunity open to us than this. Heaven is ready and willing to share with us far more wonderful knowledge than anything which Mars can ever provide. The men of science have shown themselves able to penetrate into the secrets of Nature and to benefit the world by many wonderful discoveries, but there does not seem to be the same interest shown in seeking for and discovering the greater blessings which the spiritual world is able to give us.

The Coming of the Holy Spirit.

Christ said, when He was about to pass through death, into the life beyond, that He would send His Spirit to take His place, and that the Spirit, or Comforter, would lead His followers into all truth, and would show them things to come. The fact that Whitsunday is the Birthday of the Christian Church suggests to our minds that a clearer understanding of His office and work in the Church is most important. It was to be the work of the Holy Spirit to reveal to God's people that which they could not find out for themselves, by the ordinary process of reasoning. We know that the prophets of old were specially inspired by God, through the Holy Spirit, to guide the Jewish nation, in its various vicissitudes, towards the attainment of the divine purpose, which meant the establishment of His Kingdom on earth, through the coming of His Son Jesus Christ. The prophets seem to have been endowed with a special insight into God's eternal purpose and it was through this insight of theirs into divine truth, which enabled them to foresee, in a measure, the working out of His purpose in time to come, because that purpose, even to its utmost fulfilment, was in the mind of God and was in process of being worked out. The vision portrayed in the Forty-sixth Psalm, of the destruction of war throughout the world, has not even yet been realized, but it is part of the divine purpose that it should be, and we know that in time it must certainly be fulfilled.

Interpretation of the Eternal Fitness of Things.

It is very unfortunate that in such an age as this, the Church has failed to produce her prophets, men in whom the Holy Spirit can work as He did with the prophets of old, so as to make them conscious of the divine gift of interpreting God's eternal purpose to their fellowmen. We believe that the Holy Spirit acts as our guide in our individual lives and influences our minds and hearts with good thoughts and good desires, which, if we will only follow them, will enable us to do the Will of God. But this divine guidance is intended not merely to throw light upon our individual paths through life; it is, we believe, exercised in directing the larger affairs of mankind which is familiar to us as the working of the divine Providence, according to the saying:—"There is a Providence that shapes our ends, roughhew them how we will."

God Wishes Man to Understand His Will and Purpose.

God does not wish to drive us blindly forward quite irrespective of any recognition on our part, of His overruling purpose, or of our cooperation in the fulfilment of it. God will have His own way in the end. His Eternal Purpose must ultimately be fulfilled, no matter how long He may have to wait till man's waywardness and foolish mistakes have been retrieved, and he has been brought to see that God's way is the best way; in which he can fulfil his true destiny. There is no real need for the interminable delay, and for the disasters that man, by his own lack of understanding, never fails to bring upon himself, nationally as well as individually.

Dark Times Need the Pillar of Fire for Guidance.

But God has not left man in the dark to grope hither and thither in a vain attempt to find the right way. He sent His Son into the world to show us the way and the countries in which Christianity has been established for centuries, owe it to the rest of the world to make the Truth known to all men. Even the Christian nations need leaders to stand between them and God to interpret God's will and purpose, as revealed through His Son, Jesus Christ. They should serve as the prophets of old did, and be able to say with authority, "Thus saith the Lord". They must be as men apart, living so close to God and in such constant communion with Him, that He can make them His channels through which His Mind and Purpose are interpreted with such power and conviction that men cannot but feel that God is with them of a truth.

New Light on Revealed Truth.

St. Paul could say with assurance, "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him, but God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit." There is no doubt that Christianity has still much in it which God is ready to reveal to men, if they will only seek earnestly enough for it, and perhaps the greatest need of all is Guidance, which the Holy Spirit is specially qualified to give, and which in this distracted world, is man's greatest need. The Church has plenty of scholars able to do their special work. But where are her Prophets, inspired by the Holy Spirit to throw light upon the path of human destiny, so that men may see and believe that the Hand of God is directing them?

GOD'S MIGHTY MEN.

Lord, may we ever wait
With longing and desire,
That so from Heaven's gate
May flow the heavenly fire—
The fire that melts the heart
And makes the tongue a flame,
That sets Thy sons apart,
As when the prophets came.

This is the world's great need
For Thine own mighty men,
For this Thy Church doth plead,
That they may come again.
Lord, may we see that day
When leaders strong and true
May show to men the way
To make this earth anew.

The Lord's Day

By ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING,
Rector of St. Paul's Church, Baltimore.

A LEARNED Benedictine has lately brought out a book under the title, "The Day is Thine", in which he makes a plea for a more careful guarding of the day of God, assigned to rest, renewal and worship. The appearance of this book brings up anew to serious Christians the incalculable value of the day which is the real mother and source of all religious observance.

The Lord's Day is not the Jewish Sabbath, yet it strikes its roots deep in that institution, enlarges it, and carries it on. The God Who gave the Sabbath, a day of rest and gladness, by Jesus' resurrection gave us the First Day of the Week. This title, the First Day of the Week, was used by the apostles in the earliest Christian Church until the term, the Lord's Day, came in use. For example, St. John at the beginning of the book of Revelation says, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day". Christ Jesus kept the Sabbath Himself in the synagogue, wrought many of His miracles on that day, and declared that the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. That is, the day strikes its roots deep in the needs of man. It is not only the Lord's Day, but it is man's day as well.

Our Lord claimed that it is right to do good on the Sabbath Day. He gave it a positive significance, as a portion of time in which there should be release from worldly cares, from earning our bread, to lift our hearts and souls to God, to merge duty in joy and praise.

Then when our Lord began to make His appearances as a risen Saviour on the first day of the week, and that weekly observance began and continued until now, He put a new dynamo power into the day, so that in a new sense, a deeper, higher, holier sense, we Christians can say, "This is the day the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it."

Now the whole cultus of the Lord's Day as we knew it fifty years ago has undergone a change. Instead of being a day of religious obligation, of hallowed joy, of general release from the cares and toils of the secular life, and of simpler and less exacting social interchanges, it has become a day which is a sort of clearing-house for social, political and financial interests. In our bulky Sunday papers we pass in review the larger secular movements of the week; the political map of the world is surveyed by the ablest specialists; the entertainment program of many kinds for the days ahead is written up, while tens of thousands begin in mid-afternoon to throng the motion-pictures.

Gradually the law has been changed, for two reasons: first, law is ineffective unless backed up by the will of the people; and next, our God finds no service acceptable save that which is voluntarily given Him.

Perhaps the most serious change is this: hundreds of communicants seldom enter a church, except to attend a funeral, or a wedding, and in course of time there are so many who do the same thing, that it no longer troubles their consciences.

NOW, why have we such a day, what are its sanctions, who gave it to us, and what is it good for?

It is called the Lord's Day, somehow the day came from God, the God Who gave us life, Who made us what we are, and Who will one day take away our breath. Can we know the depths and heights of life without God? And can we continue to hold communion with God without the cultus of the day that He has given us?

I make no plea for the sour, burdensome, Puritan Sabbath. And just as little do I believe in a negative, idle, a "comfortably-upholstered" Sunday. But I do plead for a Lord's Day in which there is a private and public recognition of the soul's need of God, and of our duty to worship and thank and praise Him, and to listen to what He has to say to us through the prophets and seers of the ages.

Never will the day justify itself unless we make it a reality of prayer, worship, praise, of growth in duty and aspiration. There is tremendous meaning in those great words of the Lord Jesus, "The Sabbath was made for man". It is the day of the Lord; it is also the lord of our days. On this day we are God's guests, God's children. He calls us around Him, as the Father of the family, to speak with us, to give us counsel, to educate, to warn, and to comfort us. There are secret rooms into which He leads us on this day, where the Holy Spirit actively works. The Divine Voice that whispers to us knows us, our hearts, our affections, our temptations, our perils and our needs. He knows all about the bent we have toward the setting up of idols in our hearts, and the danger of our being answered according to our idols. He knows the dreadful weaning process by which in this interesting secular world we become estranged from our Father. And so in His care and forethought God has given us this blessed day, with its definite duties and privileges, with its great memories, its ordinances of worship, its exalted hymns of praise. And chiefest of all, the Lord Jesus has planted at the heart of the day of the Lord the offering up of our worship and adoration in union with the great sacrifice on Calvary. This is creative rest. This is the great dynamo that sets our higher natures in tune with the God Who so loved the world that He is ever seeking to awaken in men that spirit which will make us seek and save the lost.

My friends, we all require another life than that of our busy hands, our noisy lips, our secular barter, our pleasant social interchanges. If between groups of these working days we set an honest day of God, that really lifts us into the presence of Him Who died for men, our other six days will be enriched and blessed, and in the long last our lives will take on a nobler quality.

Surely there is something wrong about the man who has no relish for the relaxation from the week-day cares which God's providence has provided for us. Even a farm horse, when the harness is taken off, and bit and bridle are removed, will roll luxuriously upon the fresh grass.

THE FACT IS, the people who give up God's day, with its definite cultus, gradually lose their taste for God. As a rule, they either become satisfied with the mechanics of everyday life, are grooved and narrowed by professional routine, or else, their souls wither and become atrophied through spiritual ignorance and idleness. You know there is no faculty of the soul which may not be lost through disuse.

The day is not only a day of rest, but of mighty unrest. On it Jesus rose, and on it we should rise, rise on stepping-stones of our dead selves to higher things. The greatest thing about the day is its mighty dimensions. It sweeps the past, the present and the future. It lifts our littleness to the greatness of God. It is the day on which we look before and after. It is the day in which we catch a vision of the great history and destiny of man. On week-days we toil for the needed food and shelter of time. On Sundays we lay up store for eternity.

Those who are past middle-life have lived into a new age. What is an age? It is a period of time having its own philosophy, its own psychology, its own dominating spirit. The key to our age is democracy, self-determination, a strong accent upon freedom. We are in recoil from various types of authority. Then the rise of cities, with their polyglot populations and relaxed religious habits, has influenced greatly the country, and weakened old loyalties. Our modern industrial life is characterized more than ever before by nerve-racking strain and fatigue on the one hand, and on the other, by monotony. Never was the healing hand of a true Lord's Day, which refreshes the soul by lifting it to nobler, diviner thoughts more needed than now. The Chinese coolie bends his back over a wheelbarrow load. Our motor inventions have released us from much of this physical fatigue, but stress at the nerve-centers has increased. Then the longer hours of leisure call for great self-control. Messages of faith, courage and aspiration, which lift the eyes to the hills whence cometh our help, are surely needed in our age. We moderns have a great facility in inventing days. Let us not forget God's day, the oldest and most needed of them all.

John Henry Newman in one of his sermons suggested that heaven would be hell to some people who dream of heaven, and think they wish for it, while they dodge the whole cultus that makes us say, "My soul is athirst for God, yea, even for the living God." Happy are they who know what St. John meant when he said, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day."

For Whitsunday

AN ACT OF AFFIRMATION.

Set forth by the Presiding Bishop and Commission on the Forward Movement.

Whereby the People re-dedicate their lives to the service of God and of His Kingdom, through faith in the Living Christ and by the power of the Holy Spirit.

(This Act may be made by the People, all standing, after the Alms and Oblations have been offered.)

The Priest (or some other Minister) shall say,

With thanksgiving today we remember the first Pentecost when the Holy Spirit came with power upon the waiting church. In a world of sin, bewilderment and fear, the Church of Christ today needs this same divine power to bring healing and hope to the world, and to guide mankind into the way of truth and peace. To renew the Church's life and power, we must be ready to receive it, to put it into acts. Each one of us, and all of us together, must dedicate life to Christ and His service.

Who will now renew allegiance to our Lord Christ?

Who will serve Him more faithfully in the days to come?

Let such join with me as together we re-affirm the solemn vows made at our Baptism.

And here all who are so minded shall say aloud:

Here in the presence of God and of this congregation, I renew the solemn promise that was made at my Baptism; Ratifying and confirming the same; And acknowledging myself bound to believe and to do all those things which I then undertook, Or my sponsors then undertook for me.

Then shall the Minister continue, and say,

Our Saviour Christ teaches us to pray and labor for the coming of His Kingdom among men. God's will shall be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Every area of human life, every land, calls for the service of Christian disciples. The foundations of a new world are about to be built. The mind of Christ must design them. The people of Christ must build them. Christ's rule of brotherhood must prevail. In such a time, we have resolved together to draw upon God's strength for forward movement, to be of good courage, to put our whole trust in Him and His good purpose for mankind.

Therefore let us renew our vow of Discipleship made in Confirmation, and let all who earnestly would take upon themselves again this vow, repeat with me: I promise to follow Jesus Christ as my Lord and Saviour.

Minister: Our help is in the Name of the Lord;
People: Who hath made heaven and earth.
Minister: Blessed be the Name of the Lord.
People: Henceforth, world without end.

Minister: Lord, hear our prayer.
People: And let our cry come unto Thee.
Minister: Let us pray.

Almighty and everliving God, who hast vouchsafed to regenerate us Thy servants by Water and the Holy Ghost, and hast given unto us forgiveness of all our sins; Strengthen us, we beseech Thee, O Lord, with the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, and daily increase in us Thy manifold gifts of grace; the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and ghostly strength, the spirit of knowledge and true godliness; and fill us, O Lord, with the spirit of Thy holy fear, now and for ever. Amen.

Then shall all ask God's blessing by saying together the following prayer:

Defend, O Lord, Thy children with Thy heavenly grace; that we may continue Thine forever; and daily increase in Thy Holy Spirit more and more; until we come unto Thy everlasting Kingdom. Amen.

rate of interest. These are hopeful signs. But it must be remembered that as Mr. Stoney pointed out the tenants' income now is so low that they can hardly eke out a living and, therefore, they cannot buy farms even on the most favorable terms unless the income can be increased. If the people who have shown such wonderful capacity for material development in the last half century will now give one half as much thought to social development we believe even this problem can be solved.

A MORNING PRAYER.

F. W. Porter.

Dear Lord:
Strength for today is all I ask.
That I may do my daily task.
Give me the proper thought to say
That I may have the right of way.

No, not for greed nor selfish gain,
May I from this always refrain.
May loving service to mankind be wrought.
By thy most gracious guilding thought.
Amen.

Whitsunday in a Russian Church

By FRANCES REUBELT,

Tulsa, Oklahoma.

BECAUSE of the friendly and fraternal relations between the Anglican and Greek Churches and our own branch of the Anglican, the Protestant Episcopal Church, I am writing this brief article about the Russian Church, which as is well known, is the same as the Greek.

It was a beautiful Sunday morning, the eighth of June, 1930, and Whitsunday. I had finished a semester's work at the University of Jena and had gone to Dresden for the opera. That morning I visited the Russian Church, which before the War had been largely attended by prosperous Russians, who lived in Dresden to enjoy its art and music and to educate their children. Now the congregations are small, made up of exils of all ranks, and all so tragically poor.

This Dresden Church is, as a matter of course, in the form of a Creek Cross and crowned with gilded domes. Above each dome is the cross with the crescent beneath, a reminder of the long conflict between Christianity and Mohammedanism. In the vestibule a lady was seated with a table before her covered with roses and about her on the floor were baskets of roses. I spoke to her in German and asked about the service which she told me was to be at eleven o'clock. She was tying the roses into small bouquets consisting of one red rose with three small pink buds. These roses the church was selling to help the Russian poor of Dresden and I learned from her that it is the Russian custom to carry roses into the church on the day of Pentecost. I bought a bunch for a half a mark and entered the church.

Everywhere were reminders that Russia is part and parcel of the Orient, furnishings and architecture recalling St. Sophia and Istamboul. The floors were covered with magnificent rugs, the walls were overlaid with gold and all the sacred pictures had backgrounds of gold. Before the pictures or ikons were tall tapers burning and all the walls were decorated with green branches of the birch tree as the verse for the day was, "Adorn thy house with May branches, even to the horns of the altar."

The altar and choir were concealed by a marble screen with pictures set in. Much of the service was later conducted behind this screen. Before doors in the centre of this screen a heavy gold curtain was draped and at one time in the service this curtain was drawn aside.

I had come early and, after asking permission from the attendant at the door, I made the circuit of the small church, examining the pictures, all of them quite Oriental in conception and very beautiful. As the Russians entered the church, they also bought roses and roses were sent to the priests before the service began. Every Russian, as soon as he entered, went forward and protrated himself before the ikons, leaving before each one a lighted candle. There were no chairs or pews, so every one stood or knelt.

AT ELEVEN the service began. First was heard the voice of a priest intoning the opening words of the liturgy. Then the male choir entered and took their places behind the screen. There were three officiating priests, wearing magnificent gold robes and all three wearing gold mitres on their heads. One priest, the Patriarch, wore a mitre taller than those of the other two and his robes were more ornate. He entered first, carrying in one hand roses and in the other a smoking censer. He went among the congregation who made a lane for him, and blessed the altar, the ikons and the people. Then he retired and appeared again from behind the screen, accompanied by the other two priests. The Patriarch was now carrying a great Bible bound in gold, which he lifted up before the congregation and before which the people knelt. During the entire service the priests kept the roses in their hands, except during the brief moment when the Patriarch laid down upon the altar his roses in order to hold securely the great volume, the Bible.

The entire service was intoned antiphonally by priests and choir. The music was marvelous. Since the World War most Americans have been privileged to hear Russian music. They sing without any musical instrument. This choir sang exceptionally well and often the voices gave the effect of the music from a great organ. It is too bad to have to confess that I did not understand the service as I do not know Russian, but the service was conducted with such solemnity, such reverence, I felt I was witnessing the manifesting of a great and glorious Belief.

At the close of the brief service the priests again passed through the congregation with swinging censers and the Patriarch blessed again the kneeling people.

ON COMING OUT of the church I found the same lady at another table. This time she was selling small pictures and other articles belonging to the Russian Faith. I bought a picture, a small Madonna, already framed, and quite different from the Western Madonnas with their more or less Italian ideals. This Russian Madonna has a face quite Oriental and Semitic, olive tinted complexion and very dark eyes. She is wearing a bright blue gown over which is a vivid red veil that covers her head and gown and is bordered everywhere with gold. The little boy has the same Oriental coloring and is wearing a little blue suit, such as any little boy might wear and his blouse is white. The halos are in massive gold with Russian lettering in gold.

I asked the Russian lady to tell me something about this Madonna. She said it was a copy of the Madonna of Kazan, the most loved, the most venerated Madonna of all the Russias, and mentioned that for centuries hundreds had visited the shrine of the Madonna of Kazan on holy pilgrimages. At my request she wrote in German on the back of the picture what she had told me. Then she asked me something about myself, my family and my plans. I said I was an American tourist and student, that soon I expected to leave Germany for Rome and that I hoped to make a tour of the Mediterranean. She raised her hand and asked me if I should like to have her blessing. I bowed my head, and, making the sign of the cross over my head, she blessed my Mother, all the other members of my family, and last she gave me her blessing, praying that my voyage be safe and successful and that I have a safe return to my home in America.

We know that the great Russian Church of Kazan with its sacred shrine of the Madonna is no more. Some two or three years ago the Soviet government had this church razed and utterly destroyed. Everywhere in Europe one meets these Russian exiles, people of refinement and charming manners, and many of them possessing a mysticism that we Westerners do not know.

Just at present this whole great Russian Church seems almost destined for oblivion. But surely this cannot be. Surely such an institution, a great historical part and parcel of Christianity and Christendom, cannot pass away as something merely mortal, and built by human hands.

Jefferson Davis: Leader of a Lost Cause

By CHARLES W. LOWRY,

SUCH WAS JEFFERSON DAVIS IN 1861. Small wonder that he was chosen to be the President of the newly-formed Confederate States and that when he arrived in Montgomery, Alabama, the provisional capitol, William L. Yancey greeted him and thrilled the throng of folk surrounding the Exchange Hotel with the famous words: "The man and the hour have met." Why was that meeting not more fateful? What in the last analysis was responsible for Davis' failure and the doom of the cause which he led? You know the stock answer. The South was terribly outnumbered and in ultimate resources the North was yet more superior. The former was not so much beaten as worn down by slow degrees. There is truth in this. Yet the superiority of the North was not as great in fact as in statistics. She had to fight on the soil of the enemy; she was not prepared; her very size and the dispersal of a large part of her population over enormous and remote areas of country were grave disadvantages; her people were not homogeneous and were slow in becoming really united in support of the war; large sections of the population in the border states were Southern sympathizers. Potentially, the Southern cause was anything but hopeless, as most Southerners probably were only too ready to believe and as both the North and European observers thought for a considerable time. Besides history is replete with military success and the establishment or destruction of states against great odds. No, this is not a sound answer. We must carry the question further and, as usual, must look closer home. This has been done by Eckenrode, with candor and convincing argumentation. Why did the Confederacy fail? he asks. Not, he replies, because of the blockade, or dearth of food, or inferior military equipment, or even the financial failures of the government, or lack of mechanical equipment, or fewness of soldiers. Nearly all of these were contributing causes and not without importance. But no one of them was absolutely determining. The leading cause was the failure of the South to devise and to carry through a systematic and comprehensive strategic scheme. The blame for this can be placed on no one but Davis, and Eckenrode links this basic responsibility with a fascinating analysis of Davis the man. Jefferson Davis, he says, "possessed the genius combination—neurosis and will. This is the combination that made Caesar, Cromwell and Napoleon. What he lacked that they had was a strong sense of reality." This is penetrating and, I believe, explains much. Consider several instances of Confederate ineptitude: the holding of millions of bales of cotton until they were useless owing to the Federal blockade, instead of selling immediately and laying the basis of credit abroad; the puerility of Confederate diplomacy when so much depended on foreign recognition and support; the failure to follow up the first battle of Bull Run and to capture Washington; and the lack of realism in the conduct of the war in the West almost from the beginning. In each case there were reasons, some of them in themselves excellent, for the policy in question, but a man with a strong sense of reality would have seen more clearly and have acted more boldly. The matter is rendered more serious by the consideration that Davis was not one of that company of high-spirited but misguided Southerners who supposed that the Yankees wouldn't fight and that the war would be over in sixty days. He knew that a long struggle was ahead.

Consider in the same connection the case of General Bragg. This commander would seem to have proved early and amply his incompetence. Yet Davis allowed him to retain his command until his soldiers all but refused to fight and then promoted him, making him a kind of personal military adviser. It was Bragg who was largely responsible for the rejection of the plan to have Forrest with all the cavalry in the West cut Sherman's railroad communications and for the removal of Johnston in favor of Hood with the suicidal consequences of this rash act. This whole episode is the gravest chapter, in my judgment, in Davis' conduct of the war and, indeed, in his entire career. It is difficult to see what possessed the man in the whole affair and it is not easy to excuse either the judgment or the character of the Confederate President. Yet, of course, there was no malice or conscious fault in his conduct. The blundering proceeded from weakness—in large part from this fundamental defect of the lack of a strong sense of reality. The same trait is responsible for the fact that the South throughout the war had no grand strategy, whereas the North, with less competent generals, poorer soldiers man for man, and many discouraging defeats by smaller armies, devised and carried through such a plan, one of the two great strategic plans in American history, the other being the combination of his army at New York with the French fleet in the West Indies whereby Washington won the independence of the thirteen colonies. This is the chief reason why the North won, though, of course, contributory causes were legion. But Lee's Army was never really beaten in the field, and, astonishing as it may seem, the Confederate army had more food in its depots at the end than at almost any other period of the war.

THE CASE of Bragg illustrates also Davis' second great weakness: the lack of personal detachment or self-transcendence. I doubt if I make myself clear: it is not easy to put what I mean in a phrase. I mean the ultimate conquest of every form of self-interest or self-concern, the rare ability when the time demands it or for the sake of a great cause, to sink every thought of self, to banish pride, personal sensitiveness, jealousy, the remembrance of injuries, stubborn self-will, the last vestige of innate egoism. Lincoln achieved this and saved the Union as well as won a lasting immortality. Lee had the same quality. I know of no more moving page in the annals of biography than the accounts we have of Lee's bearing and conduct in the very midst of disaster at Gettysburg. Himself fully responsible for the invasion of Pennsylvania and for giving battle at this point, he could yet say: "Never mind, General. All this has been my fault. It is I that have lost this fight, and you must help me out of it the best way you can." Similarly in his report he assumed full blame and twice offered his resignation. Such a spirit was beyond the reach of Davis. We are not to blame him overmuch for this. He was built on other lines. A nervous sensitiveness in temperament, strong-willed, tenacious in opinions, and slow to learn where they were involved, proud, a little vain and egotistical, he was not the person to give in, to admit a mistake, to conciliate his enemies and critics, to resist the treacherous incursions of subtle flattery, to rise to great heights of magnanimity, to see himself annihilated, so the goal were won. Humility in the more basic meaning of true self-knowledge, a just sense of proportion, a strong sense of reality subjectively appropriated, the saving grace of humor, was hardly an attribute of Davis. Here he probably resembles Woodrow Wilson. This great idealist and prophet of humanity became the architect of a new world. Man-

The Forward Movement

Looking Forward to Whitsunday.

By ARTHUR W. SHERMAN.

An inspiring opportunity is to be offered the membership of the Episcopal Church on Whitsunday to give expression to the desires which have been stirring in many hearts during and since the Lenten period. Throughout the Church, from Maine to California, and from the Canadian border to the Mexican Gulf, our people in the Whitsunday Act of Affirmation will renew the vows of Christian discipleship and together receive the Holy Communion for the strengthening of their souls. There has perhaps been nothing like it in the history of our branch of Christ's Church. Our Bishops and clergy summon each one to be present and do his part to make Whitsunday in the year of our Lord 1935 a new beginning for ourselves as individuals and for the witness of the Church in a world of sorest need.

Early in the fourth week in May letters to 5,400 clergy went out from the headquarters of the Forward Movement with suggestions for the use of the ten days before Whitsunday and enclosing a sample copy of the Act of Affirmation. The office is receiving rapid and heavy orders for copies of this service and for the booklet, "Follow On", evidencing the widespread response of the Church to these new helps issued by the Movement. The first edition of a quarter of a million each of these publications bids fair to be soon exhausted.

In the Diocesan Conventions.

The work of the Forward Movement was stressed in many of the Diocesan Conventions which met in April and May. In his Convention address the Bishop of New York called attention to the times of confusion, uncertainty and fear in which we are living and reminded the Convention of the great opportunity thus given to the Church and the desperate need of the world for the message of the Gospel. He called upon his people to let the Forward Movement express itself in new life and in new devotion to the cause of Christ and urged the faithful use of the Forward Movement daily helps to Christian living.

The Bishop of Western Massachusetts hailed the Forward Movement with joyful and enthusiastic welcome, because it proposed, first of all, a re-conversion, a renewal and perfecting of individual discipleship—and suggested the possibility to his clergy that the call of a re-consecration of every follower of Jesus Christ might be presented in a personal interview to every soul in his diocese. He concluded his address by saying, "I shall give to it (the Forward Movement) all my power, beginning, please God, with myself."

The Bishop of Eastern North Carolina summoned the people of his diocese to a renewal of spiritual energy, casting off sloth, indifference and worldliness. "I believe with all my soul," he said, "that the Church of the living God, consecrated to its task, appropriating the promised power, moving forward under the leadership of Jesus can solve every problem that threatens the peace of the world today; that it can enlist its youth in the great adventure of redemption; that it can so permeate society with its divine purpose that justice will be restored to its rightful place and men made in His image lifted from their degradation and placed on that sure road over which as sons of God they may walk into the promised land of their heritage. In the name of our Master Christ I call you to go forward today."

The Bishop of Western New York made the Forward Movement in that diocese the subject of the second part of his convention address, outlining a very effective program for putting the Forward Movement into effect in the diocese. After the Rev. Arthur M. Sherman of the Staff of the Forward Movement had presented the general aspects of the Movement to the Convention, Bishop Davis sent the following message to the Chairman of the Commission: "Tell Bishop Hobson the Diocese of Western New York is wholeheartedly with the Forward Movement and pledges its enthusiastic support." A commission already in existence on Religious Revival, was changed to the Commission on the Forward Movement.

The convention of the Diocese of Montana passed a resolution thanking the promotors of the Forward Movement for "that splendid pamphlet", Disciples of the Living Christ, and expressed the hope that some such devotional literature might be made available for all of next year. Montana is earnestly striving to make the Forward Movement a reality in the diocese and to that end, the convention was greatly helped by the presence and inspiring message of Bishop Cross, one of the members of the Commission.

The Diocese of Mississippi holds its convention in January, but held a clergy conference in May with the Forward Movement as its dominant theme, emphasizing the need of strengthening and deepening the spiritual life of the individual and the home circle. Bishop Bratton gave the principal address of which one of the clergy reports: "A wonderful heart to heart talk, as the Bishop always gives . . . but . . . to us, this talk lifted us up more than usual. The Bishop took the Forward Movement and every part of it . . . lifted it up . . . and placed it on the Altar. Money giving, Time giving, all . . . were lifted up to the Heavenly Father. We, ourselves . . . all we have . . comes from the Father. Bishop Green outlined the program in mind—(1) the carrying out of the Forward Movement; (2) Whitsunday offering; (3) Assisting in the Laymen's League."

Something Is Happening in the Church.

A group of priests were recently talking together of the unusually large congregations since Easter in the city, where they serve and of the use of the Forward Movement leaflets, when one of them broke forth with the remark, "Something is happening in the Church". A clergyman in the Diocese of Ohio, in a personal letter to a friend, who is a member of the Joining Commission on the Forward Movement, rejoices in the fact of a vigorous spirit of fresh life in his parish. "I present twenty-two more adults for confirmation on Monday (eighty-two already presented this year), and have already started class three. This Forward Movement is all right. Keep it up. Get something started in the fall." And he suggests emphasis on Church attendance, discussion classes, men's visitation of parishes and clergy calling. Something is happening in that parish and it has evidently begun with the rector himself. Not the least among the encouraging signs is the spirit of revival among the clergy. A priest writes of his gratitude for the Forward Movement: "I want to express my appreciation for the tremendous impulse joining the Forward Movement has given to my spiritual life. To me, discipleship brings the only meaning there can be in the Christian Church. I thank God that you and your group are pressing forward in the simple challenge to all of us towards looking at the matter frankly and without institutional or theological bias."

Laymen Move Forward in Texas.

As a step toward reinvigorating the life of the Church there are being held all over the Diocese of Texas district meetings of laymen at which the laymen themselves do all the talking. Bishop Quin gives an example of what is happening—"Laymen from eight congregations came together at our last meeting in the town of Bellville, a town of 2,000 people. I will have a meeting on the twentieth of May with about ten congregations represented in another part of the diocese and still another on the fifth of June at another point. We spot five or more laymen to speak on 'What the Church Means to Me' and 'What I as an Individual member Can Mean to the Church'. That warms the boys up and most of them join in the discussion. The men drive anywhere from twenty to sixty miles to the meetings. I am going to ask them to do one definite piece of work this summer for all the laymen of the diocese and that is to read the new Forward Movement pamphlet, which is out just after Whitsunday."

A Rule of Life.

As a result of the widespread use of the pamphlet on Discipleship, and in response to a request for a rule of life for lay people, the Diocese of Maryland has proposed some simple rules, one of which is to read a book on the Christian religion monthly. The books suggested are of timeless value and have helped in forming Christian character for centuries. They are "The Confessions of St. Augustine"; "The Imitation of Christ," by Thomas a Kempis; "The Spiritual Combat", by Scupoli; "The Devout Life", by St. Francis de Sales; "Holy Living", by Jeremy Taylor; and "The Practice of the Presence of God", by Brother Lawrence.

Individualize the Booklet, "Follow On".

There is always a grave danger in mass distribution of literature that it be lightly esteemed and its use neglected. Place the Forward Movement literature at the back of the Church and asking the congregation to take it as they go out is almost as bad as placing it in the pews for people to sit on. One effective way of individualizing the pamphlets has been found to be to have a lay visitation of the parish, thus distributing the booklets personally.

A lay reader in charge of a congregation has had the name of each person written on the pamphlet and then given to him. Whatever method of personal distribution is followed the value of the gift will be increased if the distributor gives something of himself with the little book.

kind can never forget this. But at the crucial point, the acid test, Wilson failed. Today the world is paying the price of that failure. There is, of course, abundant justification of a kind for his failure. But the fact remains; and it can hardly be questioned that he failed in part because, like Jefferson Davis, he was too much of a doctrinnaire and it was not in him completely to banish self.

The articles on the Collects by the Rev. William E. Callender, Chaplain, U. S.; P. H. S., which were formerly a weekly feature in the Southern Church, may still be had by those interested and who have been making use of them through the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch, in which they appear every Saturday.

BOOK REVIEWS

IS HE NOT ABLE? By Mrs. Edith F. Norton. Cloth. Pp. Pp. 155. Published by The Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago, Illinois. Price, $1.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph C. Norton went across during the war to minister to the distressed people of Belgium. Their dedication resulted in the establishment of the Belgian Gospel Mission, now internationally known and commended.

The recent death of Mr. Norton, to whom his widow dedicates this book, hallows these pages. The Introduction by Dr. Trumbull, editor of the Sunday School Times, and who has been associated with the Nortons from the beginning of their work, enhances the value of the book.

For the "quiet hour" it will prove soothing and stimulating. Weak faith will be strengthened; joy will spring from the soil of depression; in the darkness of wonderment, light will shine out; the presence and power of our gracious Lord Jesus will be experienced. For Mrs. Norton writes out of the depths of heart that knows Him.

WHAT DID JESUS THINK? Studies in The Mind of Christ: By Professor Stanley Brown-Serman and Dr. Harold Adye Prichard. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York. Price, $2.50.

Since "The Lord of Thought," by Dougal and Emmet appeared, thirteen years ago, several attempts have been made to draw accounts of the mind and thoughts of Jesus Christ; this one we take to be the best we have seen. It is not another life of Christ, merely, but an attempt to study the development of the mental life of the most profound of thinkers of the human race. The work is done reverently and scholarly. The authors approached the subject, feeling they stood on holy ground.

Such a subject, of course, needs the function of the mind; for mind alone can study mind, not intellectually active, but imaginatively picturesque. We do not often find this method in American writers in dealing with Biblical characters and subjects. So we hail the book as a new method of approach to spiritual subjects. The book speaks of the possibility of expository preaching in America, an art long lost by the pulpit.

"The Discovery," the background of Jesus' heritage, is the first chapter. We have this statement—"The Jews were not self-conscious persons; but they were self-conscious people." "The Temple" is a fine presentation of the religious consciousness of the boy Jesus in its natural development, and the practical effects the Temple and the ritual of worship exerted on the young mind of the Saviour. All parents ought to read this chapter. There is sound pedagogy in it. "Baptism and Temptation" follows with a fine psychological approach to the conflicts Jesus met and their origin. They were mental conflicts springing from three sources. "The Kingdom of God" is well presented from the point of view of the mind of Jesus. The apocalyptic elements are well treated. "The Son of Man," "The Son of Man as the Kingdom," "Jesus and the Father" and "God in the Face of Jesus Christ," are subjects of great importance, scholarly presented. Here the conscious relation of the Son to the Father and of the Son to sons, is the study that make up these chapters.

"God in Christ" is a fine sermon—rather it is an expository sermon on the subject. The quotation, "Nothing, in His eyes, so effectually kept men from achieving righteousness as the spirit of self-sufficiency." Concerning the "Sinlessness of Jesus", the writers make the following striking statement: "We have been guilty of a kind of disservice to Jesus by speaking so much about His "sinlessness" p. 213), and on the next page, "After all, it is Jesus Himself who has given us the right principle of judgment." This is fine, "To describe Him as sinless is not to make a false statement; it is to make an inadequate one; for it lacks the suggestion of that high, heroic consecration of a whole life—mind, desire, purpose, action—to the call of God, which is the beacon that lighted every passing moment for Jesus Christ."

"The Permanent Christ" is the concluding chapter which is a tribute to the abiding values revealed to mankind by the mind of Jesus Christ. This is beautiful, "And so He stands before us, not merely as a Saviour of the souls of men, but as an example to the minds of men." "And it is not beyond reason to believe that, if the world ever comes to a realization of the mind of Christ, it will solve the riddle of existence. For in that mind was perfect clarity, perfect understanding, and perfect sympathy."

The book is an outstanding contribution to the literature of Christology. Our complaint is that the book is too brief; nevertheless it demands the attention of all.

MARRIAGE CUSTOMS.

We are all familiar with the story of the old Quaker lady who said to her husband: "All the world is queer save thee and me, and sometimes I think that even thee is a little queer." Like her, we are apt to think that everything that is different from ourselves is "queer". But if we know that people in Germany, let us say, have a special style of cooking, then if we see in America a real German dish, it is not just "queer" but rather very interesting. So we should be informed of how others than ourselves do things.

Our program this evening is on the subject of Marriage Customs. First, we will discuss, "How People Get Married."

The first custom we shall speak of is marriage by capture. Behind this custom is the belief that a man's wife is his property just as much as his dog or his horse is his property. So, as he would in a wild state of civilization capture and tame his dog or horse, so he must capture his wife, and tame her if he can. He would capture her by running her down or by trapping her, and then give her a few gentle caresses with a club. His petting would be done with a rawhide whip. The bride-to-be would be selected for capture, and followed until she was either taken or the family of the bride-to-be had killed the prospective bridegroom. Let us hope they would then marry and live happily ever afterwards.

The next method of courtship was probably that of barter. It grew up when the father of the lady fair began to realize that he was losing a good slave when his daughter left home, and should have something to say about it and also receive some recompense. Thus he would swap a daughter for a good-size calf, or perhaps two pigs, or even a money consideration. As time went on the prices of brides rose and the king began to take an interest. Thus in Babylon, the State took charge of what was called the Marriage Market. So each year all girls who had reached a certain age, about fifteen, were lined up in the market place. Judges would select them in order of attractiveness and then the auction would begin. Bidding for the particular prizes would be high. But for the less attractive girls the price would become lower and lower until they came to one that no one would buy. They would then go into reverse, as far as the market was concerned, and see that every girl was married before the end of the day, by paying men to marry the less desirable ladies. If there was any profit in the deal it went to the state. It was quite a business.

Another custom is still practiced in many European and Asiatic countries. It is called the marriage of convenience. Indeed, it may be said to be almost universally the custom among civilized countries with the exception of America and England. It is based on the idea that parents know better than young people when it comes to selecting their future life-mate. So the young people have nothing to say about whom they shall marry. It is all arranged for them by the parents or guardians. It is often arranged from the viewpoint of uniting two families that like each other. In China the Matchmaker has a regular business of arranging such affairs, being paid at a regular rate for his services. This seems a terrible thing to us, but they get along about as well as we do with our love-marriages, as far as happiness is concerned, if statistics prove anything. But we are convinced that our way of the main parties selecting their mates is best.

We now come to the kinds of families there are in the world, or "How People Stay Married". People are apt to think things are new in marriage customs just because they are so old they have been discarded so long ago that people have forgotten they ever existed.

The first of these discarded marriage customs is the Polyandrous Marriage. It comes from two Greek words meaning "many husbands". In this the Mother is the head of the family. She inherits property and can have as many husbands as she wants. It is still practiced among the Negroes of Dutch Guiania, in South America. The man need not support his family more than to build a house when he marries a woman. It is fine for the man but awful for the women and children. Only very depraved savages have the custom.

The next custom is Polygamy. In it a man has as many wives as he wants. This was the case in early Bible times. It was abandoned for three main reasons. The first was that most men could not support more than one wife. The second was that there was so much jealousy and quarreling that the men decided they had better have only one wife. The third reason was that polygamy was a kind of slavery for the wives, and Christianity taught that the custom of slavery, and a low standard of living was not right for either man or woman.

Lately something has been revived as new, though it was discarded among civilized people more than a thousand years ago. It is called the companionate marriage. It said that two people should marry for a time, and if they ceased to care for each other, they should separate and get another mate. This custom was abandoned because children needed both mother and father until they were grown. The second reason it was abandoned was that very often a man would abandon a sick wife, or a woman abandon a sick husband. Society said that this could not be done, but that they must care for each other. Recently it has been revived as a part of the Bolshevistic customs in Russia.

Now, the Christian idea of marriage is, that a man and a woman agree to "love and to cherish" each other "until death us do part", and call God to witness their oath, and a number of witnesses. Of this we should think in three ways: First, When we promise something and call God to witness, it is as solemn as we can possibly have it. So, Mother Church frowns on anything like mock weddings, which laugh at marriage. Second, "Until death us do part" is a long time. So we should be very careful in selecting one to marry. No one embarking on a ship would go on board if they thought that there was a good chance of the ship going to the bottom. The real reason for a period of "being engaged" is that if either wishes to draw back they may do so before marriage. Thus each of us, whether boy or girl, should earnestly pray for God to guide us in the selection of our life mate.

Third, In the marriage service we promise to love the wife; or husband. Now, many people have the idea that love is like a whirlwind that sweeps one off his feet and makes a person supremely happy as long as they are with the loved one. That each has a soulmate. Even though two people in love may believe this, we have to confess that it is nonsense. Everyone has faults and within a very short time after marriage they will come out. Quarrels will come to everyone. Now, when the person who thinks he has found a soulmate has the first quarrel he or she is apt to think he has made a mistake and run to a divorce court. But true love must be a matter of the will. We promise to love. Thus it will survive quarrels. For the Christian view of marriage is that it is for life. The person seeking a soulmate may be married fifty times without finding the soulmate. But the person who determines he will love wife or husband in spite of everything will achieve happiness, and a happy married life is really a great accomplishment and can only be gotten by each one determining that he will do everything to make the other person happy.

So Mother Church teaches that God gives us marriage as a Sacrament, that marriage is holy. So each one should pray before and after marriage to be led to do God's will that their family may be in the truest sense a Christian family and home.

Camp McDowell.

The thirteenth annual session of Camp McDowell for Young People will be held June 11-21, 1935, under the auspices of the Department of Religious Education, Diocese of Alabama, at New Beach Hotel, Battle's Wharf, Ala.

The staff will be as follows: Bishop, the Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, Birmingham; Director, the Rev. J. Hodge Alves, Spring Hill; Camp Mother, Mrs. Albert F. Wilson, Montgomery; Chaplain, the Rev. P. N. McDonald, Montgomery; Secretary and Treasurer, Miss Lida Holt, Spring Hill; Hostesses, Miss Grace Hutchings and Mrs. Nettie Hallowell, Battle's Wharf.

Other Counsellors and Instructors—Rev. P. M. Dennis, Dr. Gardiner L. Tucker, Houma, La., Rev. Thomas Byrne, Mrs. E. H. West and Mr. Walter Alves.

The cost will be $15. This includes registration $2.50, room and board $12.50, from supper, June 11, through breakfast, June 21.

Leagues which have elected officers for next year should try to have these officers attend Camp. It is a good and profitable investment for leagues as a whole to send some of their members to Camp and to pay a part or all of their expenses. A Leaguer should be able to bring back real help and inspiration to those not fortunate enough to come. Try giving half scholarships for outstanding service.

Address all communications to Miss Lida Holt, Spring Hill, Ala.

THE PRESIDING BISHOP'S APPEAL TO YOUNG MEN AND BOYS.

An appeal to the young men and boys of the Church to participate in the National Convention of Youth at Sewanee, Tenn., August 28 to September 2, under auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, is made by the Presiding Bishop in an open letter just issued. The letter is addressed to "The Young Men and Boys of the Church," and declares:

"Greetings and good wishes from your Presiding Bishop.

"We are living in a world of change and flux. No one can tell what the next day or year may bring forth in the material and spiritual lives of this generation. But the eternal verities remain always the same. If our youth will hold fast to these, the future can hold no threat of disaster for this generation or for those to come. I know you want to do your share, but you need preparation and counsel.

"Why not join the group of young men and boys who will gather in conference at the University of the South on August 28, and engage with them in the discussion on Four Square Life for Boys Today, or Christian Youth Building a New World? Four-Square Life, A New World—surely these are topics worth thinking and talking about. Much too will be gained from association with your fellows; your vision will be clarified; your will strengthened; your health improved; your sense of honor cultivated, and your spiritual life enriched. The Church needs you, and you need the Church. Let us help one another.

"To those of you who are able to take advantage of this opportunity, and I hope there will be many who can—I send my blessings and Goodspeed. My one regret is that I am unable to share the experience with you."

ONE HUNDRED AND TWELFTH SESSION VIRGINIA SEMINARY CLOSES.

The one hundred and twelfth annual session of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia ended Thursday, June 6, with commencement exercises at which twenty men received academic awards.

The Rev. Angus Dun, Professor at Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass., was the speaker at the graduation ceremonies in the Seminary Chapel. Professor Dun, the Rev. E. Ruffin Jones, Norfolk, Va., and the Rev. W. Roy Mason, Archdeacon of the Blue Ridge, were awarded the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity, by the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Virginia and President of the Seminary Board of Trustees.

Lewis C. Franklin, D. C. L., Vice-President and Treasurer of the National Council, delivered the missionary address Wednesday night in the Chapel.

The Rev. Noble C. Powell, D. D., rector of Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, was toastmaster at the Alumni Association banquet Thursday noon. The banquet was preceded by the annual alumni meeting, over which the Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Virginia, presided.

The Rev. Oliver J. Hart, D. D., rector of St. John's Church, Washington, delivered the sermon at the ordination service in the Chapel Friday.

Following the graduation exercises Thursday morning, the Alumni and Trustees dedicated a tablet in the Chapel in memory of the Rev. Samuel A. Wallis, D. D., for twenty-six years professor in the Seminary, who died in 1934.

Mr. George Henry, A. B., of Chapel Hill, N. C., and Gregory J. Lock, E. E., of Fort Thomas, Ky., led the graduating class in scholarship for the three-year course, and received the degree of Bachelor of Divinity cum laude. Fourteen dioceses are represented in the graduating class. Bishop Tucker conferred diplomas. The Very Rev. Wallace E. Rollins, D. D., is Dean of the Seminary.

List of graduates is as follows:

Academic Awards.

Degree of Bachelor of Divinity Cum Laude—M. George Henry, N. C.; Gregory J. Lock, Ky.

Degree of Bachelor of Divinity—Stanley Ashton, Idaho; James Beckwith, N. C.; Herbert H. Cooper, Newark; William F. Draper, N. C.; Ernest Harding, Mass.; Boyd R. Howarth, Newark; George P. Huntington, R. I.; Robert L. Jacoby, Pa.; Henry Johnston, N. C.; Robert C. Kell, Md.; Robert Merry, Vt.; John K. Mount, Md.; Thomas J. Simpson, Tenn.; A. M. Van Dyke, Erie.

Certificates of Graduation—Thomas Bagby, Texas; Francis Burke, Va.; Francis Cooper, Md.; Fred Griffiths, Va.

DEAN ROLLINS' MESSAGE TO STUDENTS OF 1934-1935.

The future of the Church depends upon the men our seminaries are graduating these days, declared Dean Wallace E. Rollins of the Virginia Seminary in his final talk to the student body of the 1934-1935 session.

"Why is not the Church doing more? —because of lack of leadership and consecration on the part of men going into the seminaries. If this thing is worth going into, it is worth making a sacrifice for," said the Dean, challenging the student-body to more complete consecration to their vocation, to live more Christian lives, to study harder and to learn to think clearly.

In his survey of the year's work, the Dean remarked that from standpoint of student health, it was the best in twenty-three years, and that the scholarship surpassed the records of recent years.

He emphasized the need for attention to proper reading of services and public speaking. He told the students that their generation is not going to be able to get away with such poor and shabby speaking as his own.

He reminded the students that they are representing an institution and, therefore, to play the game with it. He urged the duty and necessity of their supporting the whole Church.

A DIGLOT WELCOME.

Souvenir French-English Gospels of St. John for the 1,300 Members of the Crew Aboard the "Normandie".

The New York Bible Society, which has for its sole field in Bible distribution the City of New York and its Harbor, presented to all the 1,300 officers and crew of the new S. S. Normandie, upon arrival, an attractively bound Gospel of St. John in the Diglot, English and French in parallel columns. Across the front of the Gospel on the tri-color, blue, white, and red of the French flag are printed the words: "Welcome S. S. Normandie, June 3, 1935, New York Bible Society."

The French-English Diglot is one of many foreign languages printed in this form with English, circulated by the New York Bible Society in this world center of many nationalities.

Out of the 941 languages and dialects into which the Bible or some portion of it, has been translated, 81 are used in the field here.

Another item of interest in religious affairs is the fact that the Gospel of St. John was first translated into the English language 1,200 years ago by the Venerable Bede at Yarrow, England, and this anniversary is being generally celebrated throughout the world.

CRAFT SHOP CONTRIBUTES TO UPKEEP OF MISSIONS.

The industrial work of St. Andrew's Mission, Mayaguez, Puerto Rico, stood out in the limelight in Washington, D. C., this spring, when Mrs. Caroline O'Day, New York State Representative, arranged a sale of the embroideries, which are made in the mission workrooms. Mrs. Roosevelt bought a number of things. Mrs. O'Day, on a visit to Puerto Rico, had been impressed with the practical value of the industrial work. Miss Mildred Hayes, who is in charge of the work and is in the States at present arranging other sales, says: "For seventeen years we at St. Andrew's, Mayaguez, have really been doing what the NRA now says we must do. Our hours have been shorter and our pay better than the average on the islands. We have been able to maintain a high standard chiefly I think because our work goes directly from producer to consumer." The craft shop was able to contribute $1,000 to the work of the missionary district of Puerto Rico, a great help at a time when appropriations had been cut severely.

CORRECTED ADDRESS, SHRINE MONT, ORKNEY SPRINGS, VIRGINIA.

In a recent mention of the June conferences at Shrine Mont appearing in the Southern Churchman, "Shrine Mont, Va.", was given as the location; whereas, there being no such postoffice, the location is properly Shrine Mont, Orkney Springs, Va. The conferences so mentioned were:

June 10-15, Junior Woman's Auxiliary of the Province of Washington.

June 17-21, Church Workers' Conference.

The sixth Shrine Mont Clergy School, for clergy of the general Church, from July 1-12, has just received the important addition to its faculty as previously announced, of the Rev. Charles Clingman, D. D., of Birmingham, Ala., who will give the Forward Movement Course, "The Rector and Parish Management." Other lecturers are Dr. Wm. H. Jefferys of Philadelphia, "The Living Way — Christian Mysticism"; Dr. Charles B. Hedrick, of Berkley Divinity School, "Form Criticism and the Life of Christ"; Dr. Charles W. Lowry, Jr., of the Virginia Theological Seminary, "Some Recent and Contemporary Theologians", and Bishop H. St. George Tucker, "Christian Ethics and the World Today". Last year's Clergy School was attended by clergy from twenty dioceses.

The Rev. Edmund L. Woodward, M. D., is the Director, Shrine Mont, Orkney Springs, Va.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES AT GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Dean Clarence W. Mendell, of Yale College, was the speaker at the one hundred and fourteenth annual commencement exercises of the General Theological Seminary, held May 22, in the Chapel of the Good Shepherd. Thirty-eight members of the Senior Class received diplomas, with Bishop Perry making the presentations.

Honorary degrees of Doctor of Sacred Theology were conferred by Dean Hughell E. W. Fosbroke upon the Rev. Frederick Sydney Fleming, D. D., rector of Trinity Church, New York; the Rev. Frank Howard Nelson, D. D., rector of Christ Church, Cincinnati, Ohio; and the Rev. ZeBarney Thorne Phillips, D. D., rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., Chaplain of the United States Senate, and President of the House of Deputies of the General Convention.

Dean Fosbroke conferred the earned degrees of Doctor of Theology upon the Rev. Cuthbert Aikman Simpson, S. T. M., Assistant Professor of Old Testament at the Seminary; and the Rev. Felix Lossing Cirlot, S. T. M., of New York. The Rev. Frederick John Warnecke, of St. Clement's Church, Hawthorne, N. J., received the earned degree of Master in Sacred Theology. Dean Fosbroke also conferred the degree of Bachelor in Sacred Theology upon fourteen men.

Commencement week exercises began Monday with the baccalaureate sermon preached by the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, Bishop of New York. Alumni Day was observed on Tuesday with a memorial service in the morning and an address by the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes of the National Council, Department of Christian Social Service at the annual alumni meeting.

A WARNING.

St. Peter's Episcopal Church,
In the City of Saint Louis,
May 29, 1935.

Dear Mr. Editor:

For the sake of my brothers in the ministry, may I warn them against a man who is purporting to be the brother of the Rev. Dr. Frank Gavin, and on that basis soliciting funds.

Sincerely yours,
Hulbert A. Woolfall.

Librarian Forty-one Years.

Miss Maria Worthington, who has served faithfuly as Librarian for forty-one years, resigned last November, her resignation to take effect in June. During her term of service nearly six hundred of our Alumni have graduated, and she has had a personal acquaintance with most of the sixty-one living ones who graduated before she took office. She has especially kept in touch with our many missionaries in the foreign field. No Alumnus feels that his visit to the Hill is complete unless he has had a visit with "Miss Maria," as she is affectionately called. She has rendered a rare and useful quality of service to the Seminary and to the Alumni during all these years. "Miss Maria" will be missed in the Library, but we are glad that she will continue to live on the Hill and that her gracious and radiant influence will still be with us.

A friend of the Seminary has asked the privilege of giving a sum of money to provide a modern library floor for the Library, more convenient reading desks, improved system of reading lights and more comfortable desks and reading chairs. It is hoped that these improvements can be made during the summer. It is certain that they will greatly increase the usefulness of the Library.

Piedmont Convocation.

The Piedmont Convocation met May 13 at St. George's Church, Clarendon, with sixty-seven delegates from fourteen branches. It was very inspirational to have so many diocesan and Piedmont officers present.

The Holy Communion was celebrated by the Rev. Henry Miller, rector of St. George's, after which the business meeting was opened by Miss Nancy Tackett, secretary.

The first speaker was Mrs. H. R. Batcheller, Custodian, who told of the growth of the U. T. O. since the first service in 1889.

Bishop Goodwin offered the noon-day prayer and spoke of the Whitsunday offering to maintain the school at Lawrenceville, and also to apply toward the diocesan deficit. He is chairman of the Bishop's Pence Plan. The plan is to distribute little cans to each family in the parish, and as grace is said for each meal, each communicant is to drop a penny into the slot of the can. This is to be divided equally between parish and diocese. The portion allotted to the diocese to be used by Bishop Tucker as he sees fit. This would not conflict with the mite-boxes or the blue boxes.

Mrs. Barton gave a very interesting talk, stressing the watch word:—"If we be His disciples." She asked that we circle the diocese with prayer at 7:45 each morning. She asked that, if it be possible, to make Virginia Missions a "special" and not an object to count on the quota.

Mrs. Chichester spoke on the new subject of Latin America, and gave a list of books for study during the summer. She urged each person to try to attend one Summer Conference.

Mrs. Dennis told how important it is to send delegates to the conferences to train for leadership in the parish.

Mrs. Chambers made an appeal for funds for the Nellie Walton scholarship and hoped the branches would take an interest in her since she was one of our Virginia girls.

Reports from branches represented showed a very active interest taken by all in the Church work and a desire to make themselves standard branches.

The meeting adjourned with a prayer by the Rev. Miller.

Mary-Frank Leachman,
Acting Secretary.

WESTERN NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. George A. Beecher, D. D., Bishop.

Japanese Attend Services.

Services of great significance, in which Japanese and Americans participated, were held in the Church of Our Saviour, North Platte, Nebraska, May 5. The Bishop of Western Nebraska, the Rt. Rev. George A. Beecher, D. D., and the Rev. Dr. Malcolm B. Lockhart, of St. James' Church, Baton Rouge, La., were present. Dr. Lockhart was the celebrant at the Early Service, and assisted by the rector, the Rev. Francis J. Pryor, III. After this service, sixty-five young people attended a breakfast sponsored by the Young People's Society in honor of the guests, and enjoyed the opportunity of visiting with them.

At the eleven o'clock service the attendance was so large that the seating capacity of the church was taxed. A great number of Japanese from the vicinity, as well as from the North Platte and South Platte Valleys, were among the worshippers. The Rev. Mr. Pryor celebrated the Holy Communion, assisted by the Rev. Hiram Kano, Japanese Deacon, who read the Epistle, and the Rev. Dr. Lockhart, who read the Gospel. A class of thirty-one—the majority being Japanese adults and children—were presented to the Bishop for the Sacrament of Confirmation. This is both the first time that there has been a joint confirmation class, and also that any number of the Japanese have attended the regular services. While there has been a Japanese Mission for some years and the children have attended the Church School and the Saturday afternoon confirmation classes, the adults have preferred, largely because of the language difficulty, to come to the special Japanese services, which are held every Sunday afternoon. The sense of spiritual unity fostered by the far-flung activities of our Church in this Missionary District, were clearly emphasized by this service. Dr. Lockhart in his sermon made reference to this evidence of the catholicity of the Episcopal Church. The Japanese work is rapidly developing under the consecrated leadership of Mr. Pryor and Mr. Kano.

Another interesting service was the Japanese Communion service on Easter. The Rev. Mr. Pryor celebrated, and the Rev. Mr. Kano read the prayers in Japanese. The responses were read alternately in English and Japanese. Mr. Pryor's sermon was later interpreted by Mr. Kano. It is unfortunate that our language should create a barrier between the adult Japanese and the Church's work, but Mr. Kano's ministry is rapidly overcoming this difficulty. He is now a candidate for the priesthood and is studying under the direction of Mr. Pryor.

"At the present moment I am working for the FERA," writes the rector of North Platte. In return for lending the FERA the basement of the church for several years for their canning and quilting, the supervisor of this government agency has given Mr. Pryor an unlimited number of men to work on and about his church. They have graded and seeded all the lawns, planted new trees, shrubs and flowers, trimmed the trees, taken out and replaced diseased ones, laid cement walks and stepping stones, fixed the tennis court and washed the outside of the church of all foreign dust and matter—all at no cost to the church other than the materials used. The government has placed fourteen men under the supervision of Mr. Pryor, and he has worked out a constructive program for the renovation and improvement of worthy projects in his community. In addition to his civic service, he is an unusually active parish priest.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Rt. Rev. Albert S. Thomas, D. D., Bishop.

1785—Diocese of South Carolina—1935 On Act of Praise.

Almighty God, in whose hands we live and move and have our being, and who watchest over all Thy children; we praise Thy holy name:

For one hundred and fifty years of the life of the Church in this diocese;

For our preservation through war and peace, through earthquake, fire and flood, through the peril of the tempest and through the calm and sunny days;

For the multitudes who have gathered at the altars of Thy Church and there found peace of heart;

For brave and valiant spirits, bishops, priests, deacons, laymen and women and little children, who having been faithful, have been living stones in the building of Thy temple;

For the quiet devotion of many souls, lost to memory here, but whose names Thou knowest, who having borne the burden and the heat of the day, have gone to their rest;

For this fair State, so dear to us, which we would claim for Thee and add to Thy dominion;

For tasks that lie before us, for seas yet to be sailed, for fields to be sown, for harvests to be gathered, for prayers yet to be uttered, and for the joy of serving Thee;

For these and many other blessings

we praise Thy holy name; and most of all for the gift of Thy dear Son to be our Redeemer and our Friend, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

(Authorized for use in the Diocese of South Carolina during the year 1935 by the Rt. Rev. Albert S. Thomas, D. D.)

Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D. Bishop.

Dean Dobson-Peacock Bids Farewell.

On Sunday, May 26, the Very Rev. H. Dobson-Peacock preached his farewell sermon to a congregation which completely filled Christ Church, Norfolk, Va. After the close of the service, Rear Admiral Guy S. Burrage, retired, U. S. N., advanced and requested the congregation to join him in silent prayer for the welfare of the Dean and his family.

For the past few weeks various civic and church organizations have been giving farewell parties to the Dean. At a dinner given by the Norfolk Clericus, Bishop Thomson and others spoke of the courage and kindness which have marked his ministry. On another occasion, Bishop Collins Denny of the Methodist Church, Rabbi Mendoza of Olef Sholem Temple, Father Vincent Warren of the Roman Catholic Church, and the Rev. Dr. Roland C. Wagner of the Baptist Church, united in giving expressions of appreciation of the work the Dean has done in this community. The Mayor and City Council of Norfolk asked him to attend their regular meeting that he might receive their thanks for his influence in the life of the city.

Dean Peacock and his family sailed for England on June 1.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop

Diocesan Assembly of the Daughters of the King.

The thirteenth diocesan asesmbly of the Daughters of the King was held at Trinity Church, Staunton, May 23, 1935.

The Rev. R. A. Goodwin, of Millwood, Va., conducted the Quiet Hour, which opened the Assembly. He spoke on "The Risen Lord." He urged that as we come to rededicate our lives at this service we keep in mind, "The Master is with me." He said that one of the strong points about the work of the Daughters of the King is that it is personal work. We are banded together for the Master to touch individuals here and there. Each should ask herself, "Am I conscious of the presence of the risen Lord in my work in life?"

The celebration of the Holy Communion followed, with Bishop Jett, the celebrant, and Dr. Gravatt, aassistant.

Dr. Gravatt welcomed the guests to the Assembly, and response was made by Mrs. Louis Keen of Roanoke.

After luncheon, the Assembly was called to order by the president, Mrs. M. A. Carpenter, Roanoke. Reports were heard from St. Stephen's Chapter, Junior Daughters of Christ Church, Roanoke; the Sallie Campbell Jones Chapter, Roanoke; the Mary Atkinson Chapter, Staunton; the Alice Chalmers Chapter, Salem, and the Bishop's Chapter.

A very interesting and detailed report was made by the delegate to the Triennial Convention, Mrs. W. H. Bourne.

Mrs. Joseph S. Cochran of Staunton then addressed the Assembly, choosing as her subject, "The Practice of the Presence of God." In a very beautiful and simple manner, Mrs. Cochran pointed out the necessity for our finding the time to come near the Heavenly Father. She said that when to love the Master has become the supreme desire of our lives, and when to serve Him has become the true joy of our lives, we will then be followers of the Daughters of the King.

Following this, there was an election of officers for the next two years. For president, Mrs. Page Wilson, Staunton; vice-president, Mrs. Louis H. Keen, Roanoke; secretary, Mrs. G. C. Moore, Salem; treasurer, Mrs. Gilpin Willson, Jr., Staunton.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Stewart Broadcasts His Diocese.

Recalling and in sharp contrast with the days when Philander Chase spent days and weeks covering his broad diocese of Illinois, Bishop Stewart sat before a microphone in the studios of the National Broadcasting Company Sunday evening, May 26, and the centennial message, which he spoke was instantly broadcast to thousands of Church homes throughout the diocese and state.

It was an interesting commentary on the present as compared with a century ago, when the diocese was founded, Bishop Stewart pointed out: Philander Chase and his horse and buggy, or oxteam, or merely his faithful old horse, Cincinnatus, plodding about the broad wilderness of Illinois; and the present Bishop of Chicago, before an insignincant looking apparatus speaking, theoretically at least, to all of the 38,000 communicants of the diocese at one time!

The broadcast was sponsored by the Bishop's Pence and in his address Bishop Stewart paid special tribute to the Pence and its accomplishments during the year and a half it has been in operation. Approximately $42,000 has come in from it, the Bishop said, enabling him to save important fields of work.

"The Centennial Crusade is on in parishes big and small in city and suburbs, in town and village and countryside, and we are marching forward to victory," said Bishop Stewart of the Centenary Fund Campaign now in progress.

The Centenary Fund has passed the $300,000 mark on June 1. It is now planned to celebrate the results of the campaign on June 18, when Bishop Stewart celebrates the fifth anniversary of his consecration. The Presiding Bishop will be guest of honor at a dinner that night when results will be reported.

Archdeacon Ziegler Honored.

The Ven. Winfred H. Ziegler, archdeacon of the extra-metropolitan area of the diocese, received distinguished honors on June 4 at commencement exercises of Columbia University, New York. The medal for excellence from the trustees of Columbia was awarded him in the presence of a distinguished audience, and was conferred by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president.

The medal is voted to one graduate of Columbia each year for outstanding service in some field of endeavor. Archdeacon Ziegler's award came for his services to the Church, particularly in mission fields. He has served in Alaska, in the mission fields of Washington and New Mexico, and in the Diocese of Chicago.

While a student at Columbia, Archdeacon Ziegler was a leader in student affairs. He was business manager of the school paper, The Spectator, and for distinguished services in various student work, was awarded the gold Kings Crown.

Before his appointment as Archdeacon four years ago, Archdeacon Ziegler was for nearly ten years rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Elgin.

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop.

Entire Ministry Spent in City of Brotherly Love.

Retirement of the Rev. Arnold H. Hord, one of the widely known clergy of the Church in this diocese, after an active ministry covering a period of forty-four years, has just been announced. For the past eleven years Mr. Hord has been in charge of St. George's Church, Philadelphia, in the northeastern section of the city. His resignation took effect June 1, and is due to the condition of his health and upon the advice of his physician.

Mr. Hord's entire ministry has been spent in this city. For the past twenty-three years he has, in addition to other duties, served as Registrar of the Diocese, and from 1918 to 1923 he served as Secretary to the Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, when the latter was Bishop of Pennsylvania.

Mr Hord was born in Woodford, Ky., and was a member of the 1931 graduating class of the Philadelphia Divinity School. Always interested in history and recognized as an authority, Mr. Hord for many years has been a member of the Church Historical Society, the Society for the Advancement of Christianity in Pennsylvania, the Pennsylvania Historical Society and the Virginia Historical Society. Mr. Hord also was a member of the committee appointed by the 1906 Diocesan Convention, that recommended the present Seal and Coat of Arms of the Diocese of Pennsylvania.

Large Attendance at Closing Exercises.

The Cathedral School for Girls in Orlando, closed its thirty-fourth year here on May 24. Bishop Wing commended especially the fine spirit of hearty cooperation and loyalty, which he has noted throughout the year from faculty, students and alumni, gave high tribute to the efficient and devoted services of the principal, Mrs. Louis C. Massey, and expressed confidence that this school, founded by Bishop Gray in 1900, will move forward to increasing usefulness, its influence constantly witnessing for Christ and His Church.

Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Bishop

Open Air Service, Garden Section of Cathedral League of Maryland.

"O that I knew where I might find him," was the text chosen by the Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, rector of St. James' Church, New York, for his sermon at the open air service, held on the Cathedral Grounds under the auspices of the Garden Section of the Cathedral League of Maryland on Monday afternoon, May 27. His words were most fitting to the occasion and he stressed the fact that He can be found, even in this twentieth century, but on one condition and that is person submission. He closed with a lovely poem, which ended:

'You are nearer to God in a garden,
Than any place else on earth."

The choir numbered about fifty and the service was participated in by the Rt. Rev. Edward T. Helfenstein, D. D., Bishop of Maryland, the Rev. Arthur C. Powell, D. D., the Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, D. D., the Rev. Don Frank Fenn, D. D., the Rev. Philip J. Jensen, the Rev. Noble C. Powell, D. D., and the Rev. Harold M. Arrowsmith.

Immediately after the service, tea was served on the lawn and the visitors enjoyed not only the section planted by the Cathedral League, but the lovely garden of the Bishop and Mrs. Helfenstein.

Nearly Every Man Who Worked on the Church Has Since Become a Communicant.

"I like this church, because you don't have to shout. In my mother's church they are always shouting and I don't like it. I'm coming here." This was the declaration of a ten-year-old boy at St. Simon's Mission for the colored people in a district near Glendale, Ohio, four years ago, when the mission was started. Within two years his small brothers and sisters and their father and mother were attending St. Simon's, and after four years even the mother was confirmed. The mission grew from nothing to 230 communicants in four years. There are many stories of people won by its teaching and services, as well as by its keen constructive interest in social welfare. The district was well on the way to becoming a menace with its bad housing and lack of community resources. When the church was built, the workmen were asked to give three days' work free, each week, being paid for the other three. Nearly every man who worked on the church has since become a communicant. The Rev. Westwell Greenwood became priest in charge on Ascension Day.

Rt. Rev. F. G. Budlong, D. D., S. T. D.,

Convention—Anual Meeting.

The annual dinner of the Diocesan Men's Club was held at the Hotel Bond on May 21, during the session of the convention. The ballroom of the hotel was crowded and the attendance reached 324, the largest in the history of the diocese. The speakers were the Bishop of Massachusetts and Canon Waddy of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, who stressed various aspects of the success of the missionary work of the Church throughout the world.

The convention opened with the Bishop's annual address in the Cathedral in Hartford, May 21. Organized Missions were given same representation in the convention as organized parishes. Permission was given to begin the Convention of 1936 with a morning session. The subject discussed at both sessions on Wednesday was the proposition to have a diocesan archdeacon who should devote his whole time to the missionary work of the diocese. The proposition was finally referred back to the Executive Council for further consideration by a vote of 133 to 73. It was decided to appoint a committee of twenty-five to consider the establishment of a diocesan chest for the benefit of the philanthropic needs of the state. The standing committee elected consists of the Rev. Dr. Beardsley, Dean Colladay, Rev. Messrs. H. E. Kelly and L. Y. Graham, and the Rev. T. S. Cline.

Archdeaconry Meets.

The Archdeaconry of Litchfield met at Kent School on April 30. Plans were discussed for the visit of Prof. Miller of Paine Divinity School to the parishes of the county, and resolutions were passed relative to the death of Rev. Dr. G. E. Quaile, of Salisbury School. A proposition to have a diocesan missionary was discussed. Rev. H. F. Hine and Archdeacon Harris spoke of the work of the Church School, and Rev. J. W. Diggles on the Millenium. After an interested discussion and lunch with the boys in the Refectory, they adjourned to meet in October at Thomaston.

A Church School Conference was held at Christ Church, Watertown, on May 15, beginning at 4:30. Miss Mabel Lee Cooper lectured on "The Art of Story Telling" and "The Church School of the Future". Bishop Budlong spoke at supper.

Diocese Has a Book Tea.

The Church Periodical Club of the Diocese of Kentucky was entertained at a "Book Tea" on the afternoon of May 24 by the Diocesan Director, Mrs. Alex Galt Robinson, at her country estate, "Nitta Yuma", overlooking the Ohio River near Louisville. Admission was one book (second hand or new). These books were then sold to those attending the event. Books remaining unsold were sent to a needy library. The funds raised enriched the treasury of the C. P. C. general library fund. The first "Book Tea" proved such a success in raising funds as well as a means of publicity for the work of the C. P. C., that it is hoped the tea may be an annual event in the Diocese of Kentucky.

Annual Empire Day Service Held at Cathedral.

The Rt. Rev. Robert J. Renison, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Toronto, Ontario, and one of the outstanding preachers of the Dominion, was the preacher at both morning and evening services in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, on Sunday, May 26.

At the evening service there was held the annual Empire Day service of St. Paul's. Added significance was lent to the service by the presentation by L. C. Hughes-Hallett, British Consul, on behalf of King George, of the Badge of the Civil Division of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, to A. Rendle Stone, one of the Vice Consuls and an officer in the Essex Scottish Regiment. Mr. Hughes-Hallett had been instructed to deliver the Badge of the Order and the Grant of Dignity to Mr. Stone in an official and ceremonial manner, and requested the permission of the Very Rev. Kirk B. O'Ferrall, D. D., Dean of the Cathedral, to bestow this honor during the Empire Day service.

The Canadian Legions of Detroit and Windsor, the Sons and Daughters of St. George, the Essex Scottish Regiment, and the Daughters of the British Empire, attended the service in a body. Besides the British Consul and his staff, the American Consul in Windsor, Mr. Marshall Vance, and Col. Robert W. Lyon, commanding officer at Fort Wayne, and his staff, were in attendance.

Patriotic airs of Great Britain and the United States were sung, and Bishop Renison preached on the subject, "The Brittanic American Brotherhood."

First Sunrise Communion Service Appreciated by Young People.

A Sunrise Communion Service, which will probably develop into an annual institution, was held by the young people of five Detroit parishes, at 5:30 A. M. on May 26, in the Shell on Belle Isle. The idea was originated by the young people of Trinity Parish with the cooperation of the group from Christ Church. Invitations were sent to other young people's groups and three parishes participated: Messiah, St. Joseph's and SS. Philip's and Stephen's.

Belle Isle, the natural island park of the City of Detroit, boasts a Shell originally constructed for the holding of open-air symphony concerts, and city officials made it possible for the building to be used for the service, at which the celebrants were the Rev. Benedict Williams, rector of Trinity Church, and the Rev. J. Francis Sant, vicar of Christ Church.

Approximately 125 young people from the five participating churches attended the service.

The altar used was loaned by the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D. It is a portable Altar of the Anglican style, fitted with beautiful and appropriate hangings and curtains, and was designed by Bishop Page to demonstrate the fact that an attractive altar and hangings may be provided without the expenditure of large sums of money. The altar is constructed so that it may be taken apart and moved from place to place in an automobile.

Following the service, the young people breakfasted on Belle Isle. The clergy and young people who participated are enthusiastic in their apprecia tion of the first Sunrise Communion Service, and are already making plans for another.
